Sir Wm. P. Howland Dead

Almost the Last of the "Fathers Of Confederation,"

His Long Career Was Marked By a Splendid Record of Patriotic and Useful Acts--Born in the United States in 1811, He Adopted Canada As His Country and Worked Steadily For Her Welfare.

Toronto, Jan. 2.—Before the dawn of the first day of the New Year, in the early hours of its first morning, there passed from our midst to the great majority beyond one of Canada's most distinguished statesmen, Sir William Pearce Howland, in his 96th year, at his residence, 236 East Bloor street. He was almost the last remaining one of that grand phalanx of statesmen that Canada delights to honor, the fathers of Confederation, and he was the last of his own immediate family of his generation. His daughter, Mrs. Merritt, of Maryland, U.S., was with him during his last illness, and was by his bedside at his death. Death was due to general break-up of the system during the past few days.

SIR WILLIAM PEARCE HOWLAND.

Few public men of our times have closed their careers and lives with such a splendid record of patriotic and useful acts, continued almost to the end.

Sketch of His Career.

The late Hon. Sir William Pearce Howland was of English descent, his American progenitor being John Howland, a Quaker, who came to New England in 1620. Sir William was born in Paulings, N.Y., May 29, 1811. He was educated at Kinderhook Academy, and came to Canada in 1830. In 1840 he purchased from the late William Falls the Lambton Mills, on the Humber—the same being still in active operation—and soon afterwards engaged in the wholesale grocery trade in Toronto.

He entered Parliament as member for West York in 1857, and was a member of the House of Commons after the union of 1867, till July, 1868, when he became Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario. This office he vacated November, 1873. He had previously held office in successive administrations as Finance Minister, Receiver-General, Postmaster-General, Minister of Finance a second time, and Minister of Inland Revenue

"A Father of Confederation."

He was delegate to Washington respecting reciprocal trade, 1866, and to the London colonial conference, to complete terms of union of British North American provinces, thus becoming one of the "fathers of the Confederation." Sir William withdrew from business in 1894. He was for some years president of the Ontario Bank and also of the Board of Trade. He was president of the Gold and Silver Mines Developing Co., president of the London and Canada Loan Agency Co. and president of the Confederation Life Assurance Co.

In 1880 he headed a syndicate for the building of the Canada Pacific Railway. For his services on behalf of Confederation he was created a C.B. in 1867, and in 1879, as a further mark of royal approval, he was appointed a K.C.M.G. In politics he was a Liberal, and in religious belief a member of the Church of England.

He married first in 1843 Mrs. Webb, who died 1849; second, in 1866, Susannah Julia, widow, of Capt. Hunt of the military stores department. She died in 1886. In 1895 he married Elizabeth Mary Rattray, widow of Jas. Bethune, Q.C.

Rebates Abolished.

London, Jan. 2.—Under the agreement which became operative yesterday, and which was signed by all the chairmen, all private rebates, to shippers are abolished by all the railroads in the United Kingdom. Any company giving rebates to secure traffic is liable to a heavy fine.

Shoe Factory Burned.

Quebec, Jan. 2.—Yesterday morning the large factory known as the Dominion Shoe Co., owned by Joseph H. Lachance, was totally reduced to ashes, with all its contents. The factory was considered one of the best equipped in the Dominion.

Unconstitutional.

Louisville, Ky., Jan. 2.—Judge Walter Evans of the Federal Court, in an important decision Monday, declared the Employers' Liability Act unconstitutional.

Knighthood For Bryce.

London, Jan. 2.—It is declared that knighthood will probably be offered to James Bryce, the newly-appointed British Ambassador at Washington.

General Booth Coming.

Toronto, Jan. 2.—General Booth of the Salvation Army will spend a week in Toronto beginning March 9.

SEVEN FEET OF SNOW.

Western Russia Buried In the Beautiful—Railways Paralyzed.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 2.—The storm which passed over Great Britain at Christmas time reached Western Russia, where enormous falls of snow are reported, and railroad communications are paralyzed, many of the lines being entirely interrupted.

Despatches from Orsha and Borissov, say those towns are literally buried in drifts, and all business is suspended. Seven persons have perished in the snow, which has reached a seven-foot level at Mohilvandis, causing much suffering.

The snowstorm continues.

The Weather In Europe.

Berlin, Jan. 2.—Unusually cold weather continues to prevail throughout Germany, thermometers registering from 5 to 10 degrees below zero. Five persons have been frozen to death in the vicinity of Thorn, West Prussia, and other deaths from the cold are reported from various parts of the country.

MARVELOUS PERFORMANCE.

By the Human Running Machine, Thomas Longboat.

Toronto, Jan. 2.—Yesterday at Dufferin Park, between heats in the 2.30 and 2.17 pace, Thomas Longboat, the human running machine, ran an exhibition five miles to beat the Canadian record.

The going was very bad, he having to run in the middle of the track in the slush. It is estimated that in going the ten laps he must have gone about 5 1-2 miles. He had on only a light pair of running shoes, without spikes, and, with everything against him, he came within eight seconds of equaling the record. This is truly a marvelous performance, and establishes him more firmly as the champion long-distance runner to-day in the world.

The Canadian record is 27.17, and Longboat's time yesterday was 27.25.

TURKS PLAYED HORATIUS.

With Sword Bayonets Held Bridge Until Troops Arrested Them.

Constantinople, Jan. 2.—A panic occurred in the main thoroughfare here at noon yesterday as the result of the disorderly action of two soldiers of the Imperial Guard, who drew sword-bayonets and held the bridge connecting the populous sections of Galata and Stambul.

The police were unable to arrest the men, owing to the fact that they were members of the Imperial Guard. Intense excitement prevailed and traffic and business was suspended for over one hour.

Finally a battalion of troops was assembled under a general officer and the guardsmen were arrested upon an order from the palace.

O'BRIEN PROMISES EXPOSURES.

Says Financial Methods of Redmondites Would Be of Interest.

London, Jan. 2.—Speaking at Cork last night after the unopposed re-election of Daniel D. Sheehan as member of the House of Commons for Mid-Cork, William O'Brien (Nationalist) threatened revelations of the financial methods of the "Redmondites," which he said would be of greater national interest than anything that has occurred in Ireland since the Parnell commission.

Mr. Sheehan resigned his seat because, being a follower of Mr. O'Brien, the party stopped his allowance, but the "Redmondites" did not attempt to fight his re-election.

An ounce of contentment is more beneficial to a woman's complexion than a pound of cosmetics.

INTELLIGENCER JOB OFFICE FOR CHEAP AND ARTISTIC WORK.

Daily Intelligencer.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Well, it's been a fairly happy new year so far, eh?

A Western woman died playing the piano. It must have been a happy death—for the neighbors.

Plum pudding, says the Lancet, the great medical journal, is quite digestible. What does it kick up such a row for sometimes, then?

This great family journal is limping slightly to-day, as a result of the cruel buffeting it received at the hands of Ald. Sinclair at the public meeting last Monday night.

However, we are not limping quite so badly as Ald. Sinclair's logic, so with that comforting thought we cheer up, and take courage.

And, after all, what grievance has our friend of the Tam o' Shanter against The Intelligencer? Simply that, on other occasions, we have given him credit for the good work he has done for the city, but now we take the liberty of thinking that another gentleman has the right to claim our support for the Mayor's chair. Can Ald. Sinclair point to a single instance where this paper has abused him, or vilified him, or said a word which could detract from his reputation as an honorable man? Why, then, all those mock heroics which verge on clap-trap?

The Mayor's remarks on Monday night were practical and characteristic. There were no lofty flights of perfervid eloquence; no pathetic appeals for sympathy; no cheap advertising. In a nutshell His Worship said. Here's what has been done since I've been in the Council. I claim to have done my share towards its accomplishment. I'm not perfect, but I've done my best. If you're satisfied, elect me. If not, good luck to you and me and Belleville, anyhow."

WINDSOR TABLE SALT is the salt of satisfaction for all table and household uses. Absolutely pure, never cakes.

The remarks of the members of last year's Council were, for the most part, timely and to the point. There may have been mistakes of judgment on their part during the past year, but more than that, we firmly believe, no man can say.

The strong and sweeping remarks of Ald. Green about the Water and Gas service purchases will not, we believe, receive the endorsation of the majority of our citizens. To say that he would not have taken the gas plant for nothing may be a forcible way of putting it, but it does not speak very much for the business instincts of the Chairman of the Market. Had the city not taken over the gas works, it is no secret that several private parties were ready to do so on the same terms, and the said private parties are not men who are in the habit of throwing their money away. Far from it. We believe that, properly managed, both the city utilities should prove valuable to the city and increase in value as the years go on. Such utilities do in other places; why not in Belleville?

Very few public men in this city ever got such a reception as that accorded to Ald. Knox on Monday night.

There were cheers and barks
For the Chairman of Parks, who took it all with the greatest of sang froid, and made friends by his good sense and good nature.

An item in The Intelligencer, giving the late Mrs. Neilson credit for being the oldest Belleville-born citizen, appears not to have been correct. Mr. Horace Yeomans, now alive and hearty, carries off that palm; he was born in 1819, in a house on Pinnacle street where the Pearce elevator now stands. Mr. Allan T. Petrie stands next, having been born in 1820, in a house on south Front street opposite Tisdale's boat-house. Another old and respected resident is still living among us in the person of Mrs. Lyons, daughter of the late Benjamin Ketcheson, and mother of Mrs. Wm. Johnson, born in 1821, two doors south of the old Pinnacle St. Methodist Church. Topics wish them all the compliments of the season, with a sincere wish that they may be spared to enjoy many more New Years.

When the prizes are viewed on the 7th of Jan.
Our friend D. V. loudly will screech,
For he'll find that the one to which he aspired
Has been hung just out of his reach.

5000 majority for Emerson Coatsworth in the city of Toronto for Mayor, is the best answer that could be given to the attacks of the Grit papers in that city. It will be remembered that some days ago, Topics predicted this, as the result of the Globe's opposition.

Now, Belleville, do likewise for Sulman; 500 will do.

It will be seen, on reference to the list of those seeking aldermanic honors, that Wall Paper Robinson is again to the fore. Which is it to be, 3 or 5 cent paper, if elected? Thirteen aldermanic candidates in the field, which means that it will be an unlucky number for three of them.

New Year Weddings Numbered Four.

SAD TIDINGS REACHED ONE GROOM WHILE HIS WEDDING BELLS WERE RINGING.

CHADWICK—COOK.

At the residence of the bride's father, Mr. Wm. Cook, Victoria Avenue, at 11 o'clock on New Year's day, Mr. Robert B. Chadwick, of Edmonton, formerly Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. here, and Miss Bessie Cook were united in marriage. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. H. Draham, pastor of John St. Church, in the presence of a number of relatives and intimate friends. The couple were unattended. The bride was attired in a travelling suit of gray cloth. In the drawing-room, where the marriage took place, flowers and evergreens were the decorations. After the ceremony a wedding dinner was partaken of. Amongst the many presents the bride received was a handsome oak cabinet of cutlery from the congregation of John St. Church. The couple were very popular in the city, and The Intelligencer joins with their many friends in wishing them a happy and prosperous life. Mr. and Mrs. Chadwick left on the afternoon train for the west.

A sad incident of the occasion was the fact that, just prior to the ceremony, the groom received a telegram informing him of the very serious illness of his mother in Hamilton.

ORR—HAMILTON.

At 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon the residence of Mr. Wm. Hamilton, manager of the Merchants' Bank, was the scene of a pretty but quiet wedding. The groom was Mr. Edward R. Orr, G.T.R. despatcher here, and the bride Miss Marie St. Clair Hamilton, third daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton. The bridesmaid was Miss Gwendolin Hamilton, sister of the bride, and the groomsman Mr. B. F. Rapley, of Montreal. Rev. Rural Dean Beamish, rector of St. Thomas' Church, officiated. After the wedding supper the couple left for the east on a wedding trip. They will reside in this city. The presents received by the bride were numerous and beautiful.

WRIGHT — MAIDEN.

Mr. W. J. Wright, of Havelock, and Miss Leah F. Maiden, second daughter of Mr. John Maiden, Victoria Avenue, were married at 2.30 yesterday at the residence of the bride's father. The couple were unattended. Rev. Geo. Brown, of the Tabernacle, was the officiating minister. Only relatives were present at the ceremony. After a repast had been partaken of Mr. and Mrs. Wright left for their future home at Havelock.

DUNCAN—DOUGHAN.

At the Tabernacle parsonage on New Year's eve, Mr. Herbert Duncan, of this city, and Miss Clarissa B. Douglian, of Toronto, were united in marriage by the Rev. Geo. Brown. The couple were unattended. They will reside in this city.

STERILIZED BARBER SHOP.

A Famous Shop in the Carrollton Hotel, Baltimore, Maryland.

The barber shop in the Carrollton Hotel, Baltimore, sterilizes everything it uses in the shop. The sterilizing is done by heat. The towels, the razors, the strops, the soap, the combs and brushes are all sterilized before being used on a customer. Where there is no sterilization, have the barber use Newbro's Herpicide. It kills the dandruff germ, and it is an antiseptic for the scalp, and for the face after shaving. All leading barbers everywhere appreciate these potent facts about Herpicide and they use it. "Destroy the cause, you remove the effect." Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Mayoralty, 1907

To the Electors of the City of Belleville:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:

ponies for $2 or $3 a ton. Orders were immediately given to get rid of the ice plant on the best terms possible, lest the outlay thus created might weaken Boston's credit if the plant should be in operation much longer. If a customer could have been found for the municipal printing plant that, too, might have been unloaded at once. Some investigations into the cost of the operation of the plant indicated that outside parties could have done its work at least 25 per cent. below the prices actually charged and would certainly have done much better work. In short, Boston unloaded its "municipally owned" plants for whatever they would bring. No matter how heavy the loss, it plainly could not be as great as the awful financial drain caused by keeping up those departments. Boston has had its lesson. It is not likely ever to repeat the blunder until the costly experience of the last decade has been utterly forgotten."

Mayoralty, 1907

To the Electors of the City of Belleville;

At the earnest solicitation of a large number of ratepayers I have consented to offer myself as a candidate for the Mayoralty for 1907. During my term of office I have always endeavored to be courteous and obliging to all classes of citizens as well as to look after the affairs of our city in a proper business-like manner, and, if elected for 1907, I promise to continue the same course I have pursued in the past. There are a number of matters I have been working on that I wish to see completed, or in a fair way to completion, such as the sewerage system, the permanent paving of Front St., the Isolation Hospital, etc., and I respectfully request you to favor me with your vote and Influence.

TWO INDIANS HAD A LONG FIGHT FOR LIFE ON MONDAY NIGHT.

Struggling desperately for over 3 hours Monday night did two men, Joshua Barnhart and Fred Hill, battle for their lives in icy waters of the Bay of Quinte until finally rescued by George Bouter of Point Ann, about half a mile distant. Both men, who are Indians, residing at Shannonville, nine miles east of this city, spent Saturday here. They took to the ice at the outskirts of the city at 9 o'clock, and in the darkness lost the regular traveled road on the ice. When about two miles east of the city the horse, rig and occupants went through. They had lost the road and struck a rush bed. Both men struggled for over three hours, when their cries were finally heard from the shore, and the men were rescued, but nearly dead. The horse was drowned, and the cutter and harness lost. Barnhart had just recovered from a severe attack of pneumonia.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION.

MANAGER ELLIOTT, OF THE LOCAL BRANCH OF THE STANDARD BANK, REMEMBERED BY HIS BRADFORD FRIENDS.

"The following address, which speaks for itself, was presented, together with a handsome library table, to Mr. John Elliott, now manager of the local branch of the Standard Bank, when he removed from Bradford to Belleville:

To John Elliott, Esq., late Manager of the Bradford Branch of the Standard Bank of Canada:

We, your fellow-citizens and friends in the Village of Bradford and vicinity, take this opportunity of expressing the feelings of regret that are ever present in the human heart, when the ties of friendship and citizenship are about to be severed and to meet with you, it may be for the last time ere you entirely depart from our midst, to enter upon your new field of labor.

We look back and recall the time when as a mere lad, fresh from the Emerald Isle, you began your education at our Public school, and we recall further the occasion, when first, as a junior clerk, you entered the service of the Standard Bank and have since viewed with just pride your steady and rapid advancement in the ranks of that institution to no mean position as manager of its Bradford branch. We now heartily congratulate you on your well deserved advancement to the yet more important position of manager of its Belleville branch, and we there bespeak for you with your kindly address, courteous demeanor, unremitting energy and solicitous attention to the wants of your customers even greater success than has crowned your efforts here.

We recall also your energy and zeal in the interest of the different insurance companies you represented and can heartily join with those who, through your efforts, were prompted both as regards property and life to make provision against the devouring element on the one hand and on the other the want and privation ensuing the unlooked for removal of the bread-winner, in extending to you our sincere gratitude for your kind solicitation and friendly counsel, whereby we and they, who have since reaped the benefit, were induced to make and secure protection.

We appreciate you as a true and loyal citizen and esteemed friend, who was ever ready to extend a helping hand and kindly counsel, to the needy and distressed.

We regret, indeed, the loss to our village, not only of yourself, but also of your esteemed wife and noble family of boys and girls who have been such a credit to our schools and an example to their associates.

It is with these sentiments, kind friend, that we crave you to accept at our hand this address accompanied with this library table as a slight token and remembrance from the many true and loyal friends you have made in this village and surrounding country.

In conclusion, rest assured you have our best and heartiest wishes for every success in your new home, a quick and further advancement in the ranks of your institution, and that we are looking forward with pleasant anticipation to the time when in the mercies of Providence you will have justly earned the highest favor in the gift of the honored institution with which you are connected. May the Divine hand ever guide you and yours in the pathway of happiness and prosperity and while now we are, indeed, sorry to part, we yet look forward to some occasion when we shall be happy at meeting you again.

Bankers Win City League Match.

The first City League hockey match of the season took place last evening. The Bankers, who won the trophy last winter, and the Park Nine crossed sticks. There was a fair attendance of spectators and considerable interest was manifested in the game. Owing to the mildness of the weather the ice was soft and watery, which prevented good hockey being played. Considering everything, the game was a good one and the score was close, namely, 4 to 3 in favor of the Bankers. In the first half the Bankers scored two goals and the same number in the second half. The Park Nine found the net once in the first half and twice in the second. Some rather rough play was indulged in, but the referee, Mr. Sandy Burrows, was strict and sent many of the players off for a rest. The teams and their positions were as follows:

Bankers.		Park Nine.
	Goal.
Phillips		Boland
	Point.
W. Hamilton		Pepper
	Cover-point.
Taylor		Connolly
	Rover.
Allen		Connell

A Painful Accident.

Last Saturday a singular and painful accident happened to Mr. James Aylesworth, postmaster at Tamworth. A Miss Kearns was at the wicket and in the act of taking her mail from the postmaster, the cork popped out of a bottle she had in her hand, and the contents poured into Mr. Aylesworth's face. Fortunately his glasses partially protected his eyes, or he would have lost his sight. He was carried to the doctor's office, who found that he would not lose his eyesight, but the eyelids and his whole face are badly burned. On Wednesday he had not sufficiently recovered to be able to open his eyes. The bottle contained nitric acid and quicksilver, and Miss Kearns had just got it at the druggist's for her father, to be used as a liniment.

A Correction

To the Editor of The Intelligencer;

Sir, — I was surprised to see in your issue of the 27th inst. an incorrect statement in reference to J. W. Young who had been "unjustly accused" of skimming his milk.

The facts are that as Dairy Inspector, I found on the 23rd day of October, 1905, that J. W. Youngs' milk was deteriorated and I communicated the facts to him. The offence was admitted, and $20 compensation was paid by him therefor, which money was paid over to the President of Sidney Cheese and Butter Co., 1905.

HUGH HOWEY,
Dairy Inspector.

STRICTURE AND KIDNEY DISEASE CURED.

G. E. WRIGHT.

"I had stricture for eleven years. It finally brought on Bright's Disease of the Kidneys. I had an uncomfortable shooting pain in the groin and feeling as though something was in the urethra. My back was weak and I could scarcely stoop over. Urine was full of sediment. Had a desire to urinate frequently. Family doctors, so-called specialists, patent medicines, electric belts, all failed. I was discouraged. I had spent hundreds of dollars in vain. Finally I consulted Drs. Kennedy & Kergan as the last resort. I had heard a great deal about them and concluded from the fact that they had been established over 25 years that they understood their business. I am delighted with the results. In one week I felt better and in a few weeks was entirely cured. Have gained sixteen pounds in weight."

In the autobiography of Samuel Smiles there is a reference to its history which indicates that Puritans brought it to America. There is in use in Suffolk and among many east of England people to this day like methods of speech. Mr. Smiles says that the Suffolk people got it from Friesland, where it still exists, where the race is the same as it was nearly three hundred years ago and the habits are unchanged. The Friesians are proud of their relationship with the English, and rejoice that Friesian speech has a closer resemblance to the English than to the Germans.

NEW YEAR'S DAY.

Formal Transfer of Halifax Dockyard Made to the Canadian Government—Many Receptions.

Halifax, Jan. 2.—New Year's Day marked the passing of the last vestige of Imperial control at Halifax, the naval dockyard passing into the hands of the Canadian Government. Owing to the downpour of rain the historic ceremonies were robbed of their spectacular interest. The formal transfer of the dockyard occurred at noon, when the officers and crew of the cruiser Canada landed and saluted the blue ensign as it was hoisted to the masthead. Col. Gourdeau, Deputy Minister of Marine; Col. Anderson, chief engineer of the department, and Commander Spain arrived from Ottawa Monday and were present, formally taking over the yard on behalf of the department. There are still, however, a lot of details in connection with the transfer to be attended to.

At the formal taking over the British naval authorities were represented by Lieut. Bennett, who has been in charge of the yard since the withdrawal of the naval establishment.

The dockyard will be used by the Marine Department, but will still be available for British warships which visit the port.

The Governor-General's Levee.

Ottawa, Jan. 2.—Nearly 800 persons attended the Governor-General's levee between 12 and 1 o'clock yesterday. The Cabinet Ministers present were: Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Richard Cartwright, Messrs. Fisher, Fielding, Emmerson, Scott and Oliver. The Guards' Band performed a number of selections during the reception.

At Government House.

Toronto, Jan. 2.—His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor held his annual New Year's reception at government house yesterday.

The Day In Montreal.

Montreal, Jan. 2.—At the reception given yesterday by the officers of the 65th, Rodolphe Forget, M.P., extended an invitation to the entire regiment to spend a couple of days at his summer abode, St. Irene.

New Year's Day passed off quietly, although the receptions held by the new French consul-general and the Archbishop of Montreal were very largely attended. The officers of the different regiments received their friends at headquarters, while 8,000 children gathered in the different Protestant churches.

Reception At White House.

Washington, Jan. 2.—Each year the White House doors swing open to all the nation on Jan. 1, and a heartier welcome was never extended to visitors than that which greeted the thousands who called yesterday. New Year's cheer banished rank and class distinction. The president met Ambassadors and laborers with the same firm handshake.

Heading the diplomatic was Baron Mayor des Planches, Ambassador from Italy, the dean of the corps.

King Edward was represented by Esme Howard, charge d'affaires.

New Year's Day In Paris.

Paris, Jan. 2.—In spite of the steady downpour of rain the New Year reception held by President Fallieres brought out an attendance almost as large as usual. With the exception of a two-hour intermission for lunch, the ceremony lasted from 10 o'clock in the morning until dark.

Replying to an address by Count Bornielli, the ambassador from Italy and the dean of the diplomatic corps, President Fallieres said:

"The spirit of concord, respect for the rights of others, regard for public opinion and sentiments of human solidarity become daily of greater importance to the universal conscience. I trust that the year 1907 will be propitious to the development of the work of concord and peace, which is the ideal of France and the countries you represent."

The Archbishop of Paris, Cardinal Richard, and the titular bodies who always in the past have been among the President's guests at luncheon, were not invited yesterday.

Unknown Men Foiled In Attack on Vessel at Odessa.

London, Jan. 2.—A despatch to a news agency from Odessa, published yesterday, says that a band of unknown men made an attempt Monday night to blow up the Russian Steamship Co.'s Atlantic liner Grebory Morsh, which has just completed her first trip in the new Odessa-New York service.

A desperate struggle followed between the crew and the members of the band, during which several sailors were shot.

A lighted fuse of a bomb was extinguished before any damage was done.

Keats' House Purchased.

Rome, Jan. 2.—The Anglo-American executive committee for the Keats-Shelley memorial, yesterday purchased the house in the Piazza Spagna, where Keats died, paying $12,000 for it. King Edward, President Roosevelt and King Victor Emmanuel have given their hearty support.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, Jan. 1.—Receipts of live stock at the city market as reported by the railways were 25 cars, composed of 210 cattle, 149 hogs, 264 sheep, 8 calves and 16 horses. There was a good trade all round.

Exporters.

None were on sale.

Butchers.

George Rountree bought for the Harris Abattoir Co. 5 loads of butchers' cattle, ranging from $3.25 to $4.25 per cwt.

Veal Calves.

Prices ranged from $2.50 to $6.50 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Receipts were light and market strong. Export ewes sold at $4.75 to $5 per cwt.; rams and culls at $3 to $3.75 per cwt.; lambs at $5.50 to $6.50 per cwt.

Hogs.

The run was light. Mr. Harris reports prices 25c per cwt. higher at $6.40 for selects and $6.15 for lights and fats; sows at $4 to $5 per cwt.; stags, $2.50 to $3.50 per cwt. Prices all over the country seem to be about $6 per cwt. to the farmers.

BANK PROBERS.

Commissioner Angus Investigates the Dealings of Charles McGill With New York Stock Brokers.

New York, Jan. 2.—Commissioner George Angus of Toronto Monday began his examination here of the brokers who were thought to have had business dealings with Charles McGill, former manager of the now suspended Ontario Bank of Toronto, with a view to arriving at a solution of the mystery as to what became of the $1,150,000 which McGill is charged with having embezzled from the bank during his management.

The work of Commissioner Angus will be probably extended over the rest of this week.

The meetings began in the office of Governor Charles E. Hughes, and were continued in the offices of brokers who had been subpoenaed in the case. Nine brokerage houses are to be examined.

Monday Commissioner Angus saw W. H. Goadby & Co.'s representative, Charles T. Kilbourne, who said that his house had had no dealings whatever with McGill.

Arthur C. Vaughan, representing Cuyler, Morgan & Co., was one of those whose statement had not been prepared. It will be read to-day, when further hearings will be held. He said his firm had had dealings with McGill and received moneys to his credit. He was asked to what amount, and he said he could not say without reference to the complete statement of McGill's dealings, which his firm furnished to Marwick, Mitchell & Co., accountants of New York, acting for the Bank of Montreal. The total amount involved was $231,000. Mr. Vaughan said the money came to his firm through the Fourth National Bank, and it was placed to McGill's credit for a number of years. Stocks were purchased with the money. He could not say off-hand if all the money was lost or not. Certain moneys were paid to his order. "He drew drafts on us and we paid them; all moneys received by us were for the personal credit of Charles McGill."

Mr. Vaughan said McGill had been in the office, but not often. They acted oftenest by wire.

The witness said McGill never mentioned the Ontario Bank, and, for all the firm knew, he dealt with his own money exclusively.

"In the books of the Ontario Bank McGill sent $231,000 to this firm and McGill's account was closed by the Bank of Montreal paying Cuyler, Morgan & Co. $22,755.62, and taking 600 shares of Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway common stock." Mr. Vaughan secured the statement from the accountants and Mr. Corley arranged to get a copy of it.

Joseph Laidlaw of Laidlaw & Co., said that his house had an account with McGill, but that when it became active he enquired regarding McGill's connections, and when he learned that the latter was a bank manager he asked him to close the account, which he did.

W. M. Donald of Donald, Morgan & Co., said that the statement of that house had not been prepared.

Oliver Hart, representing Charles Head & Co., said that McGill had carried two accounts with his house, one in his own name and one in the name of the Ontario Bank. On Nov. 10, 1905, after the defalcations had been discovered. Mr. Hart said McGill's balance was $16,827, which was turned over to the Bank of Montreal, liquidator.

Don't Starve Your Bird.

It is a common mistake to think that pets can only be taught when hungry and to commence a bird's training by depriving it of breakfast, dinner or supper is a most unhappy beginning. In reality the feathered folk are just as apt and full of fun after a comfortable meal as before it, and to starve, scold or otherwise ill treat the little creature will usually render it too unhappy to learn quickly if at all. Birds are extremely nervous beings. They love a low, quiet voice and gentle movements—love to be talked to, coaxed and made much of. If the pet is a new one and seems specially excitable or timid, you will have to teach it first of all not to fear you. Any little games he is to learn must be acquired afterward.—Mary Dawson in St. Nicholas.

A Singer's Lungs.

The singer at the end of the practice aria panted heavily.

"I sang 196 notes that time," he said, "without once taking breath."

"Indeed. That must be a record."

"No. The record is held by Courtice Pounds. Pounds sang 316 notes without respiration in 1898. The record previous to that was held by Farinelli, with 300 notes. Norman Salmond has sung 287 notes in this way.

"It is wonderful what lungs trained singers have. The average man could hardly sing fifty notes without breathing, whereas to the singer 200 would be nothing."

Nome Means Home.

It is said that the name of Nome was the result of an error made by some Englishman in writing a letter. He evidently intended to write the word "home," but the makers of the maps read it Nome, and thus the name Nome belongs to history and the great district of Alaska. Some authorities claim that the word Nome is a corruption of the Indian phrase or word Knoma, meaning something like "I know it."

Happiness.

If you cannot be happy in one way, be in another, and this facility of disposition wants but little aid from philosophy, for health and good humor are almost the whole affair. Many run about after felicity, like an absent-minded man hunting for his hat while it is in his hand or on his head.

Piety often seems like pretense to those who have not felt the impulse of

The Manager Of the B. & A.

By VAUGHAN KESTER

His mind showed at every turn of the conversation. He appeared to hunger after hard facts, and the harder these facts were the better he liked them. But he offended in more glaring ways. He was too intense, and his speech too careful and precise, as if he were uncertain as to his grammar, as, indeed, he was.

Poor Oakley was vaguely aware that he was not getting on, and the strain told. It slowly dawned upon him that he was not her sort, that where he was concerned she was quite alien, quite foreign, with interests he could not comprehend, but which gave him a rankling sense of inferiority.

He had been moderately well satisfied with himself, as, indeed, he had good reason to be, but her manner was calculated to rob him of undue pride. He was not accustomed to being treated with mixed indifference and patronage. He asked himself resentfully how it happened that he had never before met such a girl. She fascinated him. The charm of her presence seemed to suddenly create and satisfy a love for the beautiful. With generous enthusiasm he set to work to be entertaining. Then a realization of the awful mental poverty in which he dwelt burst upon him for the first time. He longed for some light and graceful talent with which to bridge the wide gaps between the stubborn heights of his professional erudition.

He was profoundly versed on rates, grades, ballast, motive power and rolling stock, but this solid information was of no avail. He could on occasion talk to a swearing section boss with a grievance and a brogue in a way to make that man his friend for life. He also possessed the happy gift of inspiring his subordinates with a zealous sense of duty, but his social responsibilities numbed his faculties and left him a bankrupt for words.

The others gave him no assistance. Mrs. Emory, smiling and good humored, but silent, bent above her sewing. She was not an acute person, and the situation was lost upon her, while the doctor took only the most casual part in the conversation.

Oakley was wondering how he could make his escape when the doorbell rang. The doctor slipped from the parlor. When he returned he was not alone. He was preceded by a dark young man of one or two and thirty. This was Griffith Ryder, the owner of the Antioch Herald.

"My dear," said he, "Mr. Ryder." Ryder shook hands with the two ladies and nodded carelessly to Oakley. Then, with an easy, careless compliment, he lounged down in the chair at Miss Emory's side.

Constance had turned from the strenuous Oakley to the newcomer with a sense of unmistakable relief. Her mother, too, brightened visibly. She did not entirely approve of Ryder, but he was always entertaining in a lazy, indifferent fashion of his own.

"I see, Griff," the doctor said, "that you are going to support Kenyon. I declare it shakes my confidence in you," and he drew forward his chair. Like most Americans, the physician was something of a politician, and, as is also true of most Americans not professionally concerned in the hunt for office, this interest fluctuated between the two extremes of party enthusiasm before and nonpartisan disgust after elections.

Ryder smiled faintly. "Yes, we know just how much of a rascal Kenyon is, and we know nothing at all about the other fellow except that he wants the nomination, which is a bad sign. Suppose he should turn out a greater scamp! Really it's too much of a risk," he drawled, with an affectation of contempt.

"Your politics always were a shock to your friends, but this serves to explain them," remarked the doctor, with latent combativeness. But Ryder was not to be beguiled into argument. He turned again to Miss Emory.

"Your father is not a practical politician or he would realize that it is only common thrift to send Kenyon back, for I take it he has served his country not without profit to himself. Besides, he is clamorous and persistent, and there seems no other way to dispose of him. It's either that or the penitentiary."

Constance laughed softly. "And so you think he can afford to be honest now? What shocking ethics!"

"That is my theory. Anyhow I don't see why your father should wish me to forego the mild excitement of assisting to re-elect my more or less disreputable friend. Antioch has had very little to offer one until you came," he added, with gentle deference. Miss Emory accepted the compliment with the utmost composure. Once she had been rather flattered by his attentions, but four years make a great difference. Either he had lost in cleverness or she had gained in knowledge.

He was a very tired young man. At one time he had possessed some expectations and numerous pretensions. The expectation had faded out of his life, but the pretense remained in the absence of any vital achievement. He was college bred and had gone in for literature. From literature he had drifted into journalism and had ended in Antioch as proprietor of the local paper, which he contrived to edit with a lively irresponsibility that won him few friends, though it did gain him some small reputation as a humorist.

His original idea had been that the management of a country weekly would afford him opportunity for the serious work which he believed he could do, but he had not done this serious work and was not likely to do it. He derived a fair income from the Herald, and he allowed his ambitions to sink into abeyance in spite of his cherished conviction that he was cut out for bigger.

Oakley had known Ryder only since the occasion of the doctor's dinner, and felt that he could never be more than an acquired taste, if at all.

The editor took the floor, figuratively speaking, for Miss Emory's presence made the effort seem worth his while. He promptly relieved Oakley of the necessity to do more than listen, an act of charity for which the latter was hardly as grateful as he should have been. He was no fool, but there were wide realms of enlightenment where he was an absolute stranger, so when Constance and Ryder came to talk of books and music, as they did finally, his only refuge was in silence and he went into a sort of intellectual quarantine. His reading had been strictly limited to scientific works and to the half dozen trade and technical journals to which he subscribed and from which he drew the larger part of his mental sustenance. As for music, he was familiar with the airs from the latest popular operas, but the masterpieces were utterly unknown, except such as had been brought to his notice by having sleeping cars named in their honor, a practice he considered very complimentary and possessing value as a strong commercial indorsement.

He felt more and more lonely and aloof as the evening wore on, and it was a relief when the doctor took him into the library to examine specimens of iron ore he had picked up west of Antioch, where there were undeveloped mineral lands for which he was trying to secure capital. This was a matter Oakley was interested in, since it might mean business for the road. He promptly forgot about Miss Emory and the objectionable Ryder and in ten minutes gave the doctor a better comprehension of the mode of procedure necessary to success than that gentleman had been able to learn in ten years of unfruitful attempting. He also supplied him with a few definite facts and figures in lieu of the multitude of glittering generalities on which he had been pinning his faith as a means of getting money into the scheme.

When at last they returned to the parlor they found another caller had arrived during their absence, a small, shabbily dressed man, with a high, bald head and weak, nearsighted eyes. It was Turner Joyce. Oakley knew him just as he was beginning to know every other man, woman and child in the town.

Joyce rose hastily, or, rather, stumbled to his feet as the doctor and Oakley entered the room.

"I told you I was coming up, doctor," he said apologetically. "Miss Constance has been very kind. She has been telling me of the galleries and studios. What a glorious experience!"

"I am glad you've dropped in."

A cynical smile parted Ryder's thin lips.

"Mr. Joyce feels the isolation of his art here."

The little man blinked doubtfully at the speaker and then said, with a gentle, deprecatory gesture, "I don't call it art."

"You are far too modest. I have heard my foreman speak in the most complimentary terms of the portrait you did of his wife. He was especially pleased with the frame. You must know, Miss Constance, that Mr. Joyce usually furnishes the frames, and his pictures go home ready to the wire to hang on the wall."

Mr. Joyce continued to blink doubtfully at Ryder. He scarcely knew how to take the allusion to the frames. It was a sore point with him.

Constance turned with a displeased air from Ryder to the little artist. There was a faint, wistful smile on her lips. He was a rather pathetic figure to her, and she could not understand how Ryder dared or had the heart to make fun.

"I shall enjoy seeing all that you have done, Mr. Joyce, and of course I wish to see Ruth. Why didn't she come with you tonight?"

"Her cousin, Lou Bentick's wife, is dead, and she has been over at his house all day. She was quite worn out, but she sent you her love."

Ryder glanced again at Miss Emory and said, with hard cynicism: "The notice will appear in Saturday's Herald, with a tribute from her pastor. I never refuse his verse. It invariably contains some scathing comment on the uncertainty of the Baptist faith as a means of salvation."

But this was wasted on Joyce. Ryder rose, with a sigh.

"Well, we toilers must think of the morrow."

Oakley accepted this as a sign that it was time to go. Joyce, too, stumbled across the room to the door, and the three men took their leave together. As they stood on the steps the doctor said cordially, "I hope you will both come again soon, and you, too, Turner," he added kindly.

Ryder moved off quickly with Oakley. Joyce would have dropped behind, but the latter made room for him at his side. No one spoke until Ryder, halting on a street corner, said, "Sorry, but it's out of my way to go any farther unless you'll play a game of billiards with me at the hotel, Oakley."

"Thanks," curtly. "I don't play billiards."

"No? Well, it is a waste of time, I suppose. Good night!" And he turned down the side street, whispering softly.

"A very extraordinary young man," murmured Joyce, rubbing the tip of his nose meditatively with a painty forefinger. "And with quite an extraordinary opinion of himself."

A sudden feeling of friendliness prompted Oakley to tuck his hand through the little artist's arm. "How is Bentick bearing the loss of his wife?" he asked. "You said she was your cousin."

"No, not mine; my wife's. Poor fellow! He feels it keenly. They had not been married long, you know."

CHAPTER III.

OAKLEY took the satchel from General Cornish's hand as the latter stepped from his private car.

"You got my note, I see," he said. "I think I'll go to the hotel for the rest of the night."

He glanced back over his shoulder as he turned with Dan toward the bus which was waiting for them at the end of the platform.

"I guess no one else got off here. It's not much of a railroad center."

"No," agreed Oakley impartially; "there are towns where the traffic is heavier."

Arrived at the hotel, Oakley led the way upstairs to the general's room. It adjoined his own. Cornish paused on the threshold until he had lighted the gas.

"Light the other burner, will you?" he requested. "There, thanks, that's better."

He was a portly man of sixty, with a large head and heavy face. His father had been a Vermont farmer, a man of position and means according to the easy standard of his times. When the civil war broke out young Cornish, who was just commencing the practice of the law, had enlisted as a private in one of the first regiments raised by his state. Prior to this he had overflowed with fervid oratory and had tried hard to look like Daniel Webster, but a skirmish or two opened his eyes to the fact that the waging of war was a sober business and the polishing off of his sentences not nearly as important as the polishing off of the enemy. He was still willing to die for the Union if there was need of it, but while his life was spared it was well to get on. The numerical importance of number one was a belief too firmly implanted in his nature to be overthrown by any patriotic aberration.

His own merits, which he was among the first to recognize, and the solid backing his father was able to give won him promotion. He had risen to the command of a regiment, and when the war ended was brevetted a brigadier general of volunteers along with a score of other anxious warriors who wished to carry the title of general back into civil life, for he was an amiable sort of a Shylock, who seldom overlooked his pound of flesh, and he usually got all and a little more than was coming to him.

After the war he married and went west, where he resumed the practice of his profession, but he soon abandoned it for a commercial career. It was not long until he was ranked as one of the rich men of his state. Then he turned his attention to politics. He was twice elected to congress and served one term as governor. One of his daughters had married an Italian prince, a meek, prosaic little creature exactly five feet three inches tall. Another was engaged to an English earl, whose debts were a remarkable achievement for so young a man. His wife now divided her time between Paris and London. She didn't think much of New York, which had thought even less of her. He managed to see her once or twice a year. Any oftener would have been superfluous.

There were moments, however, when he felt his life to be wholly unsatisfactory. He derived very little pleasure from all the luxury that had accumulated about him and which he accepted with a curious placid indifference. He would have liked the affection of his children, to have had them at home, and there was a remote period in his past when his wife had inspired him with a sentiment at which he could only wonder. He held it against her that she had not understood.

He lurched down solidly into the chair Oakley placed for him. "I hope you are comfortable here," he said kindly.

"Oh, yes." He still stood.

"Sit down," said Cornish. "I don't, as a rule, believe in staying up after midnight to talk business, but I must start east tomorrow."

He slipped out of his chair and began to pace the floor, with his hands thrust deep in his trousers pockets. "I want to talk over the situation here. I don't see that the road is ever going to make a dollar. I've an opportunity to sell it to the M. and W. Of course this is extremely confidential. It must not go any farther. I am told they will discontinue it beyond this point, and of course they will either move the shops away or close them." He paused in his rapid walk. "It's too bad it never paid. It was the first thing I did when I came west. I thought it a pretty big thing then. I have always hoped it would justify my judgment, and it promised to for awhile until the lumber interests played out. Now, what do you advise, Oakley? I want to get your ideas. You understand if I sell I won't lose much. The price offered will just about meet the mortgage I hold, but I guess the stockholders will come out at the little end of the horn."

Oakley understood exactly what was ahead of the stockholders if the road changed hands. Perhaps his face showed that he was thinking of this, for the general observed charitably:

"It's unfortunate, but you can't mix sentiment in a transaction of this sort. I'd like to see them all get their money back, and more too."

His mental attitude toward the world was one of generous liberality, but he had such excellent control over his impulses that, while he always seemed about to embark in some large philanthropy, he had never been known to take even the first step in that direction. In short, he was hard and unemotional, but with a deceptive, unswerving kindliness of manner which, while it had probably never involved a dollar of his riches, had at divers times cost the unwary and the indiscreet much money.

"I am sure the road could be put on a paying basis," said Oakley. "Certain quite possible economies would do that. Of course we can't create business; there is just so much of it, and we get it all as it is. But the shops might be made very profitable. I have secured a good deal of work for them and I shall secure more. I had intended to propose a number of reforms, but if you are going to sell, why, there's no use of going into the matter"— He paused.

The general meditated in silence for a moment.

"I'd hate to sacrifice my interests if I thought you could even make the road pay expenses. Now, just what do you intend to do?"

"I'll get my order book and show you what's been done for the shops," said Oakley, rising with alacrity. "I have figured out the changes, too, and you can see at a glance just what I propose doing."

The road and the shops employed some 500 men, most of whom had their homes in Antioch. Oakley knew that if the property was sold it would practically wipe the town out of existence. The situation was full of interest for him. If Cornish approved and told him to go ahead with his reforms, it would be an opportunity such as he had never known.

He went into his own room, which opened off Cornish's, and got his order book and table of figures, which he had carried up from the office that afternoon.

He had taken a great deal of pains with his figures, and they seemed to satisfy Cornish that the road if properly managed was not such a hopeless proposition after all. Something might be done with it.

Oakley rose in his good esteem. He had liked him, and he was justifying his good opinion. He beamed benevolently on the young man and thawed out of his habitual reserve into a genial, ponderous frankness.

"You have done well," he said, glancing through the order book, with evident satisfaction.

"Of course," explained Oakley, "I am going to make a cut in wages this spring if you agree to it, but I haven't the figures for this yet." The general nodded. He approved of cuts on principle.

"That's always a wise move," he said. "Will they stand it?"

"They'll have to." And Oakley laughed rather nervously. He appreciated that his reforms were likely to make him very unpopular in Antioch. "They shouldn't object. If the road changes hands it will kill their town."

"I suppose so," agreed Cornish indifferently.

"And half a loaf is lots better than no bread," added Oakley. Again the general nodded his approval.

"What sort of shape is the shop in?" he asked after a moment's silence.

"Very good on the whole."

"I am glad to hear you say so. I spent over a hundred thousand dollars on the plant originally."

"Of course the equipment can hardly be called modern, but it will do for the sort of work for which I am bidding," Oakley explained.

"Well, it will be an interesting problem for a young man, Oakley. If you pull the property up it will be greatly to your credit. I was going to offer you another position, but we will let that go over for the present. I am very much pleased, though, with all you have done; very much pleased indeed! I go abroad in about two weeks. My youngest daughter is to be married in London to the Earl of Minchester." The title rolled glibly from the great man's lips. "So you'll have the fight, if it is a fight, all to yourself. I'll see that Holloway does what you say. He's the only one you'll have to look to in my absence, but you won't be able to count on him for anything. He gets limp in a crisis. Just don't make the mistake of asking his advice."

"I'd rather have no advice," interrupted Dan hastily, "unless it's yours," he added.

"I'll see that you are not bothered. You are the sort of fellow who will do better with a free hand, and that is what I intend you shall have."

"Thank you," said Oakley, his heart warming with the other's praise.

"I shall be back in three months, and then if your schemes have worked out at all as we expect, why, we can consider putting the property in better shape." (A part of Oakley's plan.) "As you say, it's gone down so there won't be much but the right of way presently."

"You have done well," he said.

"I hope that eventually there'll be profits," said Oakley, whose mind was beginning to reach out into the future.

"I guess the stockholders will drop dead if we ever earn a dividend. That's the last thing they are looking forward to," remarked Cornish dryly. "Will you leave a 6:30 call at the office for me? I forgot, and I must take the first train. Good night."

CHAPTER IV.

THE next morning Oakley saw General Cornish off on the 7:15 train, and then went back to his hotel for breakfast. Afterward, on his way to the office, he mailed a check to Ezra Hart for his father. The money was intended to meet his expenses in coming west.

He was very busy all that day making out his new schedules and in figuring the cuts and just what they would amount to. He approached his task with a certain reluctance, for it was as unpleasant to him personally as it was necessary to the future of the road, and he knew that no halfway measure would suffice. He must cut, as a surgeon cuts, to save. By lopping away a man here and there, giving his work to some other man or dividing it up among two or three men, he managed to peel off $2,000 on the year. He counted that a very fair day's work.

He would start his reform with no particular aggressiveness. He would retire the men he intended to dismiss from the road one at a time. He hoped they would take the hint and hunt other positions. At any rate, they could not get back until he was ready to take them back, as Cornish had assured him he would not be interfered with. He concluded not to hand the notices and orders to Miss Walton, the typewriter, to copy. She might let drop some word that would give his victims an inkling of what was in store for them. He knew there were unpleasant scenes ahead of him, but there was no need to anticipate. When at last his figures for the cuts were complete he would have been grateful for some one with whom to discuss the situation. All at once his responsibilities seemed rather heavier than he had bargained for.

There were only two men in the office besides himself—Philip Kerr, the treasurer, and Byron Holt, his assistant. They were both busy with the payroll, as it was the 6th of the month, and they commenced to pay off in the shops on the 10th.

He had little or no use for Kerr, who still showed where he dared in small things his displeasure that an outsider had been appointed manager of the road. He had counted on the place for himself for a number of years, but a succession of managers had come and gone apparently without its ever having occurred to General Cornish that an excellent executive was literally spoiling in the big, bare general offices of the line.

This singular indifference on the part of Cornish to his real interests had soured a disposition that at its best had more of acid in it than anything else. As there was no way in which he could make his resentment known to the general, even if he had deemed such a course expedient, he took it out of Oakley and kept his feeling for him on ice. Meanwhile he bided his time, hoping for Oakley's downfall and his own eventful recognition.

Faults in Diet

If a horse could not pull a certain load up a hill, a second horse would be necessary, would it not? Extra help is needed for an extra task. Same in the human economy.

Just at this season the digestive system of most people is needing a little "extra help" through faults in diet. Xmas and New Year's fare throws extra work on the stomach, intestines and liver. Hence those feelings of nausea, pains in the chest, fluttering feelings around the heart, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, and that general "below par" feeling. Bileans give the "extra help" A few doses will set you right and restore both vigor and relish for food.

Bileans are altogether different to other remedies. They help the organs to fulfil their functions—do not overdrive. They play the part of the "extra horse," —not the brutal driver! Proof of their power? Note the following case and write for descriptive booklet:

CHRONIC BILIOUSNESS CURED.

Mrs. J. Bock, 19 Cornwall St., Toronto, Ont., says:—"I was troubled for nearly two years with biliousness, gas around the heart and such a smothering sensation as if I were going to choke. This smothering sensation came on suddenly, sometimes in a morning and then again not until the evening. While having a sudden attack of biliousness not long ago, I was advised to try Bileans. I did so, and experienced the utmost relief, I then took a short course of this remedy, and I can say Bileans are absolutely unequalled. Before taking Bileans I had tried one medicine after another, but nothing seemed to relieve me. For biliousness or gas around the heart there is nothing to equal Bileans. You are at liberty to use this statement for publication if it will benefit other sufferers."

REMEMBER THAT

Bileans are purely herbal; do not create the pill taking habit. Cure constipation without causing after constipation and are recommended and used by leading family doctors.

For instance: The Reader, the Cosmopolitan, the Home Magazine and Harper's Bazar, if bought each month at the news-stands would cost $7.20 per year. If subscribed to separately they cost $6.00 a year. We have arranged a club of these magazines whereby we can furnish all four for $3.00 or just one-half of the subscription price.

FREE.—Our beautiful 36-page magazine catalogue will be sent in response to a postal card request. This tells how you may secure absolutely free a year's subscription to The Home Magazine and a year's subscription to the Reader Magazine.

IN THE WHEELHOUSE.

It Is There That All the Forces of a Great Vessel Are Directed.

On entering the wheelhouse of an ocean liner a landsman is likely to be awed by the group of instruments and masses of complicated machinery on every hand. Your eye will first be caught by the wheel or wheels, for often there are two or more of them, one directly in line with the other. The first of these is an insignificant looking affair perhaps a foot or so in diameter, which seems out of all proportion to the work it must accomplish. Directly in front of it stands the ship's compass, while back of it are massed many complicated wheels and levers which transform the slightest motion of the wheel into the great force which guides the ship.

All the great steamers are steered nowadays by the aid of steam or electricity. In the old days half a dozen men at times would struggle with the wheel in high seas, and sailors have been killed by the rapid revolving of the projecting spoke handles. The modern steering gear makes it possible to guide these great ships with the slightest pressure. The rudder, weighing many tons, is perhaps 500 feet astern, yet with a touch of the polished wheel the great 700 foot ship will swing from side to side with almost the delicacy of a compass needle. The wheel that the steersman operates merely governs the steering engine, which, in turn, moves the great rudder.

The most astonishing thing about the bridge is to find the wheelhouse with all its curtains tightly drawn, as often happens, and the man at the helm steering the boat without seeing ahead at all. At night or even by day if the light of the binnacle is confusing the wheelhouse is often completely shut in. The man at the wheel, it is explained, does not need to look ahead. The lookout high up in the "crow's nest" and the officer on watch on the bridge will keep him informed if any object is sighted. The duty of the man at the wheel is to keep the ship on her course. Throughout his watch of four hours he must keep his eyes on the compass and nowhere else.

On one side of the wheelhouse are posted the sailing directions, which give the wheelsman explicit orders. The course to be followed for the day is placed in a neat little rack called the compass control. It suggests the rack in church at the side of the pulpit which announces the number of the hymns and psalms for the day's service. The compass control will announce, for instance, N. 7, S. W. or some such formula. The wheelsman glances at this as he takes his watch at the wheel and holds the great ship exactly on this course until he is relieved.—Francis Arnold Collins in St. Nicholas.

IDEAS OF HEAVEN.

The Romans believed in the Elysian fields of the Greeks.

The Haitians locate heaven in one of the beautiful valleys of their island.

The Assyrians believe heaven is in the bowels of the earth or far away in the east.

Some natives of the south Pacific think heaven a place where they will be white.

The Greek belief, according to Socrates, was that the pious went to heaven, like prisoners set free, to dwell in unclouded peace.

According to the ancient astronomers, heaven was seven or eight solid spheres, with a planet for the center of each. Some even ran the number up to seventy.

The Egyptians thought heaven to be on many islands at the foot of the Milky way. Those worthy spent the time harvesting beans and in feasting, singing and playing.

Etiquette.

"Etiquette" is a French word which originally meant a label indicating the price or quality, the English "ticket," and in old French was usually specialized to mean a soldier's billet. The phrase "that's the ticket" shows the change to the present meaning of manners according to code. Burke solemnly explained that "etiquette had its original application to those ceremonies and formal observances practiced at courts. The term came afterward to signify certain formal methods used in the transactions between sovereign states."

A Widow's Double Grief.

A clergyman who recently called upon a young widow to condole with her upon the loss of her husband placed considerable emphasis upon the proposition that the separation was merely temporal and painted in vivid colors the happiness of friends reunited after death. When he stopped for breath the sorrowing one heaved a deep sigh and quietly remarked, "Well, I suppose his first wife has got him again then."

Proved It.

Bjones—Why the grouch? Psmith—My wife called me a fool. Bjones—Cheer up. It may not be true. Psmith—But it is. She proved it. Went and dug up a bunch of my old love letters and read 'em to me!

Letters.

Answer a letter the day it is received and you will experience a sense of duty well done. Delay it, and after too long a time has elapsed shame will put a stop to its acknowledgment altogether.

While Europe has 107 people to the square mile, Asia has but fifty-eight, Africa eleven and Australia one and a half.

ALLIANCE FORMED.

Mr. J. S. McKeown, One Of Our Leading Druggists,

MAKES ARRANGEMENTS WITH A LARGE BOSTON HOUSE.

Their Object is to Produce a Valuable Remedy, in a Form That can be Easily Taken, but Heretofore Impractical—From Now On this New Preparation of an Old Medicine Will Become an Indispensable Auxiliary to the Medical Profession.

Enterprise is one of the virtues of Druggist J. S. McKeown. Often has has he demonstrated his ability to not only keep pace with, but to keep ahead of the times. Many times have the people of our city had occasion to be proud of the way this prominent druggist has shown himself to be among the foremost in the country in adopting the latest scientific and chemical discoveries.

Even in this age of progress, the advance in pharmaceutical development has been at times almost of a sensational nature. The druggist or chemist who has not had push and enterprise has soon become a back number, and can be found, to-day running a small store, the appearance of which, devoid of any signs of modernism, is familiar to all.

It has always been Mr. McKeown's ambition to connect himself with some discovery that would not only be a source of profit to himself, but the means of accomplishing good to others. With this end in view it is not strange that Mr. McKeown, in his profession, should have been led to think seriously concerning the use of cod liver oil. He, like hundreds of other druggists, has sold vast quantities of this valuable but nauseating remedy.

Into his ear has been poured many a tale of woe, by sufferers who would beg him to advise some way they might take the medicine prescribed for them, and many attempts has he made in the past to enable a patient to take this remedy, knowing well that could they succeed in doing so, he would be instrumental in restoring health—and in many cases even in saving life.

He was obliged to give up attaining the desired end, of disguising the taste of this obnoxious, greasy medicine, as many others have had to before him. He found it was not a very difficult matter to fool the palate, but he could not fool the patient's stomach. Even when the oil had been made tasteless by being administered in capsules or other forms, the stomach would rebel and promptly eject it.

Right at this stage of the game Mr. McKeown learned of an important discovery made by two eminent French chemists, whose secret has been bought by a large Boston house. With characteristic enterprise Mr. McKeown connected himself with them, and succeeded in making arrangements with them to directly handle this new discovery.

We now have at last, right here in town, a preparation that contains all the curative principles which have given the cod's liver its great reputation as a remedy for wasting diseases. Now these sought-for principles are in a concentrated form, free from the nauseating, greasy matter that characterizes cod liver oil as we have known it. This extract is put up in a most palatable and delicious form, so that it can be taken by any one with the most delicate and sensitive stomach. It is positively free from any objectionable odor, taste, or any of the other disagreeable features that have always attended cod liver oil.

Mr. McKeown will gladly tell any one who will call on him all about the discovery. He is so pleased in regard to the matter that he wants every one to know about it. Above all he wishes it to be positively understood that this new preparation is not a patent medicine. He will tell you everything in it and explain to you how scholars have devoted their lives and capitalists their money, in procuring this product to which has been given the name of Vinol, the cod liver preparation without oil.

We think right here it would be a good plan for any one who is so unfortunate as to feel it necessary for their health to take cod liver oil, to hear what Mr. McKeown has to say on the subject. What he will tell you will cost nothing. What you will learn you can safely assert will prove of the greatest value to you.

Did Not Apply.

In our issue of Dec. 23, we unwittingly said that Mr. Morgan, of Deseronto, was an applicant for the position of Inspector of P. S. for this city. This we now learn was not the case, and in justice to Mr. Morgan we make the correction. When asked by the Board, if he would accept the position, he at first demurred, but finally agreed to do so, temporarily, if the consent of Dr. Oronhyatekha, was obtained. Mr. Morgan is at present Superintendent of the Foresters' Orphans' Home, Deseronto. He was the Inspector of P. S. for the County of Simcoe for 31 years, previous to taking the present position at Deseronto.

High Art and Hairpins

By IZOLA FORRESTER

Copyright, 1906, by Ruby Douglas

"Mr. Asquith is out by himself yet," said the tailor who had his shop on the ground floor of — Washington square. He held the door half open, and Helene paused with one foot on the narrow flight of stairs leading to the studio. She was frankly disappointed to have come so far for nothing. She hesitated, glancing back doubtfully at the waiting cab.

"Did he say when he would be back?"

"He not ever say when," answered the tailor positively, with sweeping Hungarian assertion. "He goes, then he comes again. The door is open."

"Then I think that I shall wait." Helene smiled with sudden pleasure. "I am sure he will come soon. He must have expected me and left the door open."

"Sure he must," agreed the tailor cordially. It was entirely probable. If there had been the slightest chance of the descent of such a radiant young goddess as this he had no doubt but what Mr. Asquith lived in a state of perpetual expectancy.

IT WAS MERELY A HAIRPIN.

Helene went quickly upstairs. At the second flight there was no landing. The top step ended abruptly at a door, and the ceiling sloped in an angle to meet the top of the door. She lifted the old fashioned latch and looked in, her heart beating faster. The studio was empty.

For an instant she hesitated. She had never been in his studio. It seemed like an intrusion into some intimate, personal part of his life in which she, with all his love for her, had no share.

But because of that very privacy she wanted to intrude. She wanted to see how he lived, here in his own little den where he did his work, the work that was to win him fame and fortune before the world, the den where he dreamed his dreams of the future in which she had so great a share.

She pushed the door farther open, lifted her soft light skirt of silk higher from the dusty stair and went into the studio, closing the door after her.

It was a half ceiled attic, the nearest approach to a Parisian atelier that Asquith could find in New York. There was a skylight in the high peaked roof, and wide, heavy cross beams visible to the naked eye marked the eaves line.

There was no burlap on the walls, no Turkish rugs on the floor, no Dutch shelves nor steins, not even a taboret or samovar. It was simply a workshop. A huge black walnut easel stood crosswise, facing the north light. Before it stood a rush bottomed chair and a low table littered with brushes, paint tubes and half mixed colors. A dingy, well daubed blouse lay over the back of the chair and a pipe half smoked rested on the easel ledge. Helene saw it all at one glance and laughed joyously, tremulously. She had never felt herself so near to him as now. What a boy he was, after all, and how funny he must look in that old blouse. She sat down in the rush bottomed chair and leaned her head back against the sleeve of the blouse.

The walls were bare except for half finished charcoal and pen and ink studies, with here and there a water color. The black and white studies were strange to her, but the landscapes all bore the same straggling signature, Hugh Asquith.

That was all. Not a single Venus, not a cast of anything in sight. Asquith was strictly a landscape artist and did not paint the figure. Vaguely she had been pleased that he did not. Of course if one were devoted to art and must paint the figure, then one must have models, and models must necessarily be beautiful, and—

Right there Helene's logic ended, but it was sufficient. She was glad that Asquith was a landscape artist and did not require any model save old Mother Nature.

She drew off her long mousquetaire gloves with a sigh of content. On the third finger of her left hand sparkled a diamond. It had been there over a month now. With a sudden impulse as the gloves slipped to the floor she pressed the ring against her lips. It stood for so much—more than a mere engagement. They had known each other a long time, two seasons, and she had met him every winter at dinners and swell dances. But this summer it had been different. Asquith said it was fate. Helene thought it the most delicious bit of maneuvering love had ever managed.

The rest of the family had gone to Europe. Helene had hesitated. Between an automobile tour of Brittany and the Baltic coast and a quiet summer with her married cousin at Larchmont she had chosen Larchmont. Asquith was a member of the yacht club at Larchmont. Every morning from the broad veranda at Bayview cottage she could see him out on the rocks, sketching before sunrise.

They were splendid rocks, huge, gaunt and gray; they rose raggedly from the water at low tide, like the bodies of some submerged sea monsters. One could walk to them easily, stepping over little pools left by the tide and stray strands of seaweed, and one morning Helene walked to them, slim and sweet and fresh as the dawn in her white dress and white low shoes. It was the shoes that did it. When Asquith turned at her call for help he found her standing in one of the pools, and the white shoes were ruined.

Helene glanced up at the wall. A little water color hung near her, some gray rocks in a rose tinted sea, with a bit of salt marsh in the foreground. She smiled at it happily. They had sat up there together that morning, and she had taken off her shoes and stockings—the precious ruined shoes and stockings—and that had been all.

And Asquith had said it was fate.

She laughed again. He was such a boy, after all. She stopped to pick up her gloves and stopped short to look at something lying on the floor at her feet. It was merely a hairpin. She picked it up and looked at it curiously. Her own hairpins were brown tortoise shell ones to match her hair. This one was gold, a small, insidious gold wire affair, very cheap and very dainty.

The laugh was gone from her lips. In its place was a look of wonderment, of almost fear. There had been a woman in Hugh's studio, a woman with blond hair, who wore gold wire hairpins, who dropped gold wire hairpins around promiscuously. And Hugh had told her he never painted the figure. More than that, he had told her that no one knew of his den in the attic except herself and a few close friends. He had no patrons, no buyers of pictures, because as yet he had never sold any. All of his relatives were in Europe too. If the hairpin did not belong to a model, whom did it belong to?

With a sudden fierce impulse, she threw the hairpin away from her. It fell with a tiny clink against the wall. Almost instantly she had repented. After all, it was purely a personal affair with Hugh, in which she had no part. He had not expected her to visit his studio. She had no right to resent another element of femininity which she had found there. Even if he did have models it was probably necessary. All artists had to study from life sooner or later. But was it necessary that they should have hair that matched gold hairpins?

She arose and crossed the room to where the hairpin had fallen. For a moment she held it in her hand irresolute. Then slowly she laid it on his table, and beside it she left the new solitaire ring. It would be enough. She knew that he would understand. As she turned to the door her eyes filled with a sudden rush of blinding tears, and as she felt for the latch it lifted and the door opened.

It was not Asquith. On the landing outside stood a girl, plump, rosy cheeked and red haired, holding up her skirts in one hand and a pail of scrub water in the other.

"Oh, I thought Mr. Asquith was home," she said apologetically. "I just cleaned up his place, ma'am, and I guess I lost one of my hairpins. It's a little wire one, but I need it to keep my pug up tight."

"I laid it on the table," said Helene gently. The girl set the pail down on the stairs and secured the hairpin, fastening up her tumbling red curls with it deftly.

"Thank you, ma'am," she called as she went downstairs, and Helene went back to the table and slipped the ring in its old place just as Asquith came up the stairs.

Booth and the Fish Line.

Of Edwin Booth Mr. Whitney relates the following anecdote: "In fishing he would exhibit the impetuosity of a Petruchio, and this cost me several rods, which broke into smithereens over small trout. He got in one day from a neighboring town a new, fairly good bamboo fly rod, which I assisted him in setting up, arranging the reel and line and pliable soaked leader, and left him afterward noosing on a scarlet ibis. The rod was lying on the dining room table. I was no sooner out of the rooms on the porch when I heard a tremendous rumpus in the dining room and, entering, found Booth flying about the room like a madman. He had left his fly hanging over the side of the table, which the half grown family cat present, seeing, struck at with its paw, which the sharp hook caught in, and the frightened cat bolted under the table with rapid speed, breaking the rod tip and dragging the rod after, while Booth, crying "Scat, cat!" had no effect on the now crazed feline, which he was following after in great excitement at high pressure with adjectives of singular note. The sequel of this was the escape of the cat with the gaudy fly well hooked in its foot, and a well smashed up rod. I was too much convulsed, with the others drawn in by the commotion, to render any aid, and Booth soon joined in with our laughter, confessing that his fishing experience was a failure and that he would not have any more of it."—Forest and Stream.

Eye-Strain Producing Pain in the Back.

In two cases lately where the family physician suspected eye-strain as the cause, because in the first case where the pain was in the small of the back, it was bad only during school hours, in the second case where it was between the shoulders and down the spine, it was after using the eyes for a long time at close work. On being tested in both cases, astigmatism was found, and after being corrected with the proper glasses all the pain in the back disappeared in both cases. In all cases where headaches are worse after close work, shopping, or after a journey or long drive, etc., they are invariably caused by eye-strain.

We correct the eye-strain, and all the results are cured.

The Public Meeting On Monday Evening.

Good Attendance and A-Plenty of Oratory--Mayoralty Candidates Took Up Most Of the Time, and Ald. Sinclair Gave the Intelligencer a Lot Of Free Advertising--Summary Of the Speeches Made.

The public meeting held in the City Hall on Monday night was very well attended. The principal interest, of course, centred in the speeches of the two Mayoralty candidates. Going down the steps after the meeting was over, it seemed, judging by the conversation of the audience, that two things were apparent—first, that the position of Mayor Sulman was stronger than before the meeting, and second, that Ald. Sinclair, so long as breath remained in his own lungs, would never need to hire a trumpeter.

City Clerk Mikel was chosen as chairman, and the Mayoralty nominees were the first speakers. On the platform were Mayor Sulman, Ald. Panter, Marsh, Sinclair, Green, Vermilyea, Knox, Messrs. Burrows, Carlaw, Starling and Thompson.

It had been rumored that Ald. Sinclair was going to bring an axe with him, with which he was going after The Intelligencer. The worst grudge he appeared to have against this great family journal was that it had, some years ago, paid him a compliment, which it did not now feel disposed to repeat. He also indulged in some cheap abuse of a correspondent who on Saturday last said he (Ald. Sinclair) had "moved" that the city buy the rolling mills. What the correspondent should have said was that Ald. Sinclair "proposed" the city should buy the rolling mills. Over this distinction, without much of a difference, Ald. Sinclair went into mock heroics, and dared the "liar" who had written the letter to arise and face him. The audience smiled broadly and indulgently. But to get to the speeches.

ALD. PANTER.

Ald. Panter announced that he would not be a candidate for the Mayoralty, though he had been assured of the support of many citizens broadly and indulgently. But to get whem he thanked.

MAYOR SULMAN.

The Mayor, who was given a very warm reception, pointed out the prosperous condition of the city's affairs, and the fact that the Sinking fund this year had been promptly paid, instead of waiting till the tail end of the tax roll came in, like some councils did. Seven miles of granolithic walks had been built while he was Mayor, also a sewer on Charles St., 2786 feet of gas mains, 3115 feet of water mains, with many other public works. The police force had been reorganized, the grant to the Library and Hospital increased, and many other local improvements made. His Worship dwelt on the fact that the rolling mills had been started, the Lehigh Valley Portland Cement Co. was making headway, and much money had been spent in improvements at Corbyville. He doubted if any community of Belleville's size in Canada had had such an influx of capital during the past year. What Belleville wanted now was cheap power, and the Healy Falls proposition and other matters were touched on. Speaking of the system of electing aldermen by general vote, the Mayor said it had proved very successful. During the eight years it has been in operation the Council have taken over the management of the waterworks, purchased, repaired and improved the gas works, acquired a water power, built about eleven miles of granolithic walks, purchased Zwick's island, and completed a large amount of other public works of a less important character, and the general taxes in the community the past year are less than the year the change was made.

Dealing with the committee presided over by Ald. Sinclair, the Mayor pointed out that the Auditors had criticized very severely the conduct of the Gas department. No change had since been made, and none of the improvements suggested by the auditors had been carried out. The Mayor claimed that Ald. Sinclair's department had $3100 outstanding arrears, which on New Year's day would be increased by $2100 or more. Last June, the Mayor said, a by-law was passed and money raised which authorized Ald. Sinclair to purchase 400 slot meters. Strange to say he disregarded this as well as the recommendation of the auditors as he only purchased 80. If the 400 meters had been put on at once as authorized by the by-law, instead of there being about $5,000 gas accounts outstanding on January 1st, 1907, the most of this would be in the City Treasury or the meters, and there is no good reason for not having these 400 meters as the money to purchase them is lying idle in the bank. The stand taken by Ald. Sinclair in regard to the rolling mills settlement was quoted by the Mayor, who characterized his opponent as a "dreamer." The Mayor said he had had no intention of running for a third term, but had been urged to do so by many citizens, and consented because certain projects he had helped to inaugurate were still under way. In conclusion he urged the formation of a 200,000 club for Belleville and wished his hearers a happy and prosperous New Year. Hearty applause followed our popular Chief Magistrate to his seat.

ALD. SINCLAIR.

Ald. Sinclair complimented Mayor Sulman on his beautiful speech, the author of which he had not disclosed. (Hisses.) Branching into what proved to be a long and in some places amusing speech, Ald. Sinclair said he wanted to be judged by his record. After a few remarks about his ancestors, who had lived in this city, and were well and favorably known. Ald. Sinclair claimed he had made a huge success of his private business, so could be depended he had made a huge success of his private business, so could be depended on to make a success of the city's business. There was not, he said, the equal of his store in Ontario, outside of Toronto, Hamilton, London or Ottawa. (A voice—"That's owing to the brains you've got.") Ald. Sinclair said he had served as alderman for six years at the request of the citizens, now he asked them to elect him as Chief Magistrate. He then read extracts from The Intelligencer complimenting him in former years, and complained that he was now getting no compliments. Alone and single-handed, he mournfully declared, he was fighting his battle. (Sounds of sobbing in the audience). Speaking of the rolling mills, Ald. Sinclair said he had never opposed that industry. He had much at stake in Belleville, and it was to his interest, as much as anybody's, that the mills should run. He skilfully glossed over his suggestion once made that the city should buy the mills, and said he knew the settlement of the lawsuit was as good as made when he moved that the matter be laid over and negotiations entered into for the purchase of the mills by the city. Then he waxed dramatic, and denounced the author of the letter signed "Civis" as a liar, with a big L. Going on to the Gas committee, Ald. Sinclair claimed that, four years ago, when the gas works were purchased, no one but he could be induced to take the chairmanship of the Gas committee. (A voice—"They didn't have the gall.") Since he had been chairman of that committee the system had been greatly extended. In regard to the slot meters mentioned by the Mayor, Ald. Sinclair claimed that the reason more meters were not purchased was because they were not called for. As to the outstanding debts of the Gas department, no one regretted them more than he did. Then he once more paid his personal respects to Mayor Sulman, saying he had done few or none of the things he had promised in his inaugural address two years ago. (A voice—"Look out. You'll be like Chown, you know.") He also charged that, when Mayor Sulman was first elected, he was not duly qualified, not being a ratepayer. Speaking of the power question, Ald. Sinclair paid a compliment to the Whitney Government for what they had done to try to get cheap power for municipalities. He hoped the city would soon get cheap power, and had personally, with Sir Mackenzie Bowell, R. J. Graham and others, subscribed for stock in the Northumberland-Durham Company to try to bring cheap power to Belleville. He did not, the speaker said, believe any of the present aldermen wanted to see Mayor Sulman re-elected. Ald. Sinclair went on to tell how he had, at the close of Mayor Sulman's first term, conferred with Ald. Panter in regard to the next year's mayoralty. In respect to a certain statement, the speaker asked corroboration from Ald. Panter, which that gentleman cheerfully and warmly declined to give. This jarred the chairman of Gas considerably, but he went on, though the audience was getting restless. In conclusion he asked the support of the citizens on his record as an alderman and a business man.

The chairman then announced they would hear from the aldermanic candidates, and called on who was warmly received. In the Council, he said, he had done what he could and what he believed was right. The speaker then gracefully thanked The Intelligencer for a merited compliment which had been paid him editorially on Monday evening. It heartened men up to see that their efforts were appreciated. Speaking of back taxes, Ald. Marsh made the cheering statement that they were almost a thing of the past in Belleville. There was only $1580 owing on the 1905 rolls and $23,000 on the 1906 rolls. He believed that, next year, they would see all taxes paid up by the end of December. The Treasurer's statement showed that, this year, the city had collected $207,000 and paid out $199,000. For such business as this they needed men of ability and probity. He urged the citizens to see that their representatives next year were men of that class.

ALD. PANTER.

Ald. Panter had evidently many friends in the audience. As chairman of Public Works he dwelt on the magnitude of the city and said it was hard to make the appropriation go round. They had reason to be proud of their granolithic walks, and said he wanted, next year, to see Front street permanently paved. They wanted ten good men for the Council next year, and hoped the electors would see they were elected. Ald. Sinclair had claimed that it was owing to his (Ald. Sinclair's) efforts that the Kirkwood and McKinnon forfeit money had been collected. This Ald. Panter denied, and said the credit belonged to Ald. McFee and himself. Ald. Panter called on Mr. Mikel to corroborate this, which that gentleman did.

ALD. GREEN.

Ald. Green hit somebody hard when he said he had never done enough good in all his life to parade it before the public. Therefore he would not blow his own horn. Ald. Green spoke of the city's heavy debt, and said they wanted in the Council no plungers or spendthrifts. He did not believe in going to the Legislature for measures which should be submitted to the people. Speaking of the civic utilities, Ald. Green said he believed the people had thrown away $50,000 when they bought the waterworks, and had made an even worse bargain when they bought the gas works. For his part, he would not have taken the latter for nothing! However, as they had these utilities, they should select the best men to look after them. In conclusion, Ald. Green claimed that the civic officials of Belleville were not paid enough as contrasted with some years ago.

ALD. VERMILYEA.

Ald. Vermilyea reviewed his record in the Council, and said he had always tried to do his best. In the Water committee during the past year much had been done and many extensions made. All expenses had been paid out of revenue.

ALD. KNOX.

Ald. Knox was proud to think they had such eloquent men in the Council as those who had preceded him. He claimed no such eloquence himself, but did claim that the parks were a credit to the city, and he had spent much time and effort on them.

MR. S. BURROWS.

Mr. Burrows said that, being a new-comer, he had no political sins to answer for. It lay with the citizens to help Belleville by helping along local concerns. He had stock in four of them, and if elected would do his best to bring more new industries to this fair city.

MR. J. H. STARLING.

Mr Starling said he had entered the Council in 1883, and with the exception of one year had sat till 1901. If elected now he would do all he could to advance the interests of Belleville. The speaker praised the local Fire Brigade, and claimed that he had done much, in former years, to bring it up to a high state of efficiency.

MR. CARLAW.

Mr Carlaw was the last speaker. He had faith in Belleville, he said, but the citizens must do all they could to bring industries in. Since he (the speaker) came to the city it had picked up wonderfully. (Laughter.) Mr. Carlaw called Front St. a corduroy road, and said it must surely be paved.

"God Save the King" was then sung, and the good people went home.

Finlander Gets Within 5,300 of Winning Mayor Coatsworth.

Protest Against Mayor Coatsworth's Administration and Not a Socialist Vote of Over 8,000—Power Bylaw Carried—Hon. Adam Beck, Pleased, Says Something to People From His Home In London.

Toronto, Jan. 2.—A mild surprise developed in the elections here yesterday in the remarkable support the Finlander Socialist candidate for mayor, Mr. Lindala, received against Mayor Coatsworth. It was not a victory for Socialism, but a moral protest against the present mayor. The vote at the close of the polling stood: For Coatsworth, 13,805; for Lindala, 8,286; Noble, 1,337. Mr. Coatsworth's plurality, 5,519.

THROUGH THE PROVINCE.

Big List of Municipal Candidates—Few In By Acclamation.

On that day, also voting will take place on local option in 11 municipalities of the province, and there will be the usual bylaws submitted to the people for their approval, including the Beck power bylaw.

Deseronto—Dr. J. Newton.
Dundas—W. H. Moss.

The Controllers.

There were ten candidates running for controllerships. The result: J. J. Ward, 9,342; Harrison, 9,175; Hocken, 8,526; Hubbard, 8,495. Controller John Shaw, who has been continuously a councillor, mayor or controller since 1884, was defeated.

The Exhibition bylaw was defeated by 4,826, the trunk sewer bylaw by 2,077 and the Yonge street bridge bylaw by 3,458.

Pleases Mr. Beck.

London, Jan. 2.—Hon. Adam Beck received the news of the result of Toronto's vote upon the Niagara Power bylaw at "Hedley," his home in London. The Minister of Power was naturally pleased at the outcome.

"It is apparent," Mr. Beck said to a reporter, "that the policy of the Government in dealing with the water-power privileges of the province has been endorsed in a very handsome manner. I believe the people of Toronto have acted wisely, and that the future will fully demonstrate this."

"Was the majority larger than you had anticipated?"

"It was certainly gratifying. The bylaw has received a most emphatic endorsation. This would be so in any event where so heavy a vote has been polled in favor of the proposition as laid down, but it is particularly the fact in view of the strong efforts that were put forward to defeat the bylaw. Every effort that could be made was made to discredit the estimates of the Hydro-Electric Commission, as well as those of the municipal commission. There was a report that opposition had been carried to the extent of a personal canvass of the city. Against these methods we had only the presentation of the case as best we might and the able assistance of the press of Toronto without regard to politics."

The Effect.

"What do you anticipate the effect of the vote in Toronto will be upon the municipalities which are yet to vote upon the question?"

"It will have a very favorable effect, undoubtedly. It is a mistaken impression that has gone abroad, however, that the western municipalities depended upon the outcome of the vote in Toronto. Toronto had a separate estimate. So had Hamilton and Dundas. Neither of these were contingent one upon the other. Had Toronto refused to accept Niagara power we would still be in a position to carry into effect our proposition with London, St. Thomas, Woodstock, Berlin, Stratford and all other places in this district. Toronto will obtain Niagara power at the figures we have submitted to the city, regardless of how Hamilton may vote."

"What do you consider would be the effect upon the municipalities other than Toronto, should they decline to accept Niagara power?"

"They would certainly be placed at a serious disadvantage in industrial development."

Stockholm, Jan. 2.—King Oscar was able to leave his bed for some time Monday. His condition yesterday was unchanged.

A New Stomach

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets Restore Lifeless Organs to Normal Condition.

A TRIAL PACKAGE FREE.

STUART'S DYSPEPSIA TABLETS RESTORE LIFELESS ORGANS TO NORMAL CONDITION.

A TRIAL PACKAGE FREE.

Many a sufferer from dyspepsia, indigestion and kindred ailments of the digestive organs carries around an absolutely useless stomach — a dead load, and a cess-pool for ever-increasing disorders. The muscles are seemingly worn-out, the mucous lining has lost its secretive power, and food taken into the stomach lies there and ferments, causing sour eructations, belchings, heartburn, dizziness and other distressing conditions. Many sufferers have given up in despair until they have been induced by some interested friend to try a box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are the dyspeptic's sure and only hope. They are a natural restorative of healthy action to the stomach and small intestines, because they supply just the elements that the weak stomach lacks—pepsin, diastase, golden seal and other digestives.

If you are afflicted with any of the symptoms above described, be assured that your digestive organs are losing power—they need help and there is no more sensible help to be given them than to supply elements which will do the work of digestion for them.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have been found by the test of reputable physicians in the United States and Great Britain to have remarkable digestive powers, one grain of the active principle of these tablets being sufficient to digest 3,000 grains of ordinary food. It is plain that no matter what the condition of your stomach, or how far your disease has progressed, one only of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets taken at meal time will do the work — give your stomach an opportunity to regain its lost powers, the muscles will be strengthened, the glands invigorated, and you will be a new man.

It costs nothing to prove the effectiveness of this cure. Send for a free sample package to-day. F. A. Stuart Co., 78 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at 50 cents a box.

FIND BOTTLE MESSAGES

News of Ill-Fated Str. Huronian Which Sailed Feb. 11, 1902.

Bottles Cast Up On Castle Rock Coast, Ireland, Contains Message From Chas. McFall to Mother and Sister Saying "Huronian Sinking Fast," and the Other From Several Members of the Crew.

London, Jan. 2.—(C. A. P.)—"The Huronian is sinking fast, top-heavy, and one side under water. Good-bye, mother and sister. Charles McFall, greaser," was the message found in a bottle cast on the Castle Rock coast of Ireland.

The Huronian left Glasgow with one passenger for St. John in February, 1902. A greaser named McFall was aboard the ill-fated vessel.

Second Message.

London, Jan. 2.—There has been washed up on the beach at Castle Rock, in the north of Ireland, a bottle containing a message from several members of the crew of the steamship Huronian, which disappeared in the spring of 1902, to the effect that she was sinking fast. The message, however, gives no location.

This is the second time the Huronian has been heard from since she sailed from Glasgow on Feb. 11, 1902, for St. John's, Nfld.

A report from Montreal, dated June 17, said that on June 2, a bottle was picked up 45 miles east of Halifax, containing the following note written on a scrap of paper.

"Steamer Huronian turned over Sunday night in Atlantic. In small boat, 14 of us."

Bodies Not Recovered.

Petrolea, Jan. 2.—The bodies of two boys, Ross Collins and George Niven, who were drowned in Bear Creek Monday, have not yet been recovered. Glycerine is being used to raise the bodies.

The mothers of the boys are both widows.

Three Killed In Explosion.

Pittsburg, Jan. 2.—Three men were killed and three fatally injured last night by the explosion of a steampipe in the Schoen Pressed Steel Works at McKee's Rocks, a suburb of this city.

Lion Mauls Trainer.

Toledo, Jan. 2.—While performing an act called the "Lion Hunt" yesterday, Trainer Harry Ray of the Bostock animal circus, was attacked by one of the animals and while he lay upon the floor, had both his sides, shoulder and breast lacerated. The injured trainer was taken to a hospital. It is feared his injuries will prove fatal.

MAY SUCCEED STRATHCONA.

Sir Frederick Borden, Minister of Militia, May Go to London.

Ottawa, Jan. 2.—While there is nothing definite yet about Lord Strathcona's resignation as Canadian High Commissioner at London, it is said he will ask to be relieved from responsibility, but it is certain that the Premier and Government will use every effort to get him to continue acting.

As to his successor, it is believed that if Sir Frederick Borden, the present Minister of Militia, desired the post he could get it.

STRATHCONA URGES IT.

Twice In Year Has He Asked to Be Allowed to Resign.

London, Jan. 2.—(C.A.P.)—The Telegraph says that twice within twelve months Strathcona has sought to give up office, and it is unlikely the Dominion Ministers can much longer withhold consent.

Too Young to Marry; Suicides.

Montreal, Jan. 2.—Alice Bancroft, a 15-year-old girl of Point St. Charles, killed herself Monday with a revolver, because the parish priest refused to marry her to a boy one year her senior. She at once returned home and suicided.

Missed Three Centuries by a Day.

Mineral Wells, Texas, Jan. 2.—One hundred and twenty-nine years is said to have been the age of "Aunt" Dorcas Harris, a negress, who died last week, and had she lived until yesterday would have seen part of three centuries.

Allan Line Traffic.

London, Jan. 2.—(C.A.P.)—The Allan Line carried 77,942 passengers to Canada in 1906, as against 70,045 in 1905.

In 1636 there was a settlement at the foot of a little hill on Manhattan Island which the settlers called Slang Berge, or Snake Hill, but which is now called Mount Morris. As the settlement grew each Dutchman who lived there wanted to name it after his native town. But as each one had come from a different place in Holland they could not agree. Governor Stuyvesant made careful inquiries, and, finding that no one had come from Haarlem, he nipped all neighborly jealousies in the bud by naming it Nieuw Haarlem.

Care of the Dog.

Dogs vary greatly in their appetites, and occasionally we find a dainty feeder who will nose over a mixed dish of food, picking out a bit here and there and showing but little relish for what he does eat. This is an evident sign that something is wrong. Changing his teeth, if a puppy, thus disturbing his system, may be the cause, and in this case a little cooling medicine should be given.

The Worst Part.

A professor of Trinity college, Dublin, overhearing an undergraduate making use of profane language, rushed at him frantically, exclaiming, "Are you aware, sir, that you are imperilling your immortal soul and, what is worse, incurring a fine of 5 shillings?"

Skated To His Death.

Chief Ordnance of Royal Canadian Regiment Drowns.

Major O'Devaline Skated Up Williams' Lake, N. S., After Capt. French Who Thought Ice Unsafe Left Him, and Later Body Was Recovered by An Eel Spear Through a Hole in the Ice.

Halifax, N.S., Jan. 3.—Major O'Devaine, chief ordnance officer of the Royal Canadian Regiment, was drowned in Williams' Lake last evening. He went skating with Capt. French. The latter did not think the ice safe and came home.

O'Devaine skated up the lake. He did not return, and his non-appearance at the barracks caused a searching party to be sent out. Towards midnight a hole was found in the middle of the lake and by means of an eel spear the body of O'Devaine was recovered.

Deceased was a native of Ireland. He was formerly in the Imperial Royal Artillery, and on the Canadian Government taking over the garrison he was made major and chief ordnance officer. He was about 35 years old and married a Halifax lady. He leaves a wife and one child.

Killed At Collingwood.

Hamilton, Jan. 3.—Word was received yesterday of the death of Gordon M. Walton, the 21-year-old son of W. G. Walton. While inspecting the Glenellah at Collingwood with his father, he fell through a hatchway into the hold, sustaining fatal injuries. The deceased was a draughtsman.

Many Fingers Amputated.

Hamilton, Jan. 3.—George Lawrence, 189 North Victoria avenue, an employe of the International Harvester Works, had three fingers taken off in a machine yesterday afternoon; and Louis Hendelburg lost four fingers at the Burrow, Stewart & Milne Foundry in the same way. Both were taken to the City Hospital.

30 ROASTED IN TRAIN WRECK.

Due to Head-on Collision of Two Passenger Trains.

Topeka, Kan., Jan. 3.—Thirty-five persons, all Mexicans but three, were killed, 65 persons were injured and the bodies of 30 Mexicans were incinerated yesterday, in a head-on collision of two passenger trains of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, near Voland. The wreck occurred while both trains were running slowly on a curve in a cut where the grade was steep.

All the killed were in the south-bound train, except a tramp on the north-bound train. He and a negro porter and a workman accompanying a gang of Mexican laborers, were the only Americans killed so far as known, although a passenger says a woman and child was burned in a tourist car.

Most of the injuries were due to the setting of an emergency brake, which threw almost every passenger in the south-bound train to the floor. The north-bound train was running up grade. The Mexicans were pinioned under the seats and the doors were jammed so they could not get out. In the chair car also many passengers were held down by the seats.

The train caught fire from the gas tanks, which were broken.

The passengers in the rear car escaped in their night clothes and dressed in the mud beside the track.

John Lyons, 19 years old, telegraph operation at Voland, who let the south-bound train get by his station, where it was to pass the north-bound train, was taken to jail last night.

Scotch Golfer Drowned.

New York, Jan. 3.—The body of Robert Dunlop, the Scotch professional golfer, was found at Vancortland Lake, Kingsbridge, yesterday. Dunlop had been missing for several weeks. It is believed he fell into the lake while walking across the park at night.

WHERE HAVE FUNDS GONE?

Allegations Against Redmond Faction May Stir Up a Scandal.

London, Jan. 3.—The allegations of financial wrongdoing on the part of the Remondite members of the Irish party, made in Cork on Dec. 31, by Wm. O'Brien, promise to become of serious import.

The Irish People, the organ of Wm. O'Brien, publishes an editorial yesterday, declaring that the records of the alleged wrongful financial methods of Redmonites, the revelation of which was threatened by Mr. O'Brien in his speech at Cork, must be produced before an Irish jury, and that this jury shall hear the whole story, including a recital of the disposition of the immense sums obtained under false pretences, and which enabled the bosses of the party to defy the people.

Daniel Sheehan, member of Parliament from mid-Cork, has sent a letter to John Redmond, demanding an apology or reparation because the party stopped his allowances, which action he attributes to the influence of Mr. Redmond, and failing which he threatens legal proceedings.

"DOWN WITH SOCIALISM."

Von Buelow Confesses to Battle Cry In Election Manifesto.

Berlin, Jan. 3.—Chancellor Von Buelow yesterday disclosed the motives and aims of the Government in dissolving the Reichstag in a vigorous election manifesto, which took the form of a letter to Lieut.-General Von Liebert, chairman of the managing committee of the Empire League, formed to combat the Social Democrats.

The chancellor explained that he had a double purpose in appealing to the country, namely, to free the Government from dependence on the clerical party, and to strengthen the Liberal groups in the Reichstag, so that they, in combination with the Conservatives, may successfully oppose the growth and destructive power of socialism and reactionary clericalism.

The chancellor then announced that his political battle cry for the time was: "Fight for the honor and prosperity of the nation against the Social Democrats, Poles, Guelfs and Centrists."

Shoots At Judge McDonald.

St. Louis, Mo., Jan. 3.—Just after Judge J. A. McDonald of the circuit court had convened court yesterday morning, Miss Rosa Weil suddenly arose from among the spectators and fired point-blank with a revolver at the judge. The bullet missed him. She was disarmed and arrested. Judge McDonald after ordering the woman removed from the room, turned to several attorneys, who were waiting to make motions, and said calmly, "Proceed, gentlemen."

TIMELY TOPICS.

Among the matters upon which Mayor Sulman has been working are the general sewerage system, the isolation hospital, the Butterfield mortgage, the return of all outstanding tax rolls, and the payment of each year's taxes within the year.

When Mayor Sulman was first elected to the office of Mayor he announced his policy as to a number of matters affecting the city's interest. Though he has worked assiduously at these matters, and considerable has been accomplished, there yet remains work which he should be given ANOTHER TERM to complete Elect him by a good majority.

The man on the next block had an anxious time this a.m. on the slippery walks. With a pocket full of New Year's resolutions, a fall would have broken some of 'em, sure.

If the Mayoralty candidates will take our advice they'll get sharp-shod without delay.

Let's see, didn't Mayor Sulman, in his last inaugural address, promise that there should be no more of this kind of weather? How about that, Ald. Sinclair?

The aldermanic card of Mr. H. W. Ackerman appears in another column Mr. Ackerman is a bright young business man, clean and progressive. The city needs just such men as he in the Council, and he will, if elected, which we believe he will be, worthily fill the seat of one of the excellent aldermen who have dropped out. As Mr. Ackerman is a new candidate for municipal honors and not, perhaps, very well known, a few facts about him may be of interest. He has been a resident of this city for 14 years, all of which time he has been associated with R. J. Graham. He was one of the first shareholders of the Belleville Hardware Co., also the Belleville Fruit & Vinegar Co., and is a shareholder of the Belleville Portland Cement Co. A man who shows his faith in Belleville by putting his money into her industries deserves the support of all classes of our citizens. That is what Mr. Ackerman should get.

Each tiny grain of WINDSOR TABLE SALT is a perfect crystal —pure and dry. That is why it never cakes.

Mr. E. J. Butler asks the suffrages of the electors of this city. His excellent standing, character and attainments should weigh heavily in his favor, and he would, no doubt, add to the efficiency of the Council of 1907.

An error of the types made us say, last night, that the Mayor, in his speech at the public meeting, advocated the formation of a 200,000 club It should have been a 20,000 club.

Last year it was Ald. Knox and the dog tax increase. Has he abated the nuisance of vagrant mongrel dogs? Not much, there are just as many as ever.

Here is an excellent bunch of New Year's resolutions:

Mayor Sulman — To continue to do his duty as Mayor in 1907.

Ald. Panter — To keep on shouting for a permanent paving for Front St.

R. Arnott, Esq. — To put an artificial ice plant in the rink.

Bridge St .— To keep up the usual number of anniversaries.

Mr S. Burrows — To sing "Rule Britannia" at every Council meeting.

Ald. Vermilyea — To see that some of the electric light reflectors are cleaned.

Ald. Marsh — To bring the tax rate down to 22 mills.

P. Harrison, Esq. — To ginger up the Board of Education when he gets there.

Rising young vocalists — To sing songs which will please audiences, rather than those which will show off the methods of their teachers.

The man on the next block—To put ashes on his slippery walk, and continue keeping the Ten Commandments, even if some of his weaker brethren can't.

Col. Stewart — To order out the Fifteenth and move on Ottawa if the drill shed isn't started in the spring.

The Chief of Police — To continue to allow no statues on street corners.

Mr. Thos. Hanley Died This Morning.

POPULAR FORMER RESIDENT PASSED AWAY IN ST. MICHAEL'S HOSPITAL — WILL BE BURIED AT PORT ARTHUR.

Mr. Frank Dolan, of this city, this morning received a message stating that Mr. Thos. Hanley, whose probably fatal illness was noted in yesterday's paper, had died in St. Michael's hospital, Toronto. Mrs. Hanley was with her husband when he died. The remains will be taken to Port Arthur for interment, leaving Toronto to-night. The deceased gentleman was an ex-alderman of this city, and was for years a prominent contractor, being well and favorably known as an upright and honorable man. He was an adherent of the Roman Catholic church. A widow, three sons and three daughters, all at home, survive to mourn the loss of a loving and devoted husband and father. The late Mr. Hanley was about 65 years of age, and moved to Port Arthur about five years ago.

Other Deaths.

MISS MARY E. NICHOL.

Miss Mary E. Nichol, who was in her 17th year, died this morning at the residence of her mother, Mrs. Nichol, John street. The young lady was a victim of typhoid fever, and had been ill but a short time. She was a member of St. Michael's Church, and by her kindly disposition made many friends. The remains will be taken to Frankford for interment.

MRS. DANIEL CAMPBELL.

Mrs. Daniel Campbell, whose remains were brought here yesterday from Kingston for interment, was known to many in this city. Deceased, whose maiden name was Miss Tamasine Manning, was born in England 75 years ago. When a child she came to this country with her parents, who took up their residence in Hamilton. She was married in Hamilton to Mr. Campbell, who preceded her to the tomb some months ago. The husband was born in Prince Edward County, being a member of a well known and highly respected family. As a result of that union two sons and one daughter were born, and only one son survives, namely, John R. Campbell,

MRS. JAMES C. DAFOE.

Mrs. James C. Dafoe, of Holloway, whose death was noted in yesterday's issue, was 63 years of age and had always lived in this county. Her maiden name was Miss Elizabeth M. Jones, and she was born in Sidney township. She had been a sufferer for some five or six years. Deceased was a well-known lady and esteemed by a large circle of friends. She had been for many years a member of the Methodist church. In addition to the husband, four sons, Ollie and Wm., of Thurlow; Harry, of Belleville, and Thos., of Carthage, N.Y., and two daughters, Mrs. Geo. Cadman, of Thurlow, and Miss Nellie at home, survive.

of New York, who accompanied the remains of his mother from Kingston to Belleville. Mrs. Campbell was for years a member of Holloway St. Church, and the pastor, Rev. R. H. Leitch, officiated at the cemetery yesterday. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Campbell removed to Kingston, where she was tenderly cared for by friends until death ended her sufferings. Her end was peace.

JOHN McKENNA.

Mr. John McKenna, a machinist, who resided on Great St. James St., died at noon to-day. Deceased had been ailing for some time. For upwards of 45 years Mr. McKenna had been a resident of this city, and was a man who was respected by all who knew him. He was a member of the Veterans' Association, having done duty at the front during the troublous times of 1866. Deceased, who was 68 years of age, was born in Scotland and came to this country when a lad. He was a member of the John St. Presbyterian Church. A widow and a family of eleven children survive. The sons are Alexander, of Exshaw, Alberta; William, of Youngstown, O.; John, of Toronto; James, of Syracuse, and Douglas, at home. The daughters are: Mrs. McEachern, of Toronto; Mrs McCurdy, of Stirling; Mrs. W. E Clapp, of Syracuse, and Misses Annie, Margaret and Jessie, at home.

Do your duty and your delights will take care of themselves.

The Nicolet Election.

The election of Mr. Charles Devlin in Nicolet, P. Q., was a foregone conclusion, that constituency being hopelessly Liberal. So certain was the result that some of the devices resorted to by the ministers and their friends looked like works of supererogation. For instance it should not have been necessary to emasculate the oath administered to voters. At the nomination meeting Mr. George Ball, Mr. Devlin's opponent, protested against the use of the form of oath supplied from Ottawa. All reference to the reception of money, offers, promises, etc., had been cut out of the form of oath. Mr. Ball desired that the formula contained in the election law be adhered to. This would seem to be necessary, as the appeal made by the Government is purely on the basis of the "good things" to be provided. But whether bribery of the individual voter was contemplated or carried out, bribery of the whole constituency was enthusiastically resorted to. Hon. Mr. Lemieux reminded the electors in Becancour that he had in two years obtained $91,000 of Government money for the county. "To get its share of public favors," he told them, "the electors needed to send a man to represent them, not a mere voting machine." He would next bring them a railway, by "his influence and energy." The Postmaster-General used some very heated language towards the Conservatives of the riding. He described them as "a pack of hounds," and could not find words strong enough to express his contempt. Mr. Monk defended the young men who had been attacked by Mr. Lemieux. So far from being "a pack of hounds," according to the picturesque expression of the Postmaster-General, the young men, he said, were giving a proof of attachment to the principles for which Bedard, Morin, Parent and the other great French-Canadians had fought when they resisted the attempts of an oligarchy at Quebec to make a farce of representative institutions by imposing candidates on constituencies.

The warm financial sympathy of Mr. Lemieux for the impressionable voters and his abuse of those who had independence enough to ignore Government favors and stand by their principles, have proved successful. Mr. Devlin has been returned, not by as large a majority as his friends anticipated, but sufficient to indicate that Nicolet is still safely in the Liberal column.

Aged English Twins.

London, Jan. 1. — Two remarkable twins celebrated their birthday in the city last week. Twins are common enough, but it is rare, indeed, that the pair of them attain the age of 87 years. But in the case of David and Jonathan Codner (fitting Christian names, indeed!) they have reached this age without severing their partnership, if one may thus express it.

The pair, who are leading merchants in the city, and who, by the way, bear a striking resemblance to Chauncey M. Depew, were born in Devonport in 1819 and until they reached middle age it was a matter of considerable difficulty to tell them apart, while even now, at the advanced age of 87, it is not easy to detect which is which, so great is the semblance. The most curious part is that they are both active and have known but little illness. They are keen amateur photographers, and take an interest in rowing, as those at Devonport can testify.

There is every indication that the brothers will touch the century mark thus constituting a world's record.

Two Cents a Mile.

(Montreal Gazette.)

The Grand Trunk Railway Company is applying to Parliament for an amendment to its charter, striking out the clause by which it is compelled to provide third class transportation on its lines at a penny a mile. This application strikes the Toronto Globe as humorous. "The full flavor of the joke," it says, "cannot be appreciated "without recalling that there is a "lively agitation at the moment for "a rate of two cents a mile, not in "third class coaches, but in first "class coaches, an agitation of "which cognizance will undoubtedly be taken by the Railway Commission at an early date." Then the Globe goes on to remark that "when the bill comes before the "committee the members will probably insist on having a good "look at the genius who proposed "this exquisite way out of the "difficulty." The man whose thinking begins with the opening of his mouth may find this amusing. It probably correctly expresses the opinion of the people who have become saturated with the anti-capitalistic rot with which the cheap magazines of the United States have been regaling their readers, utterly regardless and indifferent as to the truth of their assertions, but satisfied so long as they can create the impression that the people are being robbed and that the Smut magazine or the Muck magazine or whatever magazine it may be, is the only disinterested champion of the people's interests, price ten cents per copy. The shallowness of the agitation has been so apparent that it has not disturbed the great body of public opinion. The hub-bub has, however, been prodigiously great, and it is not altogether surprising that there have been instances in which men and newspapers with the reputation of leadership have temporarily lost their heads and have become affected with the anti-corporation mania. This would appear to be what has happened to the Globe. If it had remained in the full possession of all its faculties it would have recognized the Grand Trunk's application as one that Parliament should grant as a matter of course, merely for the purpose of placing the Grand Trunk upon the same basis as the other railways of Canada.

To compel the railways of Canada at the present time to carry passengers at a rate of two cents per mile, would mean either one or the other of two things—the impossibility of raising capital to build the thousands of miles of new railway the country requires at the present time, or will require in the next few years, or if it is secured, that it can only be obtained on most disadvantageous terms. In the matter of regulating railways Canada has gone just about as far as it is advisable to go. As a matter of fact it is questionable if we have not gone too far, for powers have been vested in the Railway Commission which, if unwisely exercised, might suddenly and irreparably stunt the development of the country. It is to the credit of the commission that so far it has turned a deaf ear to unjustified public clamor. That is how the present two cent agitation may be fairly described. As good a presentation of the case of the railways as has yet come to hand, is to be found in the address delivered before the Canadian Railway Club, by Mr. George T. Bell, general passenger and ticket agent of the Grand Trunk, a few days ago. Mr. Bell pointed out that there are at the present time seventeen classes of people or conditions under which the railways of Canada sell transportation at less than the legal rate. The list comprises people whom it is to the advantage of the railway to treat liberally, and conditions under which the railways are able to quote cheaper rates than are ordinarily charged because the volume of traffic thereby temporarily created make it possible to handle it profitably. From this Mr. Bell passed on to lay before his audience the difficulties under which the Canadian railways labor through the sparse settlement of much of the territory through which they run. For the purposes of comparison he selected the State of Massachusetts, which is, it must be admitted, a fair two cents per mile territory. This is what he said:

"When Canadian steam railways earn for carrying passengers from the single track mileage of 20,487, which they operated last year, the grand total of $154,410,519, instead of $28,959,650, they will have reason to congratulate themselves, as their passenger earnings will then equal those of the New England railways which enter the State of Massachusetts, and which last year, with a total of 4,962 single track miles, received from passengers $37,399,209. But this desirable result will probably not be attained until 512,933,019 passengers annually travel on the 20,847 miles of track, instead of 25,288,723 passengers who paid fares last year. For every mile of track the New England passenger paid for transportation $7,537, against $1,413 paid in Canada. Twenty-five thousand and thirty-seven passengers in the year used the New England railways, and only 1,234 passengers used the Canadian railways for each mile of track operated. If all of the steam railways in the United States, outside of the 4,962 miles in New England, had received from passengers the same gross earnings per track mile as the New England railways, instead of $135,295,523, those railways not within the passenger man's Garden of Eden would have earned from passengers on their 212,011 miles of track $1,597,926,207. Did I hear anyone remark that the "conditions" in New England must be vastly different than in the rest of the United States and in Canada? Exactly so!

There is nothing to be added to this. The figures given tell the whole story. They show that Canada is not yet a two cents per mile country.

Under the conditions the passenger rates charged by Canadian railways are fair and reasonable. To compel them to charge less would merely mean that they would be driven to handling the traffic with fewer trains, that is, for the smaller returns give the people poorer accommodation. The Canadian railway statistics show that the railways are giving the people more than a liberal share of their increased earnings in increased facilities. For every mile of track operated in 1905 there were 1,242 passenger train miles, as against 974 in 1896. Time is money, and these figures show that the railways are saving it for the public by a more frequent service. More expensive equipment and faster time do not show in the statistics, but they have been liberally conceded, and they are both expensive. Fairness to the railways will compel everyone who will regard these facts dispassionately to confess that if the railways ten, fifteen or twenty years ago gave the people fair value for their money at three cents a mile, they are giving even greater value for the same money to-day.

Cut this out and take it to R. Templeton & Co.'s drug store and get a free sample of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. For biliousness and constipation they are unequalled. They improve the appetite, strengthen the digestion and regulate the liver and bowels.

PEOPLE OF THE STAGE.

Theatrical Life Has Few Joys and Much Bitterness.

Booth, to whom Henry E. Abbey would cheerfully have paid $1,000 a night for 150 consecutive nights, was one of the most unhappy men on the face of God's earth. He had buried two wives, been through the mortification of bankruptcy and so far as worldly wealth is concerned, so far as the comforts of a settled home go, had yet to make the one and secure the other. This being the case, what do you suppose is the fate of minor people? The fact is that they work hard, are underpaid, never play the parts they prefer, pay much, by far the greater portion of their salaries, for stage costumes, invariably have a gang of hangers on who eat the bread they earn, are out of engagements most of the time and ninety times out of a hundred die so poor that they are buried at the expense of their fellows. In the first place, it is extremely difficult for them to obtain a position, and, having a position, how few its advantages. They have to rehearse at inconvenient times; they go out in all kinds of weather regardless of their health or comforts or home desires; they dress in outlandish places, either wet, damp and chilly or overheated. They are at the capricious mercy of speculative managers, and, having found by experience that there is very little sympathy for them, either before or behind the footlights, they wrap themselves in a garment of mental indifference to appearances, which is utterly misunderstood by a cynical and suspicious world.

I know of a girl who was called to a Sunday night rehearsal. Her father was very ill, but the rental of their rooms, the fees for the doctor and money for the drugs depended upon her attending to her business. It was imperative that she should be in the theater at 7:30 o'clock. Having arranged the room as women only can, having placed upon the table by the bedside of her father his medicine, she kissed him goodby and, with a loving touch, promised to be back as early as possible. You know what Sunday night rehearsals mean. They mean 1, 2, 3, 4 o'clock the next day. That is what this one meant. The girl hastened home. The candle light had gone, the cold gray of the early morning was in the room, the father was dead upon the bed.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

Froude's "Inaccuracy."

What competent critic today doubts the general trustworthiness of Froude's "History of England," in writing which he was obliged to transcribe from Spanish masses of papers which even a Spaniard would have read with difficulty? Yet what sweeping charges of inaccuracy were long made against him! Writing in 1870 to a friend, the historian says: "I acknowledge to five real mistakes in the whole book—twelve volumes—about twenty trifling slips, equivalent to 'i's' not dotted and 't's' not crossed, and that is all that the utmost malignity has discovered. Every one of these rascals has made a dozen blunders of his own while detecting one of mine."—Success Magazine.

Old Times In New York.

In 1789 New York city maintained an official who would whip a servant, either free or slave, for the master, charging a shilling for the job. Petty thieves were branded for life with a "T" on the cheek. Mrs. Johanna Young and another woman convicted of grand larceny were driven all over the city in an open cart, then stripped to the waist and given thirty-nine lashes apiece in public and then banished. "Whereupon," says the record, "they went to Philadelphia."

The Tender Hearted Butcher.

"It must have been a very tender hearted butcher who killed this lamb," said the cheerful boarder, pausing in the sawing of his chop.

"Why?" kindly asked the inquisitive man.

"He must have hesitated three or four years before striking the fatal blow."—London Tit-Bits.

His Choice.

"Are you fond of music?" asked a stranger of the young man at the concert, who was applauding vigorously after a pretty girl had sung in a very painful way.

"Not particularly," said the young man frankly, "but I'm exceedingly fond of the musician."

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION.

On the 20th of December, 1906, one of the most pleasing events in the history of parents' lives took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Belshaw, of the township of Rawdon, when their four children with a number of personal friends assembled at their home to show not only by words but by deeds, the love and esteem they held so dear for their parents, reminding them that they have not forgotten the 5th Commandment. They came prepared with well-filled baskets and spread upon the table a feast worthy of the occasion. This was a real surprise, the old folks having no intimation of it whatever. Mrs. George T. Belshaw read the following address:

Dear Parents, — We, your children, having convened this delightful evening with a feeling of unbounded pleasure wish to express to you in some way our love and esteem, and so avail ourselves of the present opportunity of so doing and ask you to accept this chair and book-case, not for its intrinsic value, but as a slight token of our kind regard. We feel it a duty and a pleasure to make you this presentation, as you have ever shown us such loving kindness and generosity. We trust that each of us shall discharge nobly the duties devolving upon us so that having placed there on the top stone, we may hear the glad message, "Enter through." Hoping you will be spared many years of health and happiness, we all unite in wishing you a very Merry Christmas and Happy New Year and many of them.

Signed on behalf of your family.
Carrie and George T. Belshaw, Gertie and James B. Belshaw, Annie and Robert S. Belshaw, Abbie and Charles Mumby.

The parents were very much affected and were for a short time unable to reply. After a very sumptuous tea was served and order restored, the father replied in a few well-chosen words, thanking his children for their very kind consideration of them and hoped that God's blessing might rest upon them all, as this was his daily prayer in the past and would be in the future while life lasted.

At the close of the proceedings Mr. Belshaw presented his grandson, Claude Belshaw, with a silver watch which had been promised him for good conduct and regularity at school.

A New Year's Gathering

A very pleasant event occurred on New Year's night at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Buskard, Herchimer Avenue. Eight surviving children, with as many of their families as could be, were present to celebrate the 79th anniversary of the birthday of their mother, Mrs. Geo. Barlow, sr. A bountiful repast, to which all did ample justice, followed by music, singing and recitations, made all vote a very pleasant evening was passed. Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Davis, Kingston; Mr. S. Barlow, Havelock; Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Barlow, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Barlow, city; Mr. and Mrs. John Barlow, Tyendinaga; Mrs. Jas. E. Naylor, Madoc; Mrs. Jas. Belch, city. These, with children and and grandchildren, totalled the number to 60. Fourteen great grandchildren were among the number.

Winds of passion do not blow to harbors of high purposes.

TIMELY TOPICS.

HIS SYMPATHETIC WAY.

(Chicago News.)

I have a sympathetic soul;
  I keenly feel for others
And in a way I can condole
  With my unhappy brothers.
But, as I cannot help 'em all,
  Or from their troubles free 'em,
I'd rather that they wouldn't call
  Around where I can see 'em.

While sorrow always fills my breast,
  The sick I rarely visit,
Because it makes me feel depressed;
  It isn't pleasant, is it?
They look so bad and sigh and moan,
  It's quite a task to cheer 'em;
So, as they take that dismal tone,
  It's better not to hear 'em.

I'd give all woes a swift relief;
  I love to see folks jolly,
But any misery or grief
  Makes me so melancholy!
Thus I can play no helpful part,
  Nor any succor render,
Because, you see, my foolish heart
  Is so confounded tender.

Shop lifting, it is feared, is too common a mode of petty stealing. In Toronto three alleged shoplifters, says a Toronto contemporary, were committed for trial by Magistrate Denison. They were charged with having stolen goods from the T. Eaton Company's store. The detectives who arrested them testified that the one had a baby in her arms, and concealed the stolen articles under the child's clothing. Detective Kennedy stated that the other woman admitted stealing a chatelaine in Eaton's store about two years ago, besides some dry goods a few weeks ago. He said she told him that two women had taught her how to steal goods from counters in the big stores. Bail was refused the prisoners." A few months in jail for such offences might have a deterring effect upon the petty thieves.

How China proposes to stop the use of opium: The Emperor has ordered that the growth of the poppy and the use of opium must come to an end in ten years. The soil employed in the cultivation of the poppy must be withdrawn from that service by one-tenth annually. Persons using opium must "taper off." and no persons not at present using it are to be allowed to commence its use China has suffered from this dreadful habit, morally and intellectually. If an Imperial decree can put an end to the curse, autocratic rule will have effected at least one triumph.

A Parliamentary candidate was being heckled. One of the questions had reference to the religious denomination to which he belonged.

"Well," he said, "you have asked me an honest question, and you shall have a straightforward answer. My grandmother was a Scotswoman — a rigid Presbyterian."

Obvious disappointment was shown on the faces of the audience, so the candidate proceeded;

"My grandfather was English, and therefore a member of the Church of England."

Still no enthusiasm, but rather the reverse.

"My father, on the other hand, was a good Baptist," went on the desperate candidate, who was still unrewarded by applause. He grew anxious, so hurriedly added: "But my dear old mother, long since dead, was a Methodist.'

Instantly all faces were radiant, so he concluded,

'And, gentlemen, I follow the precepts of my dear old mother. I'm a Methodist and I don't care who knows it!'—London News.

The above was a British politician, not a Canadian.

It is the custom of a well-known vicar to point his sermons with either "dearly beloved brethren," or "now, my brothers." One day a lady member of his congregation took exception to this.

"Why do you always preach to the gentlemen and never to the ladies?" she asked.

"My dear lady," said the beaming vicar, "one embraces the other."

"But not in the church!" was the instant reply.

HUGHES TO HELP HEARST.

Governor of New York Recommends Instant Provision For N.Y. Recount.

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 3.—The two Houses convened at noon yesterday. James W. Wadsworth, jr., of Livingston, was re-elected Speaker of the Assembly.

In his message to the Legislature at noon yesterday, Governor Hughes makes many important recommendations. The Massachusetts system of voting is advocated. So is the limiting by law of the amount of money that can be expended by candidates for offices. The wiping out of existence of the state railroad commission and the gas and electricity commission is recommended, as well as the abolition of the board which now appraises the value of lands acquired for barge canal purposes, the latter being a recommendation made a year ago by Governor Higgins. Direct nominations are favored.

The Governor recommends "that immediate provision be made for a recount of the votes cast for mayor at the municipal election in New York City in 1905. The matter is not one into which any considerations with respect to persons or expediency should be allowed to enter. If, upon a recount, it is found that the present incumbent of the office received a plurality of the votes, he will be confirmed in his title, and the claims which have been vehemently asserted against it, will be conclusively answered. If, on the other hand, his opponent was elected, he should be seated."

As to railroad legislation that is needed, the Governor says: "Proper means for the regulation of the operations of railroad corporations should be supplied. For want of it, pernicious favoritism has been practised. These abuses are not to be tolerated."

To Visit American Ports.

London, Jan. 3.—The Admiralty's decision to send the first cruiser division to Hampton Roads for the opening of the Jamestown Exposition will give Great Britain an exceptionally strong naval representation, as the division is made up of six of the best types of armored cruisers, including the Good Hope, Antrim, Argyle, Devonshire, Hampshire and Roxburgh. Later the division will visit other American ports.

A Disastrous Fire.

New York, Jan. 3.—A dozen persons were injured, 40 families are homeless, 2,000 persons were driven temporarily from their homes, fifty horses were roasted to death and property valued at $200,000 was destroyed yesterday in a fire. One big tenement house at 427 West 53rd street and a large boarding stable at 429 to 431 West 53rd street were destroyed.

South African Wines.

Ottawa, Jan. 3.—W. T. R. Preston reports from Cape Town that there is a desire to find a market for South African wines in Canada, and an agitation is in progress to induce the Cape Colony Government to subsidize the Canadian South African steamship line to return to Canada direct at least once in six months.

"All That Is Left of Them."

Bushiere, Persia, Jan. 3.—A thousand Turkish soldiers, the remnant of about 4,000 sent to the Nadj Peninsula two years ago to suppress the Arab revolt, have returned to Busreh, Asiatic Turkey, in a deplorable condition. Over 2,000 of their comrades died of disease or starvation and the rest deserted.

Call to Dublin Man.

Montreal, Jan. 3.—The vestry of St George's Church met last evening and offered the rectorship vacated by the appointment of Bishop Carmichael to the Rev. Dr. Patterson Smythe, rector of St. Ann's, Dublin, canon of the cathedral and professor of pastoral theology at the university.

Forty Years In Office.

Brampton, Jan. 3.—On Jan. 1, Robert Broddy, sheriff of the County of Peel, completed 40 years in office.

Affiliates With McGill.

Montreal, Jan. 3.—Prince of Wales College, Charlottetown, and McGill, are to be affiliated.

When British Electors Got Golden News From the Moon.

Votes have been purchased shamelessly and on a huge scale in British elections. An arrangement was once made in the borough of Wendover by which two candidates were to be elected after a distribution of £6,000 ($30,000) among the voters. The account reads: "This being settled, a gentleman was employed to go down, when he was met according to previous appointment by the electors about a mile from the town. The electors asked the stranger where he came from. He replied, 'From the moon.' They then asked, 'What news from the moon?' He answered that he had brought from thence £6,000 to be distributed among them. The electors, being thus satisfied with the golden news from the moon, chose the candidates and received their reward."

At Hindon a man dressed fantastically as the dancing Punch called at the houses of the voters and left behind him sums of 5 to 10 guineas ($25 to $50). Another device was to collect the citizens at the inns and hand them their reward through a hole in the door. For these offenses the house of commons passed a resolution that Hindon should be disfranchised, but so lax were the morals of the time—the close of the eighteenth century—that the resolution was never acted upon.

Again in 1859 the "man in the moon" turned up in Wakefield. He went about openly distributing money and did not appear to be in the least ashamed of his occupation. At Dublin in 1868 a hole in the wall served the purpose of a distributing center for five pound notes, while at Shaftesbury an alderman paid through a hole in the door of his office a sum of 20 guineas ($100) to each elector.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When the tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The Manager Of the B. & A.

By VAUGHAN KESTER

With the assistant treasurer Dan's relations were entirely cordial. Holt was a much younger man than Kerr, as frank and open as the other was secret and reserved. When the 6 o'clock whistle blew he glanced up from his work and said:

"I wish you'd wait a moment, Holt. I want to see you."

Kerr had already gone home, and Miss Walton was adjusting her hat before a bit of a mirror that hung on the wall back of her desk. "All right," responded Holt cheerfully.

"Just draw up your chair," said Oakley, handing his papers to him. At first Holt did not understand; then he began to whistle softly and fell to checking off the various cuts with his forefinger.

"What do you think of the job, Byron?" inquired Oakley.

"Well, I'm glad I don't get laid off, that's sure. Say, just bear in mind that I'm going to be married this summer."

"You needn't worry; only I didn't know that."

"Well, please don't forget it, Mr. Oakley."

Holt ran over the cuts again. Then he asked:

"Who's going to stand for this? You or the old man? I hear he was in town last night."

"I stand for it, but of course he approves."

"I'll bet he approves," and the assistant treasurer grinned. "This is the sort of thing that suits him right down to the ground."

"How about the hands? Do you know if they are members of any union?"

"No, but there'll be lively times ahead for you. They are a great lot of kickers here."

"Wait until I get through. I haven't touched the shops yet. That's to come later. I'll skin closer before I'm done." Oakley got up and lit his pipe. "The plant must make some sort of a showing. We can't continue at the rate we have been going. I suppose you know what sort of shape it would leave the town in if the shops were closed."

"Very poor shape, I should say. Why, it's the money that goes in and out of this office twice a month that keeps the town alive. It couldn't exist a day without that."

"Then it behooves us to see to it that nothing happens to the shops or road. I am sorry for the men I am laying off, but it can't be helped."

"I see you are going to chuck Hoadley out of his good thing at the Junction. If he was half white he'd a gone long ago. He must lay awake nights figuring how he can keep decently busy."

"How do you think it's going to work?"

"Oh, it will work all right, because it has to, but they'll all be cussing you," with great good humor. "What's the matter anyhow? Did the old man throw a fit at the size of the payroll?"

"Not exactly, but he came down here with his mind made up to sell the road to the M. and W."

"You don't say so!"

"I talked him out of that, but we must make a showing, for he's good and tired and may dump the whole business any day."

"Well, if he does that there'll be no marrying or giving in marriage for me this summer. It will be just like a Shaker settlement where I am concerned."

Dan laughed. "Oh, you'd be all right, Holt. You'd get something else or the M. and W. would keep you on."

"I don't know about that. A new management generally means a clean sweep all round, and my berth's a pretty good one."

In some manner a rumor of the changes Oakley proposed making did get abroad, and he was promptly made aware that his popularity in Antioch was a thing of the past. He was regarded as an oppressor from whom some elaborate and wanton tyranny might be expected. While General Cornish suffered their inefficiency, his easy going predecessors had been content to draw their salaries and let it go at that, a line of conduct which Antioch held to be entirely proper. This new man, however, was clearly an upstart, cursed with an insane and destructive ambition to earn money for the road. Suppose it did not pay. Cornish could go down into his pocket for the difference, just as he had always done.

What the town did not know and what it would not have believed even if it had been told was that the general had been on the point of selling, a change that would have brought hardship to every one. The majority of the men in the shops owned their own homes, and these homes represented the savings of years. The sudden exodus of two or three hundred families meant of necessity widespread ruin. Those who were forced to go away would have to sacrifice everything they possessed to get away, while those who remained would be scarcely better off. But Antioch never considered such a radical move as even remotely possible. It counted the shops a fixture. They had always been there, and for this sufficient reason they would always remain.

The days wore on, one very like another, with their spring heat and lethargy. Occasionally Oakley saw Miss Emory on the street to bow to, but not to speak with. While he was grateful for these escapes he found himself thinking of her very often. He fancied—and he was not far wrong—that she was finding Antioch very dull. He wondered, too, if she was seeing much of Ryder. He imagined that she was, and here again he was not far wrong. Now and then he was seized with what he felt to be a weak desire to call, but he always thought better of it in time and was always grateful he had not succumbed to the impulse. But her mere presence in Antioch seemed to make him dissatisfied and resentful of its limitations. Ordinarily he was not critical of his surroundings. Until she came, that he was without companionship and that the town was given over to a deadly inertia which expressed itself in the collapsed ambition of nearly every man and woman he knew had scarcely affected him, beyond giving him a sense of mild wonder.

He had heard nothing of his father, and in the pressure of his work and freshened interest in the fortunes of the Huckleberry had hardly given him a second thought. He felt that since he had sent money to him he was in a measure relieved of all further responsibility. If his father did not wish to come to him, that was his own affair. He had placed no obstacle in his way.

CHAPTER V.

LATE one afternoon, as Oakley sat at his desk in the broad streak of yellow light that the sun sent in through the west windows, he heard a step on the narrow board walk that ran between the building and the tracks. The last shrill shriek of No. 7, as usual, half an hour late, had just died out in the distance, and the informal committee of town loafers which met each train was plodding up Main street to the postoffice in solemn silence.

He glanced around as the door into the yards opened. He saw a tall, gaunt man of sixty-five, a little stoop shouldered and carrying his weight heavily and solidly. His large head was sunk between broad shoulders. It was covered by a wonderful growth of iron gray hair. The face was clean shaven and had the look of a placid mask. There was a curious repose in the man's attitude as he stood with a big hand—the hand of an artisan—resting loosely on the knob of the door.

"Is it you, Dannie?"

The smile that accompanied the words was at once anxious, hesitating and inquiring. He closed the door with awkward care and, coming a step nearer, put out his hand. Oakley, breathing hard, rose hastily from his chair and stood leaning against the corner of his desk, as if he needed its support. He was white to the lips.

There was a long pause while the two men looked into each other's eyes.

"Don't you know me, Dannie?" wistfully. Dan said nothing, but he extended his hand, and his father's fingers closed about it with a mighty pressure. Then quite abruptly Roger Oakley turned and walked over to the window. Once more there was absolute silence in the room save for the ticking of the clock and the buzzing of a solitary fly high up on the ceiling.

The old convict was the first to break the tense stillness.

"I had about made up my mind I should never see you again, Dannie. When your mother died and you came west it sort of wiped out the little there was between me and the living. In fact, I really didn't know you would care to see me, and when Hart told me you wished me to come to you and had sent the money I could hardly believe it."

Here the words failed him utterly. He turned slowly and looked into his son's face long and lovingly. "I've thought of you as a little boy for all these years, Dannie, as no higher than that," dropping his hand to his hip. "And here you are a man grown. But you got your mother's look. I'd have known you by it among a thousand."

If Dan had felt any fear of his father it had left him the instant he entered the room. Whatever he might have done, whatever he might have been, there was no question as to the manner of man he had become. He stepped to his son's side and took his hand in one of his own.

"You've made a man of yourself. I can see that. What do you do here for a living?"

Dan laughed queerly.

"I am the general manager of the railroad, father," nodding toward the station and the yards. "But it's not much to brag about. It's only a one horse line," he added.

"No, you don't mean it, Dannie?" And he could see that his father was profoundly impressed. He put up his free hand and gently patted Dan's head as though he were indeed the little boy he remembered.

"Did you have an easy trip west, father?" Oakley asked. "You must be tired."

"Not a bit, Dannie. It was wonderful. I'd been shut off from it all for more than twenty years, and each mile was taking me nearer you."

The warm yellow light was beginning to fade from the room. It was growing late.

"I guess we'd better go uptown to the hotel and have our supper. Where is your trunk? At the station?"

"I've got nothing but a bundle. It's at the door."

Dan locked his desk, and they left the office.

"Is it all yours?" Roger Oakley asked, pausing as they crossed the yards to glance up and down the curving tracks.

"It's part of the property I manage. It belongs to General Cornish, who holds most of the stock."

"And the train I came on, Dannie—who owned that?"

"At Buckhorn Junction, where you changed cars for the last time, you caught our local express. It runs through to a place called Harrison—the terminus of the line. This is only a branch road, you know."

But the explanation was lost on his father. His son's relation to the road was a magnificent fact which he pondered with simple pleasure.

After their supper at the hotel they went upstairs. Roger Oakley had been given a room next his son's. It was the same room General Cornish had occupied when he was in Antioch.

"Would you like to put away your things now?" asked Dan as he placed his father's bundle, which he had carried uptown from the office, on the bed.

"I'll do that by and by. There ain't much there—just a few little things I've managed to keep or that have been given me."

Dan pushed two chairs before an open window that overlooked the square. His father had taken a huge blackened meerschaum from its case and was carefully filling it from a leather pouch.

"You don't mind if I light my pipe?" he inquired.

"Not a bit. I've one in my pocket, but it's not nearly as fine as yours."

"Our warden gave it to me one Christmas, and I've smoked it ever since. He was a very good man, Dannie. It's the old warden I'm speaking of, not Kenyon, the new one, though he's a good man too."

Dan wondered where he had heard the name of Kenyon before; then he remembered—it was at the Emorys'.

"Try some of my tobacco, Dannie," passing the pouch.

For a time the two men sat in silence, blowing clouds of white smoke out into the night.

Roger Oakley hitched his chair nearer his son's and rested a heavy hand on his knee. "I like it here," he said.

"Do you? I am glad."

"What will be the chances of my finding work? You know I'm a cabinetmaker by trade."

"There's no need of your working, so don't worry about that."

"But I must work, Dannie. I ain't used to sitting still and doing nothing."

"Well," said Oakley, willing to humor him, "there are the car shops."

"Can you get me in?"

"Oh, yes, when you are ready to start. I'll have McClintock, the master mechanic, find something in your line for you to do."

"I'll need to get a kit of tools."

"I guess McClintock can arrange that too. I'll see him about it when you are ready."

"Then that's settled. I'll begin in the morning," with quiet determination.

"But don't you want to look around first?"

"I'll have my Sundays for that." And Dan saw that there was no use in arguing the point with him. He was bent on having his own way.

The old convict filled his lungs with a deep, free breath. "Yes, I'm going to like it. I always did like a small town anyhow. Tell me about yourself, Dannie. How do you happen to be here?"

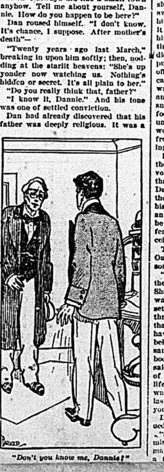
Dan roused himself. "I don't know. It's chance, I suppose. After mother's death"—

"Twenty years ago last March," breaking in upon him softly; then, nodding at the starlit heavens: "She's up yonder now watching us. Nothing's hidden or secret. It's all plain to her."

"Do you really think that, father?"

"I know it, Dannie." And his tone was one of settled conviction.

Dan had already discovered that his father was deeply religious. It was a faith the like of which had not descended to his own day and generation.



"Don't you know me, Dannie?"

"Well, I had it rather hard for awhile," going back to his story.

"Yes," with keen sympathy. "You were nothing but a little boy."

"Finally I was lucky enough to get a place as a newsboy on a train. I sold papers until I was sixteen and then began braking. I wanted to be an engineer, but I guess my ability lay in another direction. At any rate, they took me off the road and gave me an office position instead. I got to be a division superintendent, and then I met General Cornish. He is one of the directors of the line I was with at the time. Three months ago he made me an offer to take hold here, and so here I am."

"And you've never been back home, Dannie?"

"Never once. I've wanted to go, but I couldn't."

He hoped his father would understand.

"Well, there ain't much to take you there but her grave. I wish she might have lived. You'd have been a great happiness to her, and she got very little happiness for her portion any way you look at it. We were only just married when the war came, and I was gone four years. Then there was about eleven years when we were getting on nicely. We had money put by and owned our own home. Can you remember it, Dannie, the old brick place on the corner across from the postoffice? A new Methodist church stands there now. It was sold to get money for my lawyer when the big trouble came. Afterward, when everything was spent, she must have found it very hard to make a living for herself and you."

"She did," said Dan gently. "But she managed somehow to keep a roof over our heads."

"When the law sets out to punish it doesn't stop with the guilty only. When I went to her grave and saw there were flowers growing on it and that it was being cared for it told me what you were. She was a very brave woman, Dannie. You know that was an awful thing about Sharp."

Dan turned toward him quickly.

"Why do you speak of it? It's all past now."

"I'd sort of like to tell you about it."

There was a long pause, and he continued:

"Sharp and I had been enemies for a long time. It started back before the war, when he wanted to marry your mother. We both enlisted in the same regiment, and somehow the trouble kept alive. He was a bit of a bully, and I was counted a handy man with my fists too. The regiment was always trying to get us into the ring together, but we knew it was dangerous. We had sense enough for that. I won't say he would have done it, but I never felt safe when there was a fight on in all those four years. It's easy enough to shoot the man in front of you and no one be the wiser. Many a score's been settled that way. When we got home again we didn't get along any better. He was a drinking man and had no control over himself when liquor got the best of him. I did my share in keeping the feud alive. What he said of me and what I said of him generally reached both of us in time, as you can fancy.

"At last, when I joined the church, I concluded it wasn't right to hate a man the way I hated Sharp, for, you see, he'd never really done anything to me.

"One day I stopped in at the smithy—he was a blacksmith—to have a talk with him and see if we couldn't patch it up somehow and be friends. It was a Saturday afternoon, and he'd been drinking more than was good for him.

"I hadn't hardly got the first words out when he came at me with a big sledge in his hand, all in a rage and swearing he'd have my life. I pushed him off and started for the door. I saw it was no use to try to reason with him, but he came at me again, and this time he struck me with his sledge. It did no harm, though it hurt, and I pushed him out of my way and backed off toward the door. The lock was caught, and before I could open it he was within striking distance again and I had to turn to defend myself. I snatched up a bar of iron perhaps a foot long. I had kept my temper down until then, but the moment I had a weapon in my hand it got clean away from me, and in an instant I was fighting—just as he was fighting—to kill."

Roger Oakley had told the story of the murder in a hard, emotionless voice, but Dan saw in the half light that his face was pale and drawn. Dan found it difficult to associate the thought of violence with the man at his side, whose whole manner spoke of an unusual restraint and control. That he had killed a man, even in self defense, seemed preposterous and inconceivable.

There was a part of the story Roger Oakley could not tell and which his son had no desire to hear.

"People said afterward that I'd gone there purposely to pick a quarrel with Sharp, and his helper, who, it seems, was in the yard back of the smithy setting a wagon tire, swore he saw me through a window as I entered and that I struck the first blow. He may have seen only the end of it and really believed I did begin it, but that's a sample of how things got twisted. Nobody believed my motive was what I said it was. The jury found me guilty of murder, and the judge gave me a life sentence. A good deal of a fuss was made over what I did at the fire last winter. Hart told me he'd sent you the papers."

Dan nodded, and his father continued:

"Some ladies who were interested in mission work at the prison took the matter up and got me my pardon. It's a fearful and a wicked thing for a man to lose his temper, Dannie. At first I was bitter against every one who had a hand in sending me to prison, but I've put that all from my heart. It was right I should be punished."

He rose from his chair, striking the ashes from his pipe.

"Ain't it very late, Dannie? I'll just put away my things, and then we can go to bed. I didn't mean to keep you up."

Oakley watched his precise and orderly arrangement of his few belongings. He could see that it was a part of the prison discipline under which he had lived for almost a quarter of a century. When the contents of his bundle were disposed of to his satisfaction he put on a pair of steel rimmed spectacles with large, round glasses and took up a well thumbed Bible, which he had placed at one side.

"I hope you haven't forgotten this book, Dannie," tapping it softly with a heavy forefinger.

CHAPTER VI.

ROGER OAKLEY went to work in the car shops the day following his arrival in Antioch.

Dan sought to dissuade him, but he was stubbornness itself, and the latter realized that the only thing to do was to let him alone and not seek to control him.

After all, if he would be happier at work, it was no one's affair but his own.

It never occurred to the old convict that pride might have to do with the stand Dan took in the matter.

He was wonderfully gentle and affectionate, with a quaint, unworldly simplicity that was rather pathetic. His one anxiety was to please Dan, but in spite of this anxiety once a conviction took possession of him he clung to it with unshaken tenacity in the face of every argument his son could bring to bear.

Under the inspiration of his newly acquired freedom he developed in unexpected ways. As soon as he felt that his place in the shops was secure and that he was not to be interfered with he joined the church. Its services occupied most of his spare time. Every Thursday night found him at prayer meeting. Twice each Sunday he went to church, and by missing his dinner he managed to take part in the Sunday school exercises. A social threw him into a flutter of pleased expectancy. Not content with what his church offered, irrespective of creed, he joined every society in the place of a religious or temperance nature and was a zealous and active worker among such of the heathen as flourished in Antioch. There was a stern Old Testament flavor to his faith. He would have dragged the erring from their peril by main strength and have regulated their morals by legal enactments. Those of the men with whom he came in contact in the shops treated him with the utmost respect partly on his own account and partly because of Dan.

Half of all he earned he gave to the church. The remainder of his slender income he divided again into two equal parts. One of these he used for his personal needs, the other disappeared mysteriously. He was putting it by for Dannie.

It was a disappointment to him that his son took only the most casual interest in religious matters. He comforted himself, however, with the remembrance that at his age his own interest had been merely traditional. It was only after his great trouble that the awakening came. He was quite certain Dannie would experience this awakening, too, some day.

It was a hot, breathless morning in May. The machinery in the shops droned on and on, with the lazy, softened hum of revolving wheels or the swish of swiftly passing belts. A freight was cutting out cars in the yards. It was rather noisy and bumped discordantly in and out of the sidings.

Dan Oakley was the sole tenant of the office, but presently McClintock wandered in from the hot out of doors to talk over certain repairs he wished undertaken in the shops. He was a typical American mechanic, and Oakley liked him, as he always liked the man who knew his business and earned his pay.

They discussed the repairs, and then Oakley asked, "How's my father getting along, Milt?"

"Oh, all right! He's a little slow, that's all."

"What's he on now?"

"Those blue line cars that came in last month."

"There isn't much in that batch. I had to figure close to get the work. Keep the men moving."

"They are about done. I'll put the painters on the job tomorrow."

"That's good."

McClintock went over to the water cooler in the corner and filled a stemless tumbler with ice water.

"We'll be ready to send them up to Buckhorn the last of next week. Is there anything else in sight?"

He gulped down the water at a single swallow.

"No, not at present, but there are one or two pretty fair orders coming in next month that I was lucky enough to pick up in Chicago. Isn't there any work of our own we can go at while things are slack?"

"Lots of it," wiping his hands on the legs of his greasy overalls. "All our day coaches need paint and some want new upholstery."

"We'd better go at that, then."

"All right. I'll take a look at the cars in the yards and see what I can put out in place of those we call in. There's no use talking, Mr. Oakley, you've done big things for the shops," he added.

"Well, I am getting some work for them, and while there isn't much profit in it, perhaps, it's a great deal better than being idle."

"Just a whole lot," agreed McClintock.

"I think I can pick up contracts enough to keep us busy through the summer. I understand you've always had to shut down."

"Yes, or half time," disgustedly.

"I guess we can worry through without that; at any rate, I want to," observed Oakley.

"I'll go see how I can manage about our own repairs," said McClintock.

He went out, and from the window Oakley saw him with a bunch of keys in his hand going in the direction of a line of battered day coaches on one of the sidings. The door opened again almost immediately to admit Griff Ryder. This was almost the last person in Antioch from whom Dan was expecting a call. The editor's cordiality as he greeted him made him instantly suspect that some favor was wanted. Most people who came to the office wanted favors. Usually it was either a pass or a concession on freight.

As a rule, Kerr met all such applicants. His manner fitted him for just such interviews, and he had no gift for popularity, which suffered in consequence.

Ryder pushed a chair over beside Oakley's and seated himself. By sliding well down on his spine he managed to reach the low sill of the window with his feet. He seemed to admire the effect, for he studied them in silence for a moment.

"There's a little matter I want to speak to you about, Oakley. I've been intending to run in for the past week, but I have been so busy I couldn't."

Oakley nodded for him to go on.

"In the first place, I'd like to feel that you were for Kenyon. You can be of a great deal of use to us this election. It's going to be close, and Kenyon's a pretty decent sort of a chap to have come out of these parts. You ought to take an interest in seeing him re-elected."

Oakley surmised that this was the merest flattery intended to tickle his vanity. He answered promptly that he didn't feel the slightest interest in politics one way or the other.

"Well, but one good fellow ought to wish to see another good fellow get what he's after, and you can help us if you've a mind to. But this isn't what I've come for. It's about Hoadley."

"What about Hoadley?" quickly.

"He's got the idea that his days with the Huckleberry are about numbered."

"I haven't said so."

"I know you haven't."

"Then what is he kicking about? When he's to go he'll hear of it from me."

"But, just the same, it's in the air that there's to be a shakeup and that a number of men, and Hoadley among them, are going to be laid off. Now, he's another good fellow, and he's a friend of mine, and I told him I'd come in and fix it up with you."

"I don't think you can fix it up with me, Mr. Ryder. Just the same, I'd like to know how this got out."

"Then there is to be a shakeup?"

Oakley bit his lips. "You seem to take it for granted there is to be."

"I guess there's something back of the rumor."

"I may as well tell you why Hoadley's got to go."

"Oh, he's to go then? I thought my information was correct."

"In the first place he's not needed, and in the second place he's a lazy loafer. The road must earn its keep. General Cornish is sick of putting his hand in his pocket every six months to keep it out of bankruptcy. You are enough of a business man to know he won't stand that sort of thing forever. Of course I am sorry for Hoadley if he needs the money, but some one's got to suffer, and he happens to be the one. I'll take on his work myself. I can do it, and that's a salary saved. I haven't any personal feeling in the matter. The fact that I don't like him, as it happens, has nothing to do with it. If he were my own brother he'd have to get out."

"I can't see that one man more or less is going to make such a difference, Oakley," Ryder urged, with what he intended should be an air of frank good fellowship.

"Can't you?" with chilly dignity. Oakley was slow to anger, but he had always fought stubbornly for what he felt was due him, and he wished the editor to understand that the management of the B. and A. was distinctly not his province.

"In the second place he's a lazy loafer."

Ryder's eyes were half closed, and only a narrow slit of color showed between the lids.

"I am very much afraid we won't hit it off. I begin to see we aren't going to get on. I want you to keep Hoadley as a personal favor to me. Just wait until I finish. If you are going in for reform I may have it in my power to be of some service to you. You will need some backing here, and even a country newspaper can manufacture public sentiment. Now if we aren't to be friends you will find me on the other side and working just as hard against you as I am willing to work for you if you let Hoadley stay."

Oakley jumped up.

"I don't allow anybody to talk like that to me. I am running this for Cornish. They are his interests, not mine, and you can start in and manufacture all the public sentiment you please." Then he cooled down a bit and felt ashamed of hi[illegible] for the outburst.

"I am not going to be unfair to any one if I can help it. But if the road's earnings don't meet the operating expenses the general will sell it to the M. and W. Do you understand what that means? It will knock Antioch higher than a kite, for the shops will be closed. I guess when all hands get that through their heads they will take it easier."

"That's just the point I made. Who is going to enlighten them if it isn't me? I don't suppose you will care to go around telling everybody what a fine fellow you are and how thankful they should be that you have stopped their wages. We can work double, Oakley. I want Hoadley kept because he's promised me his influence for Kenyon if I'd exert myself in his behalf. He's of importance up at the Junction. Of course we know he's a drunken beast, but that's got nothing to do with it."

"I am sorry, but he's got to go," said Oakley doggedly. "A one horse railroad can't carry dead timber."

"Very well." And Ryder pulled in his legs and rose slowly from his chair. "If you can't and won't see it as I do it's your lookout."

Oakley laughed shortly.

"I guess I'll be able to meet the situation, Mr. Ryder."

He scouted the idea that Ryder with his little country newspaper could either help or harm him.

CHAPTER VII.

DR. EMORY and Dan were standing on the street corner before the hotel. Oakley had just come uptown from the office. He was full of awkward excuses and apologies, but Dr. Emory cut them short.

"I suppose I've a right to be angry at the way you've avoided us, but I'm not. On the contrary, I'm going to take you home to dinner with me."

If Dan had consulted his preferences in the matter, he would have begged off, but he felt he couldn't without giving offense, so he allowed the doctor to lead him away, but he didn't appear as pleased or as grateful as he should have been at this temporary release from the low diet of the American House.

Miss Emory was waiting for her father on the porch. An errand of hers had taken him downtown.

She seemed surprised to see Oakley, but was graciously disposed toward him. While he fell short of her standards, he was decidedly superior to the local youth with whom she had at first been inclined to class him. Truth to tell, the local youth fought rather shy of the doctor's beautiful daughter. Mr. Burt Smith, the gentlemanly druggist and acknowledged social leader, who was much sought after by the most exclusive circles in such centers of fashion as Buckhorn and Harrison, had been so chilled by her manner when, meeting her on the street, he had attempted to revive an acquaintance which dated back to their childhood that he was a mental wreck for days afterward and had hardly dared trust himself to fill even the simplest prescription.

Dr. Emory excused himself and went into the house. Dan made himself comfortable on the steps at Miss Emory's side. In the very nearness there was something luxurious and satisfying. He was silent, because he feared the antagonism of speech.

"I was with friends of yours this afternoon, Mr. Oakley," she said by way of starting the conversation.

"Friends of mine here?"

"Yes; the Joyces."

"I must go around and see them. They have been very kind to my father," said Dan, with hearty good will.

"How long is your father to remain in Antioch, Mr. Oakley?" inquired Constance.

"As long as I remain, I suppose. There are only the two of us, you know."

"What does he find to do here?"

"Oh," laughed Dan, "he finds plenty to do. His energy is something dreadful. Then, too, he's employed at the shops. That keeps him pretty busy, you see."

But Miss Emory hadn't known this before. She elevated her eyebrows in mild surprise. She was not sure she understood.

"I didn't know that he was one of the officers of the road," with deceptive indifference.

"He's not. He's a cabinetmaker," explained the literal Oakley, to whom a cabinetmaker was quite as respectable as any one else. There was a brief pause, while Constance turned this over in her mind. It struck her as very singular that Oakley's father should be one of the hands. Perhaps she credited him with a sensitiveness of which he was entirely innocent.

Your Doctor

Can cure your Cough or Cold, no question about that, but—why go to all the trouble and inconvenience of looking him up, and then of having his prescription filled, when you can step into any drug store in Canada and obtain a bottle of SHILOH'S CURE for a quarter.

Why pay two to five dollars when a twenty-five cent bottle of SHILOH will cure you as quickly?

Why not do as hundreds of thousands of Canadians have done for the past thirty-four years: let SHILOH be your doctor whenever a Cough or Cold appears.

SHILOH will cure you, and all druggists back up this statement with a positive guarantee.

The next time you have a Cough or Cold cure it with

In "Herpicide," the New Scientific and Successful Dandruff Treatment.

Have you dandruff? Then you have a contagious parasitic disease, unpleasant, unhealthy and one that will eventually lead to baldness. To cure it you must destroy the parasite that eats at the root of the hair. The only preparation for destroying these germs is Newbro's Herpicide. Charles Klein, of Laramie, Wyo., says: "Herpicide allayed the itching, cured the dandruff and stopped my hair's falling out, and it is bringing a new crop of hair." Herpicide is free from grease or dangerous drugs, and makes hair glossy and soft as silk. One bottle will convince you of its merits. Sold by leading druggists. A Mercenary Affair

By EDITH M. DOANE

Copyright, 1906, by F. C. Eastment

When Mrs. Palmer announced the engagement of her daughter Helen to James Corey, every one wondered why on earth Helen had not chosen a younger man.

In almost in the same breath it leaked out that Mr. Palmer, who was always trading on tips and going broke in the market, had plunged once too often—had indeed been face to face with bankruptcy until James Corey came to his rescue.

Then the world, as represented by society in Glenwood Park—proffered congratulations and smiled discreetly. Of course if the Palmers accepted James Corey's money, they must accept its giver too.

The Park was apt to assemble informally at the Country club for 5 o'clock tea. There was something pleasantly cozy in gathering around the low china laden table on the wide clubhouse porch. But now chocolate cooled, forgotten, tea boiled quietly away, while their possessors eagerly discussed this marriage of convenience in their midst.

"The poor girl is deliberately sacrificing herself," declared Mrs. Lawrence, tragically waving a tea cake.

"And she is so pretty," put in little Mrs. Brooks irrelevantly.

"Her youth has been bartered for gold," said Mrs. Ellis, who had a fondness for light fiction.

"And be is so much older."

"Money isn't everything."

"Perhaps even yet she may be saved from it," faltered little Mrs. Brooks hopefully.

"Why save her?" briskly interrupted Mrs. Wylie, joining the group and taking the cup of fragrant tea offered her. "Mr. Corey is honorable, charitable, rich—a good man in every respect. She ought to be proud of him. I'm sure I can't imagine what more she could want."

"WHAT'S THIS YOU'VE DONE?" HE DEMANDED VEHEMENTLY.

Five pairs of eyes confronted Mrs. Wylie in shocked surprise.

"Well, I'm sure I hope she takes your view of it," said Mrs Lawrence gloomily.

"If he only were younger. He's as old as—as Father Abraham."

"Oh, if Mr. Palmer had not been in such sore straits!"

"Still, it is lovely to be able to cling to one's faith in human nature as you do."

"I'm clinging to nothing," said Mrs. Wylie stubbornly; "but, for my part, I think she's a very lucky girl."

"Oh, of course everybody respects him."

"And he is a very rich man."

"But it is so evident that she did it to save her father."

"Besides, there is her cousin, Tom Breuster," said Mrs. Brooks softly.

Tom Breuster was an ordinary sort of a fellow—fairly good looking, fairly clever—in fact, he did not amount to much one way or the other, but he happened to imagine himself very much in love with Helen and when her engagement was announced burst in on his aunt in a storm of indignation.

"What's this you've done?" he demanded vehemently. "Why was I kept in ignorance all this time?"

"I don't understand you," returned Mrs. Palmer coldly.

"Don't you?" he went on ruthlessly. "Then I'll explain. You have engaged Helen to a man for whom she has not the smallest spark of affection. To save yourselves—for the sake of mere money, mere worldly position—you and her father have consented to sacrifice that poor girl, body and soul."

"You must be insane to talk to me like this," returned his aunt icily. "There is no reason why Helen should not marry Mr. Corey or any one else she chooses."

"Let us confine ourselves to Mr. Corey. She has no right to marry him at all events."

"No?" said she. "And why?"

"Because a loveless marriage can never be right."

"But who says it isn't a love match?" she went on, forgetting her anger in her desire to convince him of the futility of interfering with Helen's engagement. "Mr. Corey is a charming man. Why should not Helen care for him?"

"She doesn't. It isn't her own doing. You are sacrificing her."

"As though I could make Helen marry any one she did not wish to!" returned Mrs. Palmer, with a low laugh. "My dear boy, if you feel like that, pray go away until you come to your senses."

"I shall not go away until I have seen Helen," he said doggedly.

"Tom, I beg of you"—

"Why are you two glowering at each other like Kilkenny cats?" cried a fresh young voice from the doorway. "How are you, Tommy?" and Helen Palmer, slender, dark eyed, clad all in soft shimmering gray, entered the room and held out her hand in smiling greeting.

Now that the moment had arrived, words failed him.

Noting his hesitation, she smiled at him again. "Have you come to proffer your congratulations in person?" she asked shyly.

"No, not quite," he said. "Still I suppose one is bound to say something about the clever bargain you have made. That you of all people should prefer money to love!"

"What a perfectly horrid thing to say," she returned indignantly. "Do you suppose because you are a member of the family you are privileged to be as disagreeable as you like?"

"I suppose loving you is being disagreeable," he returned moodily. Mrs. Palmer had slipped from the room, and they were both too intent to hear other footsteps that came nearer up the gravel walk, up the steps, and were muffled by the heavy rugs on the porch outside.

"Loving me! How perfectly absurd! Why didn't you say so before? And not come here now"—

"I came to save you from sacrificing yourself to a loveless marriage," he returned grandiloquently.

"Oh, Tommy, you are too funny," she laughed softly. She raised her eyes and looked steadily into his weak, good looking face.

"Tommy," she said gently, "you must not think that I have any feeling but real honest liking for Mr. Corey. I respect him—I care for him"—

"Of course, he is a very rich man. I understand."

"He is at all events the very best man I have ever met," she returned indignantly. "Of course he has been awfully good about father's troubles, but I should have loved him just the same," she went on, with quick conviction. "He is so good, so kind, so just"—

"Why don't you say that he has money and can shower that upon you?"

"I wish you to understand," she said coldly, "that, while I appreciate Mr. Corey's money, I love him for himself."

Suddenly her mouth quivered and two large tears strolled down her cheeks. "I am so worried about all this," she said unsteadily. "Every one thinks I care for his money. Will no one believe"—

The curtains at the long open window suddenly parted.

"I believe it. Do I count?" said James Corey as he entered the room.

After all, fate sometimes consents to interfere benignly, even in a mercenary affair.

Scotland's Great Genius.

In one of those interesting literary conversations the record of which adds so much to the charm of Boswell's "Johnson" the name of George Buchanan, one of the greatest scholars of the sixteenth century and the most exquisite Latinist of modern times, was mentioned. A Scotsman who was present, knowing the doctor's antipathies and seeing, as he thought, an opportunity of cornering him, said, "Ah, Dr. Johnson, what would you have said of Buchanan had be been an Englishman?" "Why, sir," said Johnson after a little pause, "I should not have said of Buchanan had he been an Englishman what I will now say of him as a Scotsman—that he was the only man of genius his country has produced." Buchanan's consummate ability was recognized by his contemporaries; but, like many another genius before and since, he had his share of "the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune." He read Livy with Mary, queen of Scots, and was appointed tutor to her son, James I. Political intrigues drove him to the continent, where he taught at Bordeaux and had Montaigne among his pupils. In his old age he returned home and wrote his "History of Scotland" and died so poor that his means were insufficient to defray the expenses of his funeral.—London Express.

Pages 40-60.

In the little town of C. lived three maiden sisters by the name of Paige. They were "neat," as the villagers call it, in its most accentuated form, and they loved the small boy best afar off, in consequence of which they were a bright and shining mark for the pranks that youth seems to originate for its scorners.

One day the front gate strayed from its wonted place with the assistance of two small neighbors. Then came a reprimand from each of the old maids and barbed repartee in return, as usual. Following this exchange came a complaint to the parents of the offenders.

At the table that night papa was requested to reprove Jim and Ted for impertinence to the Misses Paige.

"What did you say to them?" demanded papa, with the requisite frown.

"Didn't sarse them at all," replied Jim, with a grin. "I only said, 'Page forty, page fifty and page sixty,' an' they got mad at it."

Ted caught sight of pa's twitching muscles and added, "Gee, but they were just hoppin'."

"Well, don't let it happen again," answered pa as he hastily attacked a piece of apple pie.—New York Press.

Ellery's Dilemma

By Constance D'Arcy Mackay

Copyright, 1906, by Mary Cunningham

"What have modern inventions done for us, I'd like to know?" said Jonas Fert, the village philosopher, from his seat on a barrel in the general store.

"They've made life easier," answered Ellery Brown. It was an old discussion of theirs, a topic they fell back on when all else failed. Jonas dwelt on the numerous accidents that were unknown in leisurely stagecoach days. Ellery talked of the wonders of machinery and electricity.

"Pooh!" sniffed Jonas. "Who's any better off for the shocks telegrams bring 'em? And as for electric lights—a pretty girl's face used to look twice as well when there were only candles shining! Not that you'd care about that," he added slyly, and Ellery reddened. Every one knew that he was the shiest man in all Elmway village.

As a child he became speechless with confusion when any one noticed him, he stammered and stuttered his way through the gawky age, and when he arrived at young manhood, though popular among his own sex, the sight of a girl's face, particularly a charming one, would send him into an agony of self consciousness, so much so that always he took the opposite side of the road when he saw a feminine acquaintance approaching. He shunned picnics and socials as if they were a pestilence. He would rather have died than taken a girl rowing or driving. His neighbors laughed and wondered what would happen should Ellery fall in love. Ellery himself never considered the subject, and that may have been the reason why love took him unawares.

"ARABELLA, I LOVE YOU."

He was sitting in church one bright Sunday in summer when his attention was arrested by the sight of a stranger in the Hardys' pew, a slip of a girl in blue muslin, with a wide picture hat trimmed with roses.

From where he sat he could see the delicately tinted oval of her cheek and the pale gold of her wavy hair. Then she turned her head, and their eyes met. Hers were dark gray, fringed with heavy lashes. Ellery's heart began a ridiculous tattoo, the hands that were holding his book trembled, and he colored to the roots of his hair.

"It's Arabella Hawkins," whispered some one behind him. Every now and then Ellery ventured a glance in her direction. The sun, slanting through one of the small stained glass windows, touched her with rainbow colors utterly dazzling. "I wish I could walk home with her," sighed Ellery. "But do I dare?"

"If you don't some one else will," his common sense said, and when the last hymn had been sung and the people were moving slowly down the aisles Ellery pressed forward, his courage at white heat. He spoke a word of greeting to Mrs. Hardy and then was presented to Arabella.

How it happened he scarcely knew, but soon he and his divinity were strolling along toward the Hardys', and she was telling him that she had come from Centerville for a two weeks' visit. She was as talkative as she was pretty and had a faculty of putting him at his ease. To Ellery it was an experience as delightful as it was novel, and he resolved to repeat it by calling the next evening.

And, though in the days that followed his footsteps were not the only ones that wended their way to the Hardy gate, he managed to monopolize the greater share of Arabella's time. His shyness was gradually wearing away, but there was one question he longed to ask and could not.

In vain he rehearsed it. Alone in his room it was easy enough to say, "Arabella, will you marry me?" Yet when he was with her the words seemed to cleave to the roof of his mouth. Over and over again he led up to it only to halt miserably when the crucial moment came.

"Could you—could you"— he stammered on one of these occasions.

"Could I what, Ellery?" queried Arabella. They had gone as far as Christian names.

"Could you—go driving with me tomorrow?" It was not in the least what he had meant to say, yet as he mopped his brow it vaguely occurred to him that perhaps in a buggy it would be easier.

But even there, with Arabella by his side, words failed him.

"Will you—will you"— he began.

"Will I what, Ellery?" said Arabella very sweetly and patiently.

"Will you—have an ice cream soda at the drug store on the way back?"

"Certainly," answered Arabella, a shade of disappointment in her voice.

She liked the broad shouldered, honest eyed young fellow more than she admitted to any one save herself, though she never had had so bashful a suitor.

And yet she knew Ellery was no coward. His townsfolk had told her of the courageous things he had done—how he had stopped a runaway horse at the risk of his own life and how one bitter winter day he had crawled to the edge of an ice hole in the river to rescue the eldest Hardy child who clung there, half frozen.

As for Ellery, he felt that time was passing and he was no nearer the goal. "It's terrible," he moaned, "to think I've gone this far and can't go further!" Matters were getting desperate.

"Better hurry up, Ellery!" his friends urged him. "There's a fellow in her own town wants her just as much as you do!"

Advice came thick and fast.

"Why don't you write it?" drawled one waggish acquaintance. "And then she'll be sure to get it."

"Modern invention has done a good many things," chuckled old Jonas Fert. "It's given us telegraphs and motor boats and automobiles, but there's one thing it hasn't done. It hasn't made it any easier to pop the question. That's just as hard today as it was a hundred years ago!"

Ellery groaned. Then his face brightened. "Modern inventions," he muttered to himself—"modern inventions! By jiminy, I've solved the problem! I'll win her yet!"

A few days later a small crate arrived for him. "Looks as if it might be a typewriter," said the station agent, but as Ellery was not given to literary pursuits this guess seemed rather improbable.

Late that night Ellery tiptoed through the Hardys' orchard, holding tight to a mysterious funnel shaped contrivance, on which he had banked all his hopes. The sleeping Arabella was wakened by a voice beneath her window. Slipping on a kimono, she leaned out to listen.

"Ellery," she whispered, "is that you?"

From the shadows beneath came his answering tones, swift and unwavering.

"Arabella, I love you. I love you more than any one in the world. I'm not worthy of you, I know, but I'll do everything I can to make you happy. Will you marry me, Arabella?"

"Yes, Ellery," said Arabella promptly. "But what's the matter with your voice? Mercy!" she ejaculated as there came a sudden whir and click. "You aren't choking, are you?"

"If I am, it's with happiness," said her rapturous suitor, coming quickly into view.

"That sounds more natural," said Arabella. There was a whispered colloquy, and later, in a happy daze, his phonograph hugged securely under his arm, they stumbled along the orchard path. "She'll never know it was done by machine," he murmured, "and since she loves me it's all right anyhow, though I suppose that when I get home I'd better destroy the record or 'twill give me clean away."

At the edge of the road a familiar figure loomed in the darkness. "That you, Ellery?" said Jonas Fert. "It's too black to see a foot in front of me. And they pretend to light this place by electricity! I tell you modern inventions"—

"Modern inventions," said the happy Ellery, "are the greatest things in the world!"

Does the Sun Change Shape?

Professor C. L. Poor as the result of careful study of heliometer measurements, confirmed by that of solar photographs, decided that the sun periodically changes its figure, being sometimes an oblate spheroid like the earth, with its equatorial diameter exceeding the polar, and sometimes a prolate spheroid, having a greater polar than equatorial diameter. His idea is that the solar globe is to be regarded as a vibrating body, having an equatorial diameter on the average slightly in excess of the polar, but changing at certain times so that the ratio of the two diameters is temporarily reversed. The period of variability, he thinks, is the same as the sun spot period. The changes of figure, if they really occur, are so small that only the most delicate observations can make them manifest, but, affecting a body of such supreme importance as the sun, they must possess much scientific interest.—London Graphic.

Pecksniff.

Writing in the Independent Review, C. C. Osborne states that the original of Pecksniff was Samuel Carter Hall, "than whom," he continues, "no man, I venture to think, ever had a larger stock of tags of morality and commonplace quotations from the poets." In 1879 he was involved in a libel action, and to his great indignation several papers referred to him as "Pecksniff." He had none of Pecksniff's coarser vices, being a teetotaler, but he was vain, officious, indiscreet, self complacent, a boastful poseur, offensively voluble and overflowed with moral platitudes. However, in spite of those failings, which marked him as outwardly like to the great hypocrite, Mr. Hall bore no real resemblance to the mean, dishonest and vicious creature depicted by Dickens.

Eye-Strain Producing Pain in the Back.

In two cases lately where the family physician suspected eye-strain as the cause, because in the first case where the pain was in the small of the back, it was bad only during school hours; in the second case where it was between the shoulders and down the spine, it was after using the eyes for a long time at close work. On being tested in both cases, astigmatism was found, and after being corrected with the proper glasses all the pain in the back disappeared in both cases. In all cases where headaches are worse after close work, shopping, or after a journey or long drive, etc., they are invariably caused by eye-strain.

We correct the eye-strain, and all the results are cured.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"DOLLY VARDEN" TO-NIGHT.

The score of "Dolly Varden," the comic opera success to be seen at the Carman to-night, was written by Julian Edwards, the composer of many notable successes. Its originality, and that peculiar quality called "catchy," made the music of "Dolly Varden" extremely popular with all lovers of bright harmony; and the excellent comedy in the book commends it to everyone who likes a clean and refreshing performance. The same elaborate production which completed the first triumph of this opera, will be seen in the presentation here to-night.

Fatal Accident Near Holloway.

VISITING LITTLE TORONTO GIRL HAD HER SKULL FRACTURED IN AN UPSET.

On the afternoon of New Year's day an accident occurred near Halloway, in Thurlow Township, which unfortunately proved to be a fatal one.

It appears that a Mrs. Thos. McKenney, of Toronto, who was visiting relatives in the township, was driving, and accompanying her was her step-daughter, Margaret McFarlane, aged eight years, and Miss J. Wilson, a sister of Mrs. McKenney. By some means the vehicle was upset and the three occupants thrown violently to the ground.

The little McFarlane girl received fatal injuries, having her skull fractured. She lingered in an unconscious condition until yesterday morning, when she passed away. Her remains were last evening taken to Toronto for interment.

Miss Wilson also received painful injuries by having her right arm fractured and being cut about the head.

Mrs. McKenney was more fortunate and escaped with slight bruises.

The unfortunate affair was a sad ending to what otherwise was to have been a family reunion on New Year's night.

The Power Question.

ALD KNOX, WRITES ON A TIMELY THOUGH MOSSGROWN SUBJECT.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Dear Sir, — On Monday evening last, at the citizens' meeting, I was pleased to hear Mayor Sulman in his address refer to the electric power question, more particularly his reference to the Moira River as a possible solution to our requirements as a city, for as you know that in this progressive age we will be away behind the times if we don't avail ourselves of the opportunity now offered us by the Provincial Government. We all know that in order to get industries located here we must have cheap power to offer as an inducement for as to everything else we have it right here. I notice that some of our citizens are advocating going away from our own city and county after the Northumberland and Durham Power Company. Now, sir, why should we be drawn away from our own river by a promoter whose only motive is, the profit he will receive as a promoter of the scheme. Now, as you know, our Provincial Government appointed the Hydro-Electric Power Commission to ascertain the available power and report on the various rivers in Ontario, which they have most thoroughly done. Now we have their report on our own Moira, which says that we can obtain at least 4,900 horse power, which those promoters of other powers seem inclined to dispute; now who shall we believe the Government Commissioners, who have no interest in the matter, or those people who are trying to sell us power from another source. If we are to wait for power to be brought from Healey's Falls we may lose many an industry that we might secure had we the power to offer. I think sir, we have no time to lose but should ask the Government for its promised assistance to finance the scheme, and have the power as soon as it can be given to us. The contract for lighting with the Trenton Power Co. will expire before very long and we should have our own to take its place and it would also be a great saving to have the power to pump the water for the city.

Some people may say that the Moira has not sufficient water the year round, but I know that the numerous lakes out north that empty into the Moira can supply the water required by damming them, and can be brought down as required; which fact has not been overlooked by the Commission.

The Commissioners' report tells us that we can get a head of 15 feet here on the city's property. Now that is one foot higher than the Trenton Power Company have and there would be no loss of power in transmission, and if more is required it can be brought from Bridgewater, where there can be a head of 35 feet.

Now, Mr. Editor, if I were to consult my own private interests in the scheme I would say go to the River Trent for our power, because I have an interest in a splendid water power on the Trent, but, sir, I cannot do that, for I believe that our own city and people should have what belongs to them.

Whether I am in the City Council or out of it I will advocate the utilization of the waters of the Moira for electric energy.

Respectfully yours,
JAS. KNOX.

EDITOR'S NOTE. — Every one will rejoice to note that interest is at last being taken in the necessity of securing cheap electric power for manufacturing and lighting purposes in Belleville.

No little oratory has been wasted in the past, at meetings of the Board of Trade and at meetings of the City Council, upon the subject of cheap power and the necessity of securing for Belleville additional industries. What has been the result? Not even a miniature windmill has been erected. Talk is cheap, and writing letters takes very little of the time of unemployed men; but ask them to put their hands in their pockets or take stock in aid of any proposed enterprises and what encouragement does the seeker for capital receive? Let those who have tried it answer.

It is well known that private deposits in banks in this city amount to between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000, drawing but three per cent. interest, yet how much has been squeezed out of the depositors to invest in the establishment of industries in the city?

Past endeavors answer the question.

We have great respect for Alderman Knox, and for his opinions, knowing them to be honestly held, but does he think it fair to those who have taken an interest in the development of electrical power at Healey Falls, on the Trent River, to charge them with doing so for the purpose of "drawing away from our own city" advantages which accrue from securing at the earliest possible moment cheap electrical power, which he says is so much needed "to get industries located here?"

If he will but take a little trouble and spend a little of his time, he will find, as we have done, that those who have invested money in what few industries we have in the city, are the men who, to secure cheap power, have so far lent their aid and invested their money with that end in view.

Let us have cheap power, no matter where it comes from, so that it can be utilized not only for "pumping" water for the city, but in sufficient quantities for manufacturing purposes.

Come, Mr. Knox, let's have a practical scheme; show us where the capital can be secured, and The Intelligencer will lay it before the citizens, and it shall have the earnest support of this journal.

The Intelligencer is not altogether disinterested. The company is now paying a good round sum for electrical power to run its presses, folders, binding machinery, etc., and like all other industries would like cheaper power if it can be obtained, and that, too, at as early a day as possible. And let us say we care very little whether it comes from the Trent or Moira Rivers. It is what Belleville wants, and if Mr. Knox and those who hold his views can give it to us they will be entitled to gold medals.

Let's have a little more practical work and less talk, as in the past, upon a subject so important in the interest of the city, and all will rejoice.

Is the inference drawn by Mr. Knox from the Government Report, upon the relative powers obtainable on the Trent and Moira rivers strictly correct? We will investigate.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

SPORTING NOTES.

The Curling Club will meet to-night for important business.

Montreal Wanderers and Victorias played a match last night, the former winning in extra time. Hod Stuart, formerly of Pittsburg, played for the cup-holders.

Houghton beat Pittsburg 3-2 last night, and Harry Brown, of this city, is credited with playing a star game for the winners.

The question now is: Will there be decent ice for to-morrow night's match in this city?

Goldie Cochrane, Berlin's crack rover, has gone to Houghton to play pro. hockey. Lalonde, of Cornwall, has gone to the Canadian Soo. Slowly but surely the best men are cutting out hypocrisy.

Black Bird won the free-for-all at Dufferin Park, Toronto, yesterday in straight heats, and in the last heat paced the mile in 2.17 3-4, thus making a race record over a half-mile ice track. Flora Hunter was the former record-holder, being credited with 2.18 over the Ottawa track.

George Towns, the Australian sculler, and "Eddie" Hanlan Durnan, of Toronto, Canada, have signed articles to row on the Nepean River, March 2, for the sculling championship of the world and $2,500 a side. Towns July last recaptured the world's sculling championship, defeating James Stanbury by 20 lengths, on the Paramatta River.

CONSERVATIVES' CRIME

Murder of Russian Deputy Is Traced to Reactionaries.

St. Petersburg Paper Furnishes Proof That They Organized Assassination of Prof. Hertzenstein, Furnishing Revolvers For Its Committal and Even Selected Spot Where Actual Murderers Were to Lie In Wait.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 3.—The revelations of the secret committee of the Constitutional Democratic party, as the result of its work in definitely tracing the murder of ex-Deputy Hertzenstein, who was assassinated near Tericki, Finland, last July, to the reactionary league of the Russian people, the counter-terrorist organization, published by the Rech yesterday, created a sensation.

The league, among whose leaders are Dr. Dubroven, president of the Union of Russian People, and Count Konovitzin, head of the organization known as the "True Russian People," Count Apravine and one of the Princes Volkonsky, is one of the legalized political parties which is preparing to participate actively in the coming elections.

The Rech says it has proofs that Yshkevich, assisted by Polovseff and another prominent Conservative, organized the crime, furnished the murderers with revolvers and even selected the spot where they were to lay in wait for Prof. Hertzenstein. Exact details of the identity of the two actual murderers of the professor have been furnished to the Procurator-General.

No arrests have yet been made, but investigations of the charges against the league have commenced at St. Petersburg and Moscow and in Finland.

RUSSIA'S BIG BUDGET.

Greater Part of Increase to Pay Interest on 1906 Loan.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 3.—The preliminary budget estimates prepared by the Ministry of Finance for the first six months of 1907, commencing Jan. 14, provide $523,415,000 for regular expenditures, an increase of $18,896,000, or 3.7 per cent. compared with the semi-annual expenditures for the same period of 1906.

The greater part of the increase will be absorbed in the payment of interest on the big loan of 1906, which increased the total of interest charged from $11,098,000 to $24,730,000.

JAPAN-RUSSIA TREATY.

Alarmist Reports Are Discredited By Mikado's Minister.

Paris, Jan. 3.—Dr. Motono, the Japanese Minister to Russia, in an interview, published yesterday, was quoted as insisting that alarming reports of the status of the Russo-Japanese negotiations regarding the fisheries, navigation and other questions were not warranted.

He predicted a successful conclusion of the commercial treaty, and denied that Japan had made excessive demands, such as the opening of the whole of the Amur River to commerce. Japan, however, the Minister pointed out, did insist on the opening of the Sungari River, which drains Manchuria, as a natural corollary of the treaty of Portsmouth and as establishing the principle of the open door.

He considered that the questions growing out of the interpretation of the words "rivers and inlets" in the treaty, and the consulates and passport regulations as being of a minor character.

UNCLE SAM WIDE AWAKE.

Only Person Who Grasps Golden Future of Canada's Northwest.

London, Jan. 3.—The London Globe's chief fear regarding the Essex small-holdings experiment is that the class of man who wishes to start farming on a small sum will see that he can do better in Canada.

The Manchester Guardian presumes that Canada flax is unsuitable for Belfast manufacture, as no vigorous effort is made to bring it here, where an open market awaits it.

The Pall Mall Gazette, in a special article, remarks that in the Northwest Canadians are much more complaisant toward the money of the Yankee invader than to that of the Britisher, who wants nearly everything. Uncle Sam is the only person who seems to have grasped the golden future of the Northwest.

Trains Snowbound In West.

Winnipeg, Jan. 3.—The west is in the throes of another big snowstorm, and traffic is almost completely tied up on all lines. The storm is of the eastern variety, the snow being wet and packs hard. Not a train got in from the south yesterday. C.P.R. officials state the last storm cost them more than $200,000, and this will cost them more, while E. A. James, manager of the Canadian Northern, states that it is costing them $1,200 a day to fight the weather.

CAUSED COAL FAMINE.

U. S. Commissioner Finds Railways Failed to Prepare For Movement of Grain — Evidences of Boycott.

Washington, Jan. 3.—The causes of, but not the cure for, the car shortage in the northwest, and the consequent coal famine in North Dakota, have been determined by the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who participated in the recent hearings at Chicago and Minneapolis.

Franklin Lane, chairman of the investigating commission, finds that it is a fair inference from all the testimony that the real cause of the coal scarcity in North Dakota, was such an abundance of west-bound traffic at the head of the lakes that cars were not available in the congested state of that terminal for carrying coal to North Dakota.

Mr. Lane says that the report will be followed in due course by the special recommendations of the commission as a whole as to whatever legislation, if any, may be deemed advisable.

Referring to the report that the coal shortage was due to the presence of a trust or combination between dealers in coal, who fixed prices in the northwest, and refused to sell to "outsiders" and "irregulars," the report says: "The commission has gained indisputable proof of an agreement between coal dealers to maintain prices and to boycott all who do not so agree; but there is no evidence at all justifying the contention that this combination is chargeable with the coal shortage prevailing, nor that the railroads were party in any way to such a conspiracy."

Financial loss to a large percentage of the people of the northwest is shown to have been caused by the failure of the railroads to prepare for a large movement of grain. Mr. Lane shows that the railroads tapping the great grain belt of the northwest seem to have been overwhelmed by this year's crop, although, in fact, the crop scarcely exceeded that of 1905, nor did it equal that of at least one other preceding year.

RESIGNS HIS POSITION.

Lieutenant-Colonel Clark, Clerk of the Legislature, Succeeded by Arthur Sydere, Assistant Clerk.

Toronto, Jan. 3.—Lieut.-Col Charles Clarke has resigned his office as clerk of the Legislative Assembly, and Arthur H. Sydere, the assistant clerk, will succeed to the office. The salary is $2,000. Col. Clarke, it is understood, will be granted a retiring allowance.

Col. Clarke completed his 80th year on Nov. 28, and has been clerk of the Legislature for 15 years. For 20 years previously he sat for one of the Wellingtons, and was Speaker of the House in 1880, in which capacity he served for seven years, becoming clerk in 1891 in succession to Col. Gilmore, who had been clerk since Confederation. In these 35 years he has never missed a session, and Col. Clark's record in this respect is probably unique in Canada. His experience lends weight to his manual on Parliamentary Procedure, of which three editions have been issued.

Col. Clarke was born in England in 1826 and came to Canada in 1844. In the reign of John Sanfield Macdonald he edited "The Backwoodsman," at Elora, previously having published The Journal and Express in Hamilton. He was active in the Fenian raids and attained his lieutenant-colonelcy in 1871. He then lived at Fergus and in that year was elected Liberal representative in Centre Wellington.

C. M'GILL'S ACCOUNTS

Ontario Bank Manager's Dealings With New York Brokers.

Had One Account For Ontario Bank and One For Himself — Dealings With Marshall, Spader & Co. Totaled $30,000—Money Paid on Nov. 10, 1905—Shares Turned Over to the Bank of Montreal.

New York, Jan. 3.—The Ontario Bank commission continued its enquiry among the New York brokers yesterday. At the office of Marshall, Spader & Co. the press were excluded.

W. B. Spader said his firm dealt with Charles McGill through Spader & Perkins, members of the New York Stock Exchange. The account, totaling $30,000, was in McGill's name alone. They issued cheques out to him and know nothing of the Ontario Bank.

Oliver Hart of the stock brokerage firm of Charles Head & Co. of Broadway was examined. He said that the firm had two accounts with Charles McGill; No. 1 representing a syndicate, as he had been told, and the second in the name of the Ontario Bank. The first account, he said, dealt generally in margins, the second started as a cash investment account, but worked into a speculative account.

He said the account of C. McGill was opened March 9, 1903, and ended Nov. 10, 1905. The Ontario Bank account opened April 23, 1906, and closed Oct. 24, 1906.

Mr. Hart said the firm would call for margins as needed. On Nov. 10, 1905, he said McGill was paid $1,627.54, and in the other account he was paid $312.81. Mr. Hart said the Bank of Montreal gave the firm instructions to dispose of the latter account.

"I don't think," remarked Mr. Hart, "that McGill converted any of this money to his own use."

Mr. Hart was not able to offer any explanation of the Buckingham and Seagram cheque. He had explained a moment before that the $16,000 was composed of two cheques, one for $10,000 was paid over to Buckingham, Seagram & Co., endorsed by Mr. McGill, who turned it over to C. Head & Co., and the cheque came back to the firm in the regular course of business; the second cheque was for $6,827.54, which was deposited with A. E. Ames & Co., Limited, by Charles McGill, the latter firm depositing it with W. H. Goadby, New York stock broker. Mr. Hart said the Ontario Bank account that McGill had with his firm was turned over to the Bank of Montreal. This firm turned over to the Bank of Montreal in New York 600 shares of Iowa Central, 300 Minneapolis and St. Louis and 1,100 Sloss-Sheffield, and got a cheque for $2,359.55, thus closing out the account on Oct. 24th.

"Every time I was in Toronto I was told of McGill's speculating; everybody in Toronto knew of McGill's speculations," said Mr. Hart.

Asked where the money came to his firm, Mr. Hart said it came through the Fourth National Bank and was placed to the credit of either No. 1 or No. 2 accounts. He said that his firm had only one account on the books of the firm with McGill.

The commission is expected to return to Toronto on Thursday.

Arbitration Award of Value of Berlin and Waterloo Street Railway.

Berlin, Jan. 3.—The award of the board of arbitration, composed of Judge Jamieson of Guelph (chairman), Judge Morgan of Toronto, and J. M. Scully of Waterloo, which was appointed last spring to value the plant of the Berlin and Waterloo Street Railway Co., the franchise of which expired in September of 1906, was received by the railway committee of the town council yesterday.

The entire plant was valued at $75,200, which is practically the price estimated by Town Valuator J. W. Moyer of Toronto. Each side pays its own costs, and the town defrays the expenses of arbitration, which amounted to $3,323.

The company's valuation of the plant was $201,000, which included 10 per cent. as a going concern, and $52,000 for the Waterloo franchise. The arbitrators allowed nothing on the plant on these scores.

Dalhousie, N.B., Jan. 3.—William Currie, Liberal, was elected to the Legislature yesterday for Restigouche County by a majority of 127 over Jas. Stewart, Conservative.

The result is, however, a decided blow to the Tweedie administration, as at the last election, the Liberal had nearly a thousand majority.

Toronto, Jan. 3.—The oldest voter in the municipal election on Tuesday was Mrs. Jane Frawley, 69 St. David street. She is 100 years old, but she was able to walk to her polling booth at the Park School and there voted.

Demands of 57,000 Engineers.

The Best Magazines at Bargain Prices

Any magazine, newspaper or periodical, no matter where published, can be subscribed for through The Bobbs-Merril Company, Indianapolis, at wholesale rates.

We offer this service to get more readers for The Reader Magazine and The Home Magazine and to pay you for your interest and patronage, we offer you an actual cash saving on all magazines.

WHAT MAGAZINE CLUBBING MEANS

A magazine club formerly meant getting together a number of people to subscribe for the same magazine. Under our plan it means getting together a number of magazines to be furnished in one order at a greatly reduced price. For instance: The Reader, the Cosmopolitan, the Home Magazine and Harper's Bazar, if bought each month at the news-stands would cost $7.20 per year. If subscribed to separately they cost $6.00 a year. We have arranged a club of these magazines whereby we can furnish all four for $3.00 or just one-half of the subscription price.

FREE.—Our beautiful 36-page magazine catalogue will be sent in response to a postal card request. This tells how you may secure absolutely free a year's subscription to The Home Magazine and a year's subscription to the Reader Magazine.

FIGHT FOR LOAD OF WOOD.

Lumbermen and Essex Farmers In a Struggle In Which Blood Flowed.

Essex, Jan. 4.—Six employes of the Scott lumber mill at McGregor, and the Hesbons, farmers, engaged in a pitched battle over the possession of a load of wood, and it will be continued before Magistrate Beeman on Saturday on a charge against the Hesbons, of doing great bodily harm.

Scott claimed to have bought the wood from the former owner of the land. The Hesbons claimed that it was theirs. They fought the mill men who went to the farm to remove the wood with clubs, cordwood, spades and other implements, and blood flowed freely.

Charge Against Hollwey.

Toronto, Jan. 4.—Another charge of fraud is to be laid against T. W. Hollwey, in that he did obtain $575 from the University of Toronto as commission on the sale of university property, said sale being alleged to have virtually been made to himself. Hollwey was too ill to appear in court yesterday and his case was remanded until Tuesday.

Pleads Guilty to Bigamy.

Galt, Ont., Jan. 4.—A woman named Bate pleaded guilty to a charge of bigamy, preferred by her lawful husband. She confessed to a subsequent marriage to a Preston man. ROBBED A TRAIN.

Charge Against a Berlin, Ont., Youth At Richmond, Va.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 4.—The man arrested here Wednesday night charged with holding up and robbing a Seaboard train at La Cross is named Charles Powley.

"My home is in Berlin, Ontario," he said. "My sister, Mrs. William Hilborn, lives there. I have three brothers, Norman, William and Benjamin Powley, who have been traveling with a circus. My father, William Powley, sr., lives in Ottawa."

Powley told three or four different stories.

Skipped Out of Berlin.

—Berlin, Jan. 4.—Wm. Powley, jr., formerly of this town, is a son of William Powley, a well-known circus man. Young Powley was once in a shooting scrape here, but skipped out, evading arrest.

Strange Shooting Affair.

Hamilton, Jan. 4.—There was a strange shooting affair last night about 10 o'clock. As Norman McCardle, 49 Cathcart street, was walking alone Kelly street, a man darted out of an alleyway exclaiming, "You're the man I want to see." With that he pulled a revolver and shot McCardle. The bullet entered McCardle's leg above the knee, and he was taken to the City Hospital, where the bullet was removed. His assailant made his escape. McCardle says that he has not the slightest idea of who his assailant is, or the motive for shooting.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Another year with Mr. C. N. Sulman in office and the electors will see the general sewerage system initiated, the Isolation hospital completed, the Butterfield mortgage closed and the tax rolls all returned.

Every one going to Mayor Sulman with a grievance always gets a courteous and sympathetic hearing, and everyone knows that his or her grievance will be remedied if it can be done consistently with the city's interests. VOTE FOR SULMAN and make no mistake.

Three new appointments of temporary clerks in the local offices of the Inland Revenue department. The Grits are the boys who know how to make places for their friends, but the poor old Postoffice goes on in the same old rut, from bad to worse, with D. R. Leavens at its head.

"A Gas User" writes: "Supposing I have a slot meter installed in my house, will I have to pay the full price, without the discount? If so, what advantage is it to me to pay in advance?"

"A Gas User" can cheer up. The manager of the Gas department informs us that people using the prepaid meters pay the nett rate, which means $1.50 per thousand for illuminating gas and $1.25 for fuel gas.

The good people of Belleville are surely "living under canvass" these days.

We are told that certain aldermanic nominees did not qualify as candidates because they were not aware that, under present conditions they must signify their intention within a certain time. They still thought that silence gave consent. This is regrettable, but it simply shows that no one who wants to keep up with the times can afford to miss reading his newspaper. The Intelligencer stated the facts plainly. But then, perhaps, anybody who doesn't read The Intelligencer would add little to the usefulness of the City Council.

It saddens one to think that the cheerful face of Ald. Sinclair will be missed in the Council chamber this year, but then, as the poet says, "The best of friends must part."

Of course there will be a few Green aldermen after the ballots are counted, but some of the candidates are sure to get their Knox.

Don't be surprised if the Board of Education has a "Lost" ad. in the paper next Tuesday. There's going to be a red-hot contest in Murney ward, and the Board may lose a Diamond.

It is to be hoped the good people of Thurlow are keeping in mind the claims of Mr. H. K. Denyes for the reeveship. He deserves election, more especially as his long service in the County Council will, if he is returned, be crowned with the Wardenship. The electors of Thurlow will reward merit and honor their township by electing Mr. Denyes on Monday next.

The chances of Mr. A. R. Thompson look bright for election as alderman, and he should, if returned, add to the strength of the Council. Don't forget this next Monday.

If you notice some of your elderly friends wearing vivid neckties now don't call them giddy. They may have been remembered by Santa Claus, you know.

"A Voter" writes: "Are we to understand that only the men who put election cards in the papers want to be elected?"

The above simply shows what peculiar questions newspaper men are sometimes expected to answer.

1907 has certainly come in like a lamb, but we'll probably get all the frost and snow we want before the roses bloom again.

The question now is, Which of the thirteen aldermanic candidates will be handed the lemons on Monday next.

There seems to be a misapprehension as to the right of electors to vote for aldermen in the different wards in which they are assessed. No elector can, under late decisions, vote more than ONCE, and that, too, in the ward in which he resides. In case he is not qualified in that ward he can vote in another ward in which he is qualified, but only once. There is a heavy fine for the violation of this law. In the case of a vote on a by-law, for the borrowing of money, property-owners in the different wards can vote in each ward.

TALKING NOT EVERYTHING.

(Montreal Gazette.)

The Kingston News thinks that if a public meeting was held, and the candidates for municipal honors called upon to express their views of municipal questions, the city might secure a more efficient council. It might, and it might not. All clever talkers do not make good councillors. Neither do all successful business men. There is only one way of finding an efficient man, and that is through trial. By the time he has demonstrated his efficiency he is generally so tired of the job that he throws it up. This is why our municipal administrators are so frequently but little better than jokes.

OF INTEREST TO MILITIA OFFICERS.

(Ottawa Citizen.)

If the officers of the militia of Canada do not want to have a duty of thirty per cent. put on all articles of uniform and equipment they had better get busy and make some representation to the Government. The whole force is affected by the new enactment because the expense of equipment makes it difficult enough to secure officers for the militia as it is. If one third is added to the expense, commanding officers will find it just that much more difficult to fill vacancies in the commissioned ranks. What is everybody's business is nobody's, and if the new customs regulation becomes law it may be too late to do anything.

SERVES HIM RIGHT.

(Mail and Empire.)

One good thing accomplished by the election of Mr. Charles Devlin in Nicolet is the suppression of John Costigan. Mr. Costigan remained faithful to the Conservative party so long as it was in office, and drew a Ministerial salary under its auspices for fourteen years. When the change came, he promptly turned over, expecting to become a Minister once again, but as a Liberal. He has waited and waited for the appointment for a decade. Now Charles Devlin, who is a younger man, displaces him and shatters his hopes. Everybody will say that it serves him right.

A Leg Worth More Than a Man.

Jesse James, the noted outlaw's son, is at the age of thirty, one of the most talented and respected lawyers of Kansas City.

In a claim case that he recently won Mr. James told an amusing story.

"There was a woman," he said, "whose husband was killed in a railway accident. The railroad, to avoid suit, gave her $5000 damages.

"The sum satisfied the woman; but a month or two afterward, taking up a newspaper, she read about a man who had lost his leg in the same accident and, behold, this man was given by the company damages to the amount of $7,500.

"It made the woman mad. She hastened at once to the office of the railway's claim adjuster. She said, bitterly:—

"'How is this? Here you give a man $7,500 for the loss of his leg, while you only gave me $5,000 for the loss of my husband.'

"The claim adjuster smiled amiably and said in a soothing voice—

"'Madam, the reason is quite plain. The $7,500 won't provide the poor man with a new leg, whereas with your $5,000 you can easily get a new husband, and perhaps a better one.'"

"That may be, but I might do better with an extra $2,500," was the ready retort.

SCIENCE SCORES AGAIN.

A Preparation That Will Destroy the Dandruff Germ Discovered.

Finally the scientific student has discovered a certain remedy for dandruff. When it first became known that dandruff is the result of a germ or parasite that digs into the scalp and saps the vitality of hair at the root, causing falling hair and baldness, biologists set to work to discover some preparation that will kill the germ. After a year's labor in one laboratory, the dandruff germ destroyer was discovered; and it is now embodied in Newbro's Herpicide. It prevents baldness, stops falling hair and speedily eradicates dandruff. "Destroy the cause, you remove the effect." Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

A Tariff Menace.

That the intermediate tariff was designed as a menace to the British preference and a means toward its withdrawal becomes clearer every day.

The London Times spoke of it as an endeavor on the part of the Canadian Government to get more into touch with foreigners, especially with the United States.

Sir Charles Tupper has expressed similar views, urging upon the mother country to make haste to conclude a reciprocal arrangement with Canada before the present preference slips out of reach.

Mr. Fielding takes the position that such fears are groundless, because, he says, the Government does not intend to put the intermediate tariff in force. But who can put faith in such a ministerial utterance? Why was it enacted, if not to be enforced when the occasion called for it?

The Toronto Globe, doubtless speaking by direct authority, intimates that Canada would be glad to receive any offer of reciprocity which the United States might choose to make.

This is properly regarded as an indication of the purpose for which the intermediate tariff was designed, namely, to lessen our trade relations with Great Britain and increase them with the United States. It is certainly a serious if not fatal blow to the policy of the Chamberlain party to get England and the colonies united in their trade concerns, with freer trade among themselves and protection against foreign manufacturers.

If, as Mr. Fielding says, the Government does not intend to enforce the intermediate tariff, why is it retained, if not as a menace and a disturbing factor in the relations of Canada with Britain under the preference? It should be withdrawn if mutual confidence is of any value.

Meddling Officials.

Down by the sea it seems to be recognized that Government officials are a proper element in politics.

In Mr. Fielding's behalf in the Queen's-Shelburne bye-election, fishery inspectors, having the livelihood of hundreds of voters at their disposal, acted as polling agents and presumably also, and to a more influential extent, in ways not so apparent to the common eye. The intimidation there practiced was only paralleled by the flagrant misuse of authority by Government land agents in the Northwest.

At the New Brunswick Liberal convention the other day, Government officials took part in the proceedings as delegates, presuming to dictate to the electors as far as to check their well-meant protest regarding the G. T. P. Railway policy.

Among the more prominent delegates was the fruit inspector of the province, G. R. Sangster, an employe of the agricultural department. A delegate from Moncton was Mr. L. Tracey who The Times says, occupies the responsible position of inspector of window washing on the Intercolonial Railway, a plain indication that he at least disbelieves in the Hon. Mr. Emmerson's promise to "take the road out of politics."

Among other public officials who appeared as delegates to the Liberal convention were a postmaster and a game warden from the County of King's.

Hon. Mr. Lemieux should see to it that the pledge given by Sir Wilfrid Laurier that no officers of the Government should meddle in politics is carried out. To be consistent the postmaster who meddled as a political delegate should share the fate of the postmaster at Cannington.

ULCERS FOR 60 YEARS!

Medical Science has reached its highest pinnacle in the discovery of Zam-Buk. The healing power of this herbal balm is absolutely unprecedented. A case has just been reported to the proprietors, in which Zam-Buk has closed and healed ulcers which for 60 years had defied every remedy known. 60 years ago, the lady in question was bitten on the leg by a dog and intervals the place broke out in bad ulcerated sores: Zam-Buk has ended the mischief once and for all. This case and that which follows, should convince all sufferers from skin disease or injuries that Zam-Buk is on an entirely different plane to ordinary remedies. Send one cent stamp for free sample box and test it at our expense.

Mrs. W. E. Rice, of London Junction, (Ont.) says:—"I cannot be thankful enough for the day Zam-Buk came to Canada. For nine years I had been a sufferer from running sores on my legs caused by blood-poisoning. I had tried every kind of ointment and salve that I had heard of, but none of them seemed equal to my case. Last winter I was worse than ever, and could not bear to stand on my feet for five minutes. The pain was so acute that I could not bear to have my slippers on.

"I heard of Zam-Buk and decided to give it a fair trial. From first commencing with it it did me good, and it has now cured me. Whereas before I could not stand on my feet for five minutes at a time, I can now not only stand but walk about without feeling any pain whatever. I feel like a new woman. I have waited to see if the cure was permanent before making any statement, and now I am very willing to give my testimony. I shall be pleased to answer any inquiries and if any one cares to come and see me, I shall be pleased to tell them what Zam-Buk has done for me."

HEALED FINALLY BY

If You Suffer From

any of the following skin diseases or injuries let these cases convince you that there is nothing can do you as much good as Zam-Buk. It cures finally and speedily, cuts, burns, bruises, eczema, pimples, running sores, spreading scabs, scalp diseases, chapped places, cold sores, poisoned wounds, festering sores, piles, ulcers, bad legs, abscesses, boils, ringworm, erysipelas, scrofula, barber's rash, blackheads, acne, stiffness, rheumatism and all injured, diseased or inflamed conditions of skin and tissue.

An Explanation.

Mr. M. Farley, of Centenary, writes thus on behalf of the board of his cheese factory;

Dear Sir, — Your Sidney Crossing correspondent has drawn it a little strong with regard to Mr. Young, and has unintentionally cast a reflection upon Mr. Howey. Mr. Young, as I understand, never denied taking milk and cream from his can, at the same time not knowing he was criminally liable or finable for the act. Many of us were guilty of the same act, and we thought it was a little hard for our old friend and neighbor to put up a fine to teach the rest of us how to live; so we moved to have his fine refunded, not thinking it would cast any reflection upon the Milk Inspector. The mover spoke of Mr. Howey being an efficient officer, and always ready to advance that which was to the best interests of the dairy industry.

Thanking you for your valuable space, I hope this will be the means of pouring oil on the troubled waters.

ATHLETICS.

Jiu Jitsu was a False Alarm.

About two years ago, says the New York World, there was a big noise over jiu jitsu. Many a man saw in it a great light. He pictured himself learning a few twists of the wrist and going forth to make cab drivers and baggage smashers quail at the glare of his eye. Nearly every city boasted of its jawjit professor and a lot of easy-money-seeking Japs worked the graft. There was much written about the terrible game and its fame was spread abroad like unto the merits of a new patent medicine.

Then came the reaction. The jewjit classes started to fall off and the great Japanese man killers went back to answering the tinkle of the hotel clerk's bell. It was all for a cause.

Jewjit was all right so long as the man you attempted to put it over was paralyzed or asleep. When the victim whose neck was to be broken happened to be awake the putting on of the jujit holds was as hard a task as riding a Montana cow pony with a cockle burr under the saddle. Rude, rough persons who did not know, and were not afraid of the bone-breaking jew-jit had a way of slapping the whiskers off the chins of the men who sailed toward them, eyes aglare and arm extended for the deadly thrust of the upright thumb in the short ribs.

Too many jewjit artists encountered the fade-away punch. The deadly neck hold was hard to place on some coarse villain who stepped in close and crossed over with his right. Jewjit might do for settling class rows at Vassar, but when it came down to deciding debates with cabbies, delivery men and half-illuminated timber jacks jewjit was about as effective as stabbing them in the ear with a slice of angel cake. The fad waned. There was nothing to it.

It was a nice fad all right, but one needed a magazine revolver or a baseball bat wrapped in barbed wire to back it up. That is why we hear no more of the terrible Hishkigji of Japan. It would not even stop savate, the French attack, and that was shown up years ago when Tommy Ryan took one of these kickers and pounded him. When one mentions jiu jitsu these days just make a mental note that he has just arrived from the districts of the great Northwest.

SPORTING NOTES.

Manager Arnott says there will be fine ice for the Brockville-Belleville match to-night. The locals can't afford to lose to-night's game. They'll set a merry pace, sure. Be there to watch 'em and cheer for the Red and White.

The Brockville team, which plays here to-night, is said to be a husky bunch, and the locals will have to go a few to beat them. But they'll probably do it all right.

Mrs. Gans, mother of Joe Gans, the pugilist, received a Christmas present in the shape of a check for $6000 from her son. Last night Mrs. Gans sent her son this telegram to Tonopah, Nev., from Baltimore: "Thanks. Keep stepping, Joe."

Luck Baldwin has practically decided to retire his famous sprinter, Cruzados, by Norfolk — Atlanta II., to the stud. Cruzados, who is now 7 years old, has raced almost wholly on the coast. He has many fast races to his credit, holding the track record of 1.12 1-4 for 6 furlongs at Ascot Park. He also made the same time on one of the Chicago tracks, and is a joint holder of the 5-furlong track record of .59 1-4 at Oakland, running this distance with 123 lbs. The longest distance he ever covered was 7 furlongs, in which, with 122 lbs. he was timed 1.26.

Battling Nelson has cabled that he will make a match with Gans providing the purse is $40,000, with 65 per cent. to the winner and 35 per cent. to the loser, the mill to take place in August. Nelson, however, makes no mention of the weight, which probably means that he will kick up a fuss on that score before an agreement can be reached. Gans, as champion, has the right to dictate, and it is said that he will never consent to meet Nelson again under the weight conditions that governed the 42-round mill at Goldfields.

The Moncton Transcript, in an interview with the New Glasgow team on their way back home, says: "It would have been better had New Glasgow played their original team, for the game had not been in progress very long when one of the Wanderers showed his depreciation of "Red" McMillan's playing by interfering with his breathing apparatus with the end of his stick, and he had to be carried off to recuperate, but on his return he concluded it was safer to have considerable areas between himself and the Wanderer with the puck. As soon as the game was over "Reddy" hit the tall timbers and New Glasgow was without his services for the second match, for which the team was thankful. McMillan's playing was a disappointment to Montrealers as well as to the New Glasgow players.

The Pea Canners will be here next week, and the local puck-chasers will have a chance to wipe out old scores. Will they do it? Well, will Sulman be elected!

Pittsburg beat Houghton 6-3 last night, before an attendance of 3000.

The Houghton management is trying very hard to land Whitcroft, of Peterboro, but there's nothing doing. Whitty will stick to pure amateurism. There's probably more in it.

Marty Walsh, of Kingston, while playing for the Canadian Soo against Calumet last night, had his ankle broken. The boys take long chances when they butt into the pro. league.

Why do you shun real publicity. Failing to use the "wants" sometimes amounts to that."

There is nothing which a chaste and refined woman detects so quick as the atmosphere of an impure man.

Men's judgments often make a blunder, but their conscience never does.

The man who figures on everything never cuts much of a figure in anything.

The record price given for a Strad. violin is $10,000. The date of the instrument is 1716.

Many a man means his desires when he talks of his duty.

All the failures are sure they would be successful if only they could start at the top.

A new leaf is really the same old one with another turn.

THE DAUGHTER.

(January McClure's.)

It's not meself I'm grieving for, it's not that I'm complaining,
(He's a good man, is Michael, and I've never felt his frown)
But there's sorrow beating on me like a long day's raining
For the little wrinkled face of her I left in Kerrydown.

It's just herself I'm longing for, herself and no other—
Do you mind the morns we walked to mass when all the fields were green?
'Twas I that pinned your kerchief, oh, me mother, mother, mother!
The wide seas, the cruel seas and half the world between.

It's the man's part to say the word, the wife's to up and follow—
(It's a fair land we've come to, and there's plenty here for all)
It's not the homesick longing that lures me like a swallow
But the one voice across the world that draws me to its call.

It's just herself I'm longing for, herself and no other—
Do you mind the tales you told me when the turf was blazing bright?—
Me head upon your shoulder, oh, me mother, mother, mother,
The broad seas between us and yourself alone to-night!

There's decent neighbors all about, there's coming and there's going
It's kind souls will be about me when the little one is here;
But it's her word that I'm wanting, her comfort I'd be knowing,
And her blessing on the two of us to drive away the fear.

It's just herself I'm longing for, herself and no other—
Do you mind the soft spring mornings when you stitched the wedding gown
The little, careful stitches, oh, me mother, mother, mother,
Meself beyond the broad seas and you in Kerrydown!

Of course cleanliness is next to godliness, but this will not assuage the grief of a Cuban who, counting on the survival of one Spanish custom, hid his fortune of $1,500 in an ash barrel only to find that under American rule these receptacles are emptied daily and that his money has disappeared.

A report comes from Kentucky of experiments in telephoning from a railroad train moving 20 miles an hour. A reporter aboard called up his office and talked as conveniently as if using the ordinary city service. Others conversed with people in various parts of the State and in New York. A telephone may soon be as indispensable in a railroad coach as in a hotel bedroom.

For the first week of December half a million bushels of apples, mostly from Canada and the United States, were imported into the United Kingdom, and it was then expected that shipments would continue on the same extensive scale till Christmas. The wholesale price averaged nearly ninety cents a bushel. Even at this price, the Toronto Globe says, the winter apple industry should pay in Canada.

The latest point of interest is that established by the Admiralty in christening two of the Dreadnaught's of her fleet mates, the Temeraire and the Bellerophon. Both are time graced ships' names in the British service. Temeraires were famous in the days when hearts of oak and wooden walls were the bulwarks of English liberty. And who can forget Turner's pathetic picture of the "Fighting Temeraire," her days of usefulness gone, standing up in the blushing sundown for her last resting place in the Medway?

THOUSANDS PAY RESPECT.

Remarkable Tribute From Londoners to Baroness Burdett-Coutts.

London, Jan. 4.—Twelve thousand persons visited the famous house on Stratton street, where the Baroness Burdett-Coutts died Dec. 30, in order to pay a last tribute to the philanthropist, who was particularly beloved by the people of the Whitechapel district of London, whose condition she did much to improve.

The coffin was placed on a catafalque, with a life-size portrait of the Baroness at its head. Long lines of people, many of them belonging to the poorer classes, stood for hours in the streets in the vicinity, awaiting their turn to enter the mansion.

Dakota Miners Strike.

Deadwood, S.D., Jan. 4.—All the mines and mills in Bald Mountain and flour mills in Deadwood are closed to-day, and the mines will be allowed to fill up with water, as neither operators nor miners will make any concessions. The ushering in of the strike was greeted with great rejoicing at Terry, where the miners paraded with a band, shouting and cheering.

Regiment For Woodstock.

Steel Merchants Fail.

Scranton, Pa., Jan. 4.—Scranton's typhoid fever epidemic yesterday showed a total of 970 cases since the outbreak six weeks ago. Thirty-one cases were reported for the 24 hours ending at noon. There have been 72 deaths. Bad water was the cause of the epidemic.

A RAZOR'S EDGE.

Results That Come From Stropping and Long Use.

Very thin is the edge of a razor blade. Its thickness has been estimated at about one half millionth of an inch. A writer says of this wonderfully thin bit of steel, when seen under a powerful microscope: "The extreme edge of the section is distinctly bent to one side. This is nearly always seen in razor edges. The actual bend represents the effect of the last stroke on the strop which this blade has received. Now, this bending of the metal quite near the edge, minute as it is, has some very important practical consequences. If the razor be used in such a way that the bend is toward the skin there will be a tendency for the edge itself to burrow downward into the skin, instead of sliding easily over the surface and merely cutting away the projecting hairs. If, on the other hand, the blade be applied to the face in such a way that the bend of the edge is away from the skin the edge will slide much more smoothly, with less tendency to cut or scratch the skin, while it will act upon the hairs in a slightly upward direction and thus tend to pull them tight while cutting. The direction of the bend of the edge can be regulated by the last few strokes on the strop.

"This minute amount of bending undergone by the metal near the edge of a razor blade has another practical result. We all know that a piece of wire which will quite easily stand being bent double will be broken if it be bent backward and forward many times. What really takes place is that the metal, which was strong and ductile to begin with, is gradually made hard and brittle and then finally breaks off. Now, the metal near the edge of a razor is being subjected to very similar treatment. Every turn on the strop reverses the direction of the bend near the edge, and, although the amount of bending is too slight ever to bring about actual breakage of such an elastic metal as hardened steel, it is yet sufficient to bring about a change in the metal which renders it less elastic and able to stand the strain. This is why a razor which has been used long ceases to cut well or to hold a good edge.

"Now it has been discovered that steel which has lost its proper elastic qualities by such a process of 'fatigue,' as it is called, is capable of recovering its good qualities under favorable circumstances. It will recover in this way if left at rest, though this is a comparatively slow process, which explains the fact that a tool which has become useless through continued use will be as good as ever after a prolonged rest. But recovery will take place much more rapidly if the steel be warmed, so that a few minutes' exposure to the temperature of boiling water will bring about recovery to an extent that would have required several days' rest at the ordinary temperatures. This fact explains the advantage to be derived from the familiar practice of 'steaming' a razor before use."

When Moving.

If especially fine pictures are to be moved they should be either carried in the hands of the owner or put into wooden frames, the latter screwed to the back so that the edges and front will not be scratched or marred. Looking glasses to prevent any damage should never be covered, for all movers and assistants are more careful when they see a mirror exposed than when it is carefully wrapped and covered and marked with a label of glass, etc. Pieces of burlap or old comfortables thrown over furniture to make sure the surfaces and edges will not be scratched are all the protection necessary in a short moving trip, though if desired a dainty gold chair may be covered first with tissue paper, then with excelsior or heavy wrapping paper, the latter bound on with twine to make sure it will not be rubbed or marred in handling.

Head Office - Waterloo, Ont

The man with a headlight growing on his face is pretty sure to be on the wrong track.

The Manager Of the B. & A.

By VAUGHAN KESTER

Copyright, 1901, by Harper & Brothers

she rested her chin in her hands and gazed out into the dusty street.

"Isn't it infinitely pathetic to think of that poor little man and his work?" going back to Joyce. "Do you know, I could have cried? And his wife's faith, it is sublime, even if it is mistaken." She laughed in a dreary fashion. "What is to be done for people like that, whose lives are quite uncompensated?"

They were joined by the doctor, who had caught a part of what Constance said and divined the rest.

"You see only the pathos. Joyce is just as well off here as he would be anywhere else, and perhaps a little better. He makes a decent living with his pictures." As he spoke he crossed the porch and stood at her side, with his hand resting affectionately on her shoulder.

"I guess there's a larger justice in the world than we conceive," said Oakley.

"But not to know, to go on blindly doing something that is really very dreadful and never to know!"

She turned to Oakley.

"I am afraid I rather agree with your father. He seems happy enough, and he is doing work for which there is a demand."

"Would you be content to live here with no greater opportunity than he has?"

Oakley laughed and shook his head.

"No, but that's not the same. I'll pull the Huckleberry up and make it pay and then go in for something bigger."

"And if you can't make it pay?"

"I won't bother with it, then."

"But if you had to remain?"

Oakley gave her an incredulous smile.

"That couldn't be possible. I have done all sorts of things but stick in what I found to be undesirable berths, but of course business is not at all the same."

"But isn't it? Look at Mr. Ryder. He says that he is buried here in the pine woods, with no hope of ever getting back into the world, and I am sure he is able, and journalism is certainly a business, like anything else."

Oakley made no response to this. He didn't propose to criticise Ryder; but, all the same, he doubted his ability.

"Griff's frightfully lazy," remarked the doctor. "He prefers to settle down to an effortless sort of an existence rather than make a struggle."

"Don't you think Mr. Ryder extremely clever, Mr. Oakley?"

"I know him so slightly, Miss Emory, but no doubt he is."

Mrs. Emory appeared in the doorway, placid and smiling.

"Constance, you and Mr. Oakley come on in; dinner's ready."

When Dan went home that night he ld himself savagely that he would ver go to the Emorys' again. The perience had been most unsatisfac- y. In spite of Constance's evident position toward tolerance where he s concerned, she exasperated him. r unconscious condescension was a ter memory of which he could not himself. Certainly women must be ty, small souled creatures if she s at all representative of her sex. in spite of his determination to oid Constance, even at the risk of ming rude, he found it required ater strength of will than he pos- sed to keep away from the Emorys.

e realized in the course of the next weeks that a new stage in his de- pment had been reached. Inspired what he felt was a false but beau- l confidence in himself he called of- and as time wore on the frequency hese calls steadily increased. All while he thought about Miss Em- a great deal and was sorry for her imired her, according to his mood. Constance's attitude toward him was a certain fickleness that he ted. Sometimes she was friendly companionable, and then again seemed to revive all her lingering udices and was utterly indifferent m, and her indifference was the complete thing of its kind he had encountered.

urally Dan and Ryder met very ently, and when they met they ed. It was not especially pleas- f course, but Ryder was persist- nd Oakley was dogged. Once he d in pursuit of an object he never up or owned that he was beaten. ne form he had accomplished ev- ng he set out to do, and if the re- had not always been just what he ticipated he had at least had the ction of bringing circumstances his control. He endured the s sarcasms and occasionally re- d with a vengeance so heavy as e Griff quivering with the smart

Emory found it difficult to in the peace between them, but mired Dan's mode of warfare; so conclusive, and he showed rim strength in his ability to t for himself.

Dan felt that he must suffer by nparison with the editor. He genius for trifles, but rather a us capacity. He had worked ith the single determination to ccess. He had the practical ontempt, born of his satisfied ignorance, for all useless things, and to his mind the useless things were those whose value it was impossible to reckon in dollars and cents.

He had been well content with himself, and now he felt that somehow he had lost his bearings. Why was it he had not known before that the mere strenuous climb, the mere earning of a salary, was not all of life? He even felt a sneaking envy of Ryder of which he was heartily ashamed.

Men fall in love differently. Some resist and hang back from the inevitable, not being sure of themselves, and some go headlong, never having any doubts. With characteristic singleness of purpose Dan went headlong, but of course he did not know what the trouble was until long after the facts in the case were patent to every one, and Antioch had lost interest in its speculations as to whether the doctor's daughter would take the editor or the general manager, for, as Mrs. Poppleton, the Emorys' nearest neighbor, sagely observed, she was "having her pick."

To Oakley Miss Emory seemed to accumulate dignity and reserve in the exact proportion that he lost them, but he was determined she should like him if she never did more than that.

She was just the least bit afraid of him. She knew he was not deficient in a proper pride and that he possessed plenty of self respect, but for all that he was not very dexterous. It amused her to lead him out and then to draw back and leave him to flounder out of some untenable position she had beguiled him into assuming.

She displayed undeniable skill in these maneuvers, and Dan was by turns savage and penitent. But she never gave him a chance to say what he wanted to say.

Ryder made his appeal to her vanity. It was a strong appeal. He was essentially presentable and companionable. She understood him, and they had much in common, but for all that her heart approved of Oakley. She [illegible] dominance. She realized that [illegible] direct and simple and strong. [illegible] judgment of him she was [illegible] generous. She could not understand, for instance, how it was that he had been willing to allow his father to go to work in the shops like one of the common hands. It seemed to her to argue such an awful poverty in the way of ideals.

She tried to stifle her growing liking for Oakley and her unwilling admiration for his strength and honesty and a certain native refinement. Unconsciously, perhaps, she had always associated qualities of this sort with position and wealth. She divined his lack of early opportunity and was alive to his many crudities of speech and manner, and he suffered, as he knew he must suffer, by comparison with the editor, but in spite of this Constance Emory knew deep down in her heart that he possessed solid and substantial merits of his own.

"Isn't it infinitely pathetic to think of that poor little man and his work?"

CHAPTER VIII.

KENYON came to town to remind his Antioch friends and supporters that presently he would be needing their votes. He was Ryder's guest for a week, and the Herald recorded his movements with painstaking accuracy and with what its editor secretly considered metropolitan enterprise. The great man had his official headquarters at the Herald office, a ramshackle two story building on the west side of the square. Here he was at home to the local politicians and to such of the general public as wished to meet him. The former smoked his cigars and talked incessantly of primaries, nominations and majorities—topics on which they appeared to be profoundly versed. Their distinguishing mark was their capacity for strong drink, which was far in excess of that of the ordinary citizen who took only a casual interest in politics.

Kenyon was a sloppily dressed man of forty-five, or thereabout, who preserved an air of rustic shrewdness. He was angular faced and smooth shaven and wore his hair rather long in a tangled mop. He was generally described in the party papers as "the picturesque statesman from old Hanover." He had served one term in congress. Prior to that, by way of apprenticeship, he had done a great deal of hard work and dirty work for his party. His fortunes had been built on the fortunes of a bigger and an abler man, who, after a fight which was already famous in the history of the state for its bitterness, had been elected governor, and Kenyon, having picked the winner, had gone to his reward. Just now he had a shrewd idea that the governor was anxious to unload him and that the party leaders were sharpening their knives for him. Their change of heart grew out of the fact that he had "dared to assert his independence," as he said, and had "played the sneak and broken his promises," as they said, in a little transaction which had been left to him to put through.

Personally Ryder counted him an unmitigated scamp, but the man's breezy vulgarity, his nerve and his infinite capacity to jolly tickled his fancy. He had so far freed himself of his habitual indifference that he was displaying an unheard of energy in promoting Kenyon's interest. Of course he expected to derive certain very substantial benefits from the alliance. The congressman had made him endless promises, and Ryder saw, or thought he saw, his way clear to leave Antioch in the near future. For two days he had been saying, "Mr. Brown, shake hands with Congressman Kenyon," or, "Mr. Jones, I want you to know Congressman Kenyon, the man we must keep at Washington."

He had marveled at the speed with which the statesman got down to first names. Mr. Kenyon said modestly when Griff commented on this that his methods were modern—they were certainly vulgar.

"I guess I'm going to give 'em a run for their money, Ryder. I can see I'm doing good work here. There's nothing like being on the ground yourself."

It was characteristic of him that he should ignore the work Ryder had done in his behalf.

"You are an inspiration, Sam. The people know their leader," said the editor genially, but with a touch of sarcasm that was lost on Kenyon, who took himself quite seriously.

"Yes, sir. They'd 'a' done me dirt," feelingly, "but I am on my own range now and ready to pull off my coat and fight for what's due me."

They were seated before the open door, which looked out upon the square. Kenyon was chewing nervously at the end of an unlit cigar which he held between his fingers. "When the nomination is made I guess the other fellow will discover I ain't been letting the grass grow in my path." He spat out over the doorsill into the street. "What's that you were just telling me about the Huckleberry?"

"This new manager of Cornish's is going to make the road pay, and he's going to do it from the pockets of the employees," said Ryder, with a disgruntled air, for the memory of his interview with Dan still rankled.

"That ain't bad either. You know the governor's pretty close to Cornish. The general was a big contributor to his campaign fund."

Ryder hitched his chair nearer his companion's.

"If there's a cut in wages at the shops, and I suppose that will be the next move, there's bound to be a lot of bad feeling."

"Well, don't forget we are for the people," remarked the congressman, and he winked slyly.

Ryder smiled cynically.

"I shan't. I have it in for the manager anyhow."

"What's wrong with him?"

"Oh, nothing, but a whole lot," answered Griff, with apparent indifference.

It was late in the afternoon, and the men from the car shops were beginning to straggle past, going in the direction of their various homes. Presently Roger Oakley strode heavily by, with his tin dinner pail on his arm. Otherwise there was nothing, either in his dress or appearance, to indicate that he was one of the hands. As he still lived at the hotel with Dan, he felt it necessary to exercise a certain care in the matter of dress. As he came into view the congressman swept him with a casual scrutiny; then, as the old man plodded on up the street with deliberate step, Kenyon rose from his chair and stood in the doorway gazing after him.

"What's the matter, Sam?" asked Ryder, struck by his friend's manner.

"Who was that old man who just went past?"

"That? Oh, that's the manager's father! Why?"

"Well, he looks most awfully like some one else, that's all." And he appeared to lose interest.

"No, he's old man Oakley. He works in the shops."

"Oakley?"

"Yes, that's his name. Why?" curiously.

"How long has he been here, anyhow?"

"A month perhaps; maybe longer. Do you know him?"

"I've seen him before. A cousin of mine, John Kenyon, is warden of a prison back in Massachusetts. It runs in the blood to hold office. I visited him last winter, and while I was there a fire broke out in the hospital ward, and that old man had a hand in saving the lives of two or three of the patients. The beggars came within an ace of losing their lives. I saw afterward by the papers that the governor had pardoned him."

Ryder jumped up with sudden alacrity.

"Do you remember the convict's full name?"

Kenyon meditated a moment; then he said:

"Roger Oakley."

The editor turned to the files of the Herald.

"I'll just look back and see if it's the same name. I've probably got it here among the personals, if I can only find it. What was he imprisoned for?" he added.

"He was serving a life sentence for murder, I think, John told me, but I won't be sure."

"The devil you say!" ejaculated Ryder. "Yes, Roger Oakley; the name's the same."

"I knew I couldn't be mistaken. I got a pretty good memory for names and faces. Curious, ain't it, that he should turn up here?"

Ryder smiled queerly as he dropped the Herald files back into the rack.

"His son is manager for Cornish here. He's the fellow I was telling you about."

Kenyon smiled too.

"I guess you won't have any more trouble with him. You've got him where you can hit him, and hit him hard, whenever you like."

CHAPTER IX.

IT was pay day in the car shops, and Oakley posted a number of notices in conspicuous places about the works. They announced a 10 per cent reduction in the wages of the men, the cut to go into effect immediately.

By and by McClintock came in from the yards. He was hot and perspiring, and his check shirt clung moistly to his powerful shoulders.

Oakley looked up inquiringly from the letter he was writing.

"Have you seen the notices?"

"Yes," nodding.

"Heard anything from the men yet?"

"Not a word."

McClintock returned to the yards. It was the noon hour, and in the shade of one of the sheds he found a number of the hands at lunch, who lived too far from the shops to go home to dinner.

"Say, Milt," said one of these, "have you tumbled to the notices, 10 per cent all round? You'll be having to go down in your sock for coin."

"It's there, all right," cheerfully.

"I knew when Cornish came down here there would be something drop shortly. I ain't never known it to fail. The old skinflint! I'll bet he ain't losing any money."

"You bet he ain't, not he," said a second, with a short laugh.

The first man, Branyon by name, bit carefully into the wedge shaped piece of pie he was holding in his hand. "If I was as rich as Cornish I'm hanged if I'd be such an infernal stiff! What good is his money doing him, anyhow?"

"What does the boss say, Milt?"

"That wages will go back as soon as he can put them back."

"Yes, they will! Like fun!" said Branyon sarcastically.

"You're a lot of kickers, you are," commented McClintock good naturedly. "You don't believe for one minute, do you, that the Huckleberry or the shops ever earned a dollar?"

"You can gamble on it that they ain't ever cost Cornish a red cent," said Branyon as positively as a mouthful of pie would allow.

"I wouldn't be too sure about that," said the master mechanic, walking on.

"I bet he ain't out none on this," remarked Branyon cynically. "If he was he wouldn't take it so blamed easy."

The men began to straggle back from their various homes and to form in little groups about the yards and in the shops. They talked over the cut and argued the merits of the case, as men will, made their comments on Cornish, who was generally conceded to be as mean in money matters as he was fortunate, and then went back to their work when the 1 o'clock whistle blew in a state of high good humor with themselves and their critical ability.

"I came to see what you meant by this."

The next day the Herald dealt with the situation at some length. The whole tone of the editorial was rancorous and bitter. It spoke of the parsimony of the new management, which had been instanced by a number of recent dismissals among men who had served the road long and faithfully and who deserved other and more considerate treatment. It declared that the cut was but the beginning of the troubles in store for the hands and characterized it as an attempt on the part of the new management to curry favor with Cornish, who was notoriously hostile to the best interests of labor. It wound up by regretting that the men were not organized, as proper organization would have enabled them to meet this move on the part of the management.

When Oakley read the obnoxious editorial his blood grew hot and his mood belligerent. It showed evident and unusual care in the preparation, and he guessed correctly that it had been written and put in type in readiness for the cut. It was a direct personal attack, too, for the expression "the new management," which was used over and over, could mean but the one thing.

Dan's first impulse was to hunt Ryder up and give him a sound thrashing, but his better sense told him that while this rational mode of expressing his indignation would have been excusable enough a few years back, when he was only a brakeman, as the manager of the Buckhorn and Antioch railroad it was necessary to pursue a more pacific policy.

He knew he could be made very unpopular if these attacks were persisted in. This he did not mind especially except as it would interfere with the carrying out of his plans and increase his difficulties. After thinking it over he concluded that he would better see Ryder and have a talk with him. It would do no harm, he argued, and it might do some good, provided, of course, that he could keep his temper.

He went directly to the Herald office and found Griff in and alone. When Dan strode into the office, looking rather warm, the latter turned a trifle pale, for he had his doubts about the manager's temper and no doubts at all about his muscular development, which was imposing.

"I came to see what you meant by this, Ryder," his caller said, and he held out the paper folded to the insulting article. Ryder assumed to examine it carefully, but he knew every word there.

"Oh, this? Oh, yes! The story of the reduction in wages down at the car shops. There! You can take it from under my nose. I can see quite clearly."

"Well?"

"Well," repeated Ryder after him, with exasperating composure. The editor was no stranger to intrusions of this sort, for his sarcasms were frequently personal. His manner varied to suit each individual case. When the wronged party stormed into the office, wrathful and loud lunged, he was generally willing to make prompt reparation, especially if the visitor had the advantage of physical preponderance on his side. When, however, the caller was uncertain and palpably in awe of him, as sometimes happened, he got no sort of satisfaction. With Oakley he pursued a middle course.

"Well?" he repeated.

"What do you mean by this?"

"I think it speaks for itself, don't you?"

"I went into this matter with you, and you know as well as I do why the men are cut. This"—striking the paper contemptuously with his open hand—"is the worst sort of rubbish, but it may serve to make the men feel that they are being wronged, and it is an attack on me."

"Did you notice that? I didn't know but it was too subtle for you."

He couldn't resist the gibe at Oakley's expense.

"Disguised, of course, but intended to give the men less confidence in me. Now, I'm not going to stand any more of this sort of thing!"

He was conscious he had brought his remarks to a decidedly lame conclusion.

"And I'll tell you one thing, Mr. Oakley. I'm editor of the Herald, and I don't allow any man to dictate to me what I shall print. That's a point I'll pass on for myself."

"You know the situation. You know that the general will dispose of his interests here unless they can be made self sustaining, and, whether you like him or not, he stands as a special providence to the town."

"I only know what you have told me," sneeringly.

Oakley bit his lips. He saw it would have been better to have left Ryder alone. He felt his own weakness and his inability to force him against his will to be fair. He gulped down his anger and chagrin.

"I don't see what you can gain by stirring up this matter."

"Perhaps you don't."

"Am I to understand you are hostile to the road?"

"If that means you, yes. You haven't helped yourself by coming here as though you could bully me into your way of thinking. I didn't get much satisfaction from my call on you. You let me know you could attend to your own affairs, and I can attend to mine just as easily. I hope you appreciate that."

Dan turned on his heel and left the office, cursing himself for his stupidity in having given the editor an opportunity to get even.

CHAPTER X.

IN the course of the next few days Dan decided that there was no danger of trouble from the hands. Things settled back into their accustomed rut. He was only a little less popular, perhaps.

He was indebted to Clarence for the first warning he received as to what was in store for him.

It came about in this way. Clarence had retired to the yards, where, secure from observation, he was indulging in a quiet smoke, furtively keeping an eye open for McClintock, whose movements were uncertain, as he knew from sad experience.

A high board fence was in front of him, shutting off the yards from the lower end of the town. At his back was a freight car, back of that again were the interlacing tracks and beyond them a cornfield and Billup's Fork, with its inviting shade of sycamores and willows and its tempting swimming holes.

Suddenly he heard a scrambling on the opposite side of the fence, and ten brown fingers clutched the tops of the boards, then a battered straw hat came on a level with the fingers, at the same instant a bare foot and leg were thrown over the fence, and the owner of the battered straw hat swung himself into view. All this while a dog whined and yelped; then followed a vigorous scratching sound, and presently a small, dilapidated looking yellow cur squeezed itself beneath the fence. Clarence recognized the intruders. It was Branyon's boy, Augustus, commonly called "Spide," because of his exceeding slimness and the length of his legs, and his dog Pink.

As soon as Branyon's boy saw Clarence he balanced himself deftly on the top of the fence, with one hand and shaded his eyes elaborately with the other. An amiable, if toothless, smile curled his lips. When he spoke it was with deep facetiousness.

"Hi, come out from behind that roll of paper!"

But Clarence said not a word. He puffed away at his cigarette, apparently oblivious of everything save the contentment it gave him, and as he puffed Spide's mouth worked and watered sympathetically. His secret admiration was tremendous. Here was Clarence in actual and undisturbed possession of a whole cigarette. He had to purchase his cigarettes in partnership with some other boy and go halves on the smoking of them. It made him feel cheap and common.

"Say, got one of them coffin tacks that ain't working?" he inquired. Clarence gazed off up the tracks, ignoring the question and the questioner. Spide's presence was balm to his soul. But as one of the office force of the Buckhorn and Antioch he felt a certain lofty reserve to be incumbent upon him. Besides, he and Spide had been engaged in a recent rivalry for Susie Poppleton's affections. It is true he had achieved a brilliant success over his rival, but that a mere schoolboy should have ventured to oppose him, a salaried man, had struck him as an unpardonable piece of impertinence for which there could be no excuse.

Spide, however, had taken the matter most philosophically. He had recognized that he could not hope to compete with a youth who possessed unlimited wealth, which he was willing to lay out on chewing gum and candy, his experience being that the sex was strictly mercenary and incapable of a disinterested love. Of course he had much admired Miss Poppleton. From the crown of her small dark head, with its tightly braided "pigtails," down to her trim little foot he had esteemed her as wholly adorable; but, after all, his affair of the heart had been an affair of the winter only. With the coming of summer he had found more serious things to think of. He was learning to swim and to chew tobacco. The mastering of these accomplishments pretty well occupied his time.

"Say," he repeated, "got another?"

Still Clarence blinked at the fierce sunlight which danced on the rails and said nothing. Spide slid skillfully down from his perch, but his manner had undergone a change.

"Who throwed that snipe away anyhow?" he asked disdainfully. Clarence turned his eyes slowly in his direction.

"Lookee here. You fellows got to keep out of these yards or I'll tell McClintock. First we know some of you kids will be getting run over, and then your folks will set up a lively howl. Get on out! It ain't no place for little boys!"

He put the cigarette between his lips and took a deep and tantalizing pull at it. Spide kept to his own side of the ditch that ran between the fence and the tracks.

"Huh!" with infinite scorn. "Who's a kid? You won't be happy till I come over there and lick you!"

"First thing I know you'll be stealing scrap iron!"

"My gosh! The Huckleberry 'd have to stop running if I swiped a coupling pin!"

Clarence had recourse to the cigarette, and again Spide was consumed with torturing jealousies. "Where did you shoot that snipe anyhow?" he inquired insultingly.

Once more Clarence allowed his glance to stray off up the tracks.

"For half a cent I'd come across and do what I say!" added Spide, stooping down to roll up his trousers leg and then easing an unelastic "gallus" that cut his shoulders. This elicited a short and contemptuous grunt from Clarence. He was well pleased with himself. He felt Spide's envy. It was sweet and satisfying.

"Say!" with sudden animation. "You fellers will be going around on your uppers in a day or so. I'll bet you'd give a head to know what I know!"

"I wouldn't give a darned cent to know all you know or ever will know!" retorted Clarence promptly.

"Some people's easily upset here in the cupola," tapping his brimless covering. "I wouldn't want to give you brain fever. I don't hate you bad enough."

"Well, move on. You ain't wanted around here. It may get me into trouble if I'm seen fooling away my time on you."

"I hope it will," remarked Branyon's boy, Augustus, with cordial ill will. He was literally bursting with the importance of the facts which he possessed, and Clarence's indifference gave him no opening.

"What will you bet there ain't a strike?"

"I ain't betting this morning," said Clarence blandly, "but if there is one we are ready for it. You bet the hands won't catch us napping. We are ready for 'em any time and all the time." This, delivered with a large air, impressed Spide exceedingly.

"Have you sent for the militia a'ready?" he asked anxiously.

"That's saying," noting the effect of his words. "I can't go blabbing about, telling what the road's up to, but we are awake, and the hands will get it in the neck if they tackle the boss."

To Clarence, Oakley was the most august person he had ever known. He religiously believed his position to be only second in point of importance and power to that of the president of the United States. He was wont to invest him with purely imaginary attributes and to lie about him at a great rate among his comrades, who were ready to credit any report touching a man who was reputed to be able to ride on the cars without a ticket. Human grandeur had no limits beyond this.

"There was a meeting last night. I bet you didn't know that," said Spide.

"I heard something of it. Was your father at the meeting, Spide?" he asked, dropping his tone of hostility for one of gracious familiarity. The urchin promptly crossed the ditch and stood at his side.

"Of course the old man was. You don't suppose he wouldn't be in it?"

"Oh, well, let 'em kick. You see the boss is ready for 'em," remarked Clarence indifferently. He wanted to know what Spide knew, but he didn't feel that he could afford to show any special interest. "Where you going—swimming?" he added.

"Yep." But Spide was not ready to drop the fascinating subject of the strike. He wished to astonish Clarence, who was altogether too knowing.

"The meeting was in the room over Jack Britt's saloon," he volunteered.

"I suppose you think we didn't know up at the office. We got our spies out. There ain't nothing the hands can do we ain't on to."

Spide wrote his initials in the soft bank of the ditch with his big toe while he meditated on what he could tell next.

"Well, sir, you'd 'a' been surprised if you'd 'a' been there."

"Was you there, Spide?"

"Yep."

"Oh, come off; you can't stuff me."

"I was, too, there. The old lady sent me down to fetch pap home. She was afraid he'd get full. Joe Stokes was there, and Lou Bentick and a whole slew of others, and Griff Ryder."

Clarence gasped with astonishment. "Why, he ain't one of the hands."

"Well, he's on their side."

"What you giving us?"

"Say, they are going to make a stiff kick on old man Oakley working in the shops. They got it in for him good and strong." He paused to weigh the effect of this and then went on rapidly: "He's done something. Ryder knows about it. He told my old man and Joe Stokes. They say he's got to get out. What's a convicted criminal anyhow?"

"What do you want to know that for, Spide?" questioned the artful Clarence, with great presence of mind.

"Well, that's what old man Oakley is. I heard Ryder say so myself, and pap and Joe Stokes just kicked themselves because they hadn't noticed it before, I suppose. My, but they were hot! Say, you'll see fun tomorrow. I should not be surprised if they sent you all a-kiting."

Clarence was swelling with the desire to tell Oakley what he had heard. He took the part of a pack of cigarettes from his pocket.

"Have one?" he said.

Spide promptly availed himself of his companion's liberality.

"Well, so long," the latter added; "I got to get back." And a moment later he might have been seen making his way cautiously in the direction of the office, while Spide, his battered hat under his arm and the cigarette clutched in one hand, was skipping gayly across the cornfield toward the creek, followed by Pink. He was bound for the "Slidy," a swimming hole his mother had charged him on no account to visit. Under these peculiar circumstances it was quite impossible for him to consider any other spot.

CHAPTER XI.

"SAY," Clarence blurted out, "there's going to be a strike!"

Oakley glanced up from his writing.

"What's that you are telling me, Clarence?"

"There's going to be a strike, Mr. Oakley."

Dan smiled good naturedly at the boy.

"I guess that has blown over, Clarence," he said kindly.

"No, it ain't. The men had a meeting last night. It was in the room over Jack Britt's saloon. I've just been talking with a fellow who was there. He told me."

"Sit down," said Oakley, pushing a chair toward him.

"Now, what is it?" as soon as he was seated. And Clarence, editing his

WM. O'BRIEN DEMANDS STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURE.

London, Jan. 3.—The allegations of financial wrongdoing on the part of the Redmondite members of the Irish party made in Cork on Dec. 31 by Wm. O'Brien promise to become of serious import. The Irish People, the organ of Wm. O'Brien, publishes an editorial to-day declaring that the records of the alleged wrongful financial methods of the Redmondites, the revelation of which was threatened by Mr. O'Brien in his speech at Cork, must be produced before an Irish jury, and that this jury shall hear the whole story, including a recital of the disposition of the immense sums obtained from the United States and Australia, which the papers aver were obtained under false pretences and which enabled the bosses of the party to defy the people.

Daniel Sheehan, member of Parliament from Mid-Cork, has sent a letter to John Redmond demanding an apology or reparation because the party stopped his allowances, which he attributes to the influence of Mr. Redmond, and failing which he threatens legal proceedings.

CRIMINALS IN INDIA

WHOLE TRIBES WHOSE HEREDITARY PROFESSION IS THEFT.

Robbers Born and Kept So by Caste. They Are Polite and Modest Until the "Profession" Requires Them to Become Cruel and Ferocious.

India is usually spoken of as a land where life and property have become safe under British rule. True, the bands of thugs have been broken up, the Pindharee hordes have been suppressed, and the British police system is spread over the whole country, but the criminal tribes or castes, those whose hereditary "profession" is robbery and nothing else, remain, their instincts strong, wanting only opportunity to practice their traditional calling, which the Indian caste system forbids them to abandon.

These tribes are most numerous and most wayward in the united provinces, in which are Cawnpur and Lucknow, the cities associated forever with the Indian mutiny.

Half of the division is Oudh, the native province last annexed by Britain, many of whose old men vividly remember when every "talookdar," or feudal chief, lived in a fortified castle and retained a swarm of armed men, who received no pay, but lived on the country. They were official robbers, and their example gave free scope to the "professional" robbers, or, as they have always been known in India, the criminal tribes.

These tribes are the Sanaurihs, the Barwars, the Sansiahs, the Doms, the Haburahs, the Aheriahs, the Banriahs, the Bhatus. Each tribe has its own dialect, dress and customs.

A singular feature of Indian life is that persons who would be considered depraved characters in a European country and would bear the stamp of their nature on their faces are not depraved in their own estimation or in that of the people at large. A casual murderer is not ashamed of himself nor abhorred by his neighbors, who welcome him back among them if he escapes the gallows and is released after a term in jail. The universal belief that all things are decreed by fate accounts for this amazing state of feeling. Much more, then, are men regarded with indifference or even respect whose time honored, hereditary and natural profession is robbery with murder.

So the members of these tribes go in and out of the towns and villages without misgivings, and there is not a sign in their faces or manner to indicate that their business is robbery and murder.

When a gang encamps outside of a town the inhabitants feel uncomfortable and take precautions, but cherish no ill will against the strangers. And when robberies and murders occur almost immediately within a radius of twenty miles they take more precautions, but regard the whole affair as a visitation of Providence, like a flood or a fire.

These habitual criminals are not depraved in any sense understood by the people. They simply have the misfortune to belong to a trade which is unpleasant for the neighborhood—like a dyer's or a tanner's.

They are well satisfied with themselves and are as careful as other people of their respectability. They have no unusual vices; they do not get drunk or riotous; they are civil, courteous and unassuming. Cruelty and ferocity are with them neither habits nor pleasures, but simply methods of business.

During the excitement of a sudden attack the people if they do not run away will turn out and aid the police in repelling or capturing the robbers. But if a police inquiry begins two or three days after the robbers have done their work unmolested the people will usually do nothing to help in tracing them and will even deny that they have lost anything.

For many years past the government of India has worked to induce these criminal tribes to settle down to a peaceable and industrious life.

But progress is very slow. Vagabondage is bred in the bone and marrow of the tribes, and marauding is their chosen occupation. From time to time men will suddenly disappear, perpetrate several daring dakaitis in another district and escape over the border into one of the independent native states which cluster round three sides of the united provinces.

The word "dakaiti," also spelled "dacoity," means robbery by a gang of armed men, and a dakait, or dacoit, is a member of such a gang.

An assault by robbers in India differs from one in Europe or America in that it always takes place at night and is accompanied by a tremendous amount of noise. The Indians are a noisy people at all times, and in a robbery with violence the robbers' object is to terrify their victims into a panic; hence whether travelers be waylaid on a lonely road or a wealthy man's house be attacked in a village the assault is always made suddenly, with loud shouts and yells and in the case of a village with beating of drums and waving of lighted torches.

The persons attacked bellow for all they are worth, but rarely offer resistance, and the general effect is so terrifying to the cowardly people that the neighbors either fly or else barricade their doors and lie still till the robbers have got at least a mile away with their plunder. Even the shrieking of women under torture does not put heart into one of them, for the men of a house that is attacked try to bolt for their lives if they can and leave the women to the mercy of the robbers, who apply fire to them and torture them in more atrocious ways to make them tell where the valuables are kept.—New York World.

Old Times In New York.

In 1789 New York city maintained an official who would whip a servant, either free or slave, for the master, charging a shilling for the job. Petty thieves were branded for life with a "T" on the cheek. Mrs. Johanna Young and another woman convicted of grand larceny were driven all over the city in an open cart, then stripped to the waist and given thirty-nine lashes apiece in public and then banished. "Whereupon," says the record, "they went to Philadelphia."

The Tender Hearted Butcher.

"It must have been a very tender hearted butcher who killed this lamb," said the cheerful boarder, pausing in the sawing of his chop.

"Why?" kindly asked the inquisitive man.

"He must have hesitated three or four years before striking the fatal blow."—London Tit-Bits.

His Choice.

"Are you fond of music?" asked a stranger of the young man at the concert, who was applauding vigorously after a pretty girl had sung in a very painful way.

"Not particularly," said the young man frankly, "but I'm exceedingly fond of the musician."

Full Benefit.

Watts—Let's walk along until a car overtakes us. Potts—No. Let's walk the other way until a car meets us. We will catch it sooner, we will go down town just as quick, and we get more ride for our money.

Endless Expense.

"How about these dukes?" inquired Mr. Struckile. "Are they purty expensive?"

"You bet they are," answered Mr. Nurich, who had bought one. "And you want to remember this, Hiram. The first cost is the smallest item."

GREAT INDEED

Will be the Advantage Derived from an Old Remedy in New Form.

MR. J. S. McKEOWN, DRUGGIST OF OUR CITY, INTERESTED.

The Public Marvel, and Doctors Everywhere Pleased.

Probably no branch of science has made such wonderful strides as have been made in the practice of medicine. Diseases that a number of years ago were considered fatal, are now known to be curable. Even consumption is no longer looked upon with the dread that it formerly inspired.

Every one is familiar with methods that have been employed by physicians for years, in cases that they were afraid would develop into a decline. In all troubles of the throat, lungs, bronchial tubes and other similar ailments that were known to end disastrously, about the first thing the doctor would do would be to recommend cod liver oil, for cod liver oil has been recognized for a great many years as possessing peculiar medicinal properties particularly adapted for the cure of such troubles.

Every one knows the objection, however, to the use of this nauseating remedy. So extremely disagreeable is the taste and smell of cod liver oil that many people have actually been unable to take a single dose of it. Many others have made heroic efforts to take the medicine, but have been obliged to abandon it after struggling with the horrible stuff for a few days.

The consequence is that thousands have drifted into incurable diseases who might have been saved, had it been possible to administer this potent medicine. Enough people have been able to assimilate cod liver oil to prove to the medical profession and the world at large, its intrinsic value Such patients as were blessed with unusually strong stomachs derived benefit from cod liver oil. Why, then, could not a form of it be devised, to be administered to patients whose digestive organs had been weakened by disease.

This is exactly what scientists and chemists have been aiming at for years, and this is exactly what has been accomplished by two prominent French chemists. Their secret has been brought to America and our own Mr. J. S. McKeown has succeeded in connecting himself with the prominent firm of Boston Chemists who are placing this new preparation on the market. The preparation in question, now that it has been discovered, like all other great inventions, is simple. By a peculiar process the liver of the live cod is treated in such a manner that there is obtained an extract which contains all, and only all, of the curative properties that have made cod liver oil famous. Not a drop of the horrible-smelling, nauseating oil and grease of the cod's liver enters into the composition of this new and modernized remedy.

This curative extract is the basis of Vinol which Mr. McKeown is presenting to the public. It is placed in a delicious wine, and in itself being tasteless, the consumer is unable to distinguish the fact that he is taking anything more than a pleasant port wine.

Mr. McKeown has indeed been fortunate in making arrangements to handle this new remedy, which goes under the name of Vinol, the cod liver preparation without oil. It is worth any one's while to talk to him about it and to learn directly from him the good that is being done by finding a way to administer what has always been a horrible and much dreaded medicine, in a form that is actually pleasant, to say nothing of being a hundred times more efficient.

BABY'S HAIR.

How to Make It Curl When It Is Inclined to Be Straight.

Straight hair is certainly not becoming to small children, however pretty the color may be, and mamma and nurse may be excused if they resort to fair means so as to induce a natural curl in babyhood.

It has often been noticed that where a little care has been taken to foster an inclination toward wavy hair in earliest youth this has resulted in a becoming growth in later years, and by means of brushing and washing the head in the correct fashion much may be done to encourage a tendency to curl when the child is young.

A baby's hair should always be brushed upward instead of downward, and as each lock is treated it should be given a little twist with the finger, this operation having a particularly good and lasting effect when the hair is damp. Persevered in daily, this will be found to work wonders, even in cases where the natural growth was perfectly straight, although it must be noted that for the first week or two before the hair has become accustomed to the upward trend the effect is hardly pleasing.

One of the best shampoos for a child's hair, especially when long and thick, consists of a well beaten egg made into a froth with hot water and rubbed into the roots of the hair. Borax and ammonia, especially the latter, should be sparingly used, ammonia in particular being inclined to damage the color and shimmer of fair hair, while it frequently causes it to become brittle and split at the ends.

THE ATHLETIC LIFE.

Fewer Fainting Women One of Its Good Results.

Athletics and a more sane system of living have put an end to fainting by women. That is the opinion of an eminent physician who as a young man used to visit a score of "fainting ladies," as he laughingly puts it, each day.

"Not many years ago it was the fashion for a woman to scream and drop down into a dead faint at the least provocation," said the doctor recently. "But now women are ashamed to faint. It is too kittenish. All women want to appear strong even if they are naturally weak. And as a sex they are considerably more robust and more fascinating than they were a few years back.

"The reason for it is that women go in for more outdoor life and recreation than did their mothers or their grandmothers. They may partake of more highly seasoned food and eat more than is good for them at times, but they lead a more athletic life and for that reason do not have to faint, legitimately or otherwise, no matter what the shock may be. We are going to have a stronger race in consequence. For every woman who faints over a sudden shock there are scores who are satisfied to scream and let it go at that. Fainting women are exceptions these days."—New York Press.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

Braid the hair every night into four or five strands, and it will make the hair appear softer and thicker as well as naturally wavy.

Remember that facial eruptions are caused usually by autoinfection; so keep the digestive organs active, bathe daily and drink plenty of water.

To develop the neck bathe it with warm water, then rub with olive oil, using a rotary motion. In the morning use cold water and rub with alcohol.

Rub cocoa butter or mutton tallow into your nails every night and gently press the adherent skin away from the roots. The hangnails will soon disappear.

The constant use of toilet pumice with a lather of toilet soap will keep the growth of superfluous hair invisible, but it will not permanently remove it.

Breathing exercises, vocal culture, calisthenics and cold salt water sponge baths will develop a full, high chest. They must be practiced with regularity, however, to be of benefit.

Wall Sanitation.

Disease germs lurk in cracks and crannies of walls, and even fumigation does not always reach them unless the old coverings are thoroughly scraped from the walls. Yet many people from economy or carelessness do have one paper pasted over another, regardless of the fact that even though there has been no contagious disease in the house, the wall papers have absorbed all sorts of uncleanliness from a long period of exposure. The papers themselves, particularly those of a cheaper grade, are excellent harbors for germs or may exhale poisons owing to the dyes used in their coloring. The idea of putting a clean paper on top of its dusty predecessor is like putting a clean frock over a soiled one. Such a method of dressing would disgust the heart of a cleanly woman, and why should she not treat her house as she would herself?

Scorched Linens.

It is said that when linens are badly scorched the spot can be removed if treated in the following manner: Extract the juice from two peeled onions and put it into an agate or granite vessel. Add to it half an ounce of white castile soap cut into small pieces and two ounces of fuller's earth. Mix them together and then stir in a cup of vinegar. Stand the vessel over the fire and let its contents thoroughly boil. When the mixture has become cool spread it over the scorched linen and let it dry upon the cloth. When well dried wash out the linen.

MYREHALL.

The public examinations of S. S. No. 26, Tyendinaga, was held in the school on the afternoon of Friday, Dec. 21, 1906, and was very largely attended by the parents and friends of the pupils and teacher. The building was tastefully decorated with flags and evergreens. The different classes were examined by their teacher, Miss T. Simmons, assisted by Miss M. Huff, and their ready answers and thorough knowledge of every subject was a great credit to their teacher. After three o'clock there was a concert by the school children, with Mr. S. T. Hodgen in the chair. The songs, recitations and readings were well selected and exceedingly well rendered. At the close of the proceedings Miss Maggie Coulter read an address, and Miss Simmons was presented with a handsome desk. In a few well chosen words Miss Simmons thanked her pupils for their pretty gift, and after singing "God Save the King," the people dispersed to their homes well pleased with their afternoon's entertainment.

Eye-Strain Producing Pain in the Back.

In two cases lately where the family physician suspected eye-strain as the cause, because in the first case where the pain was in the small of the back, it was bad only during school hours: in the second case where it was between the shoulders and down the spine, it was after using the eyes for a long time at close work. On being tested in both cases, astigmatism was found, and after being corrected with the proper glasses all the pain in the back disappeared in both cases. In all cases where headaches are worse after close work, shopping, or after a journey or long drive, etc., they are invariably caused by eye-strain.

We correct the eye-strain, and all the results are cured.

A Life-Saver.

We mentioned several days ago the arrival in our city of Mr. Thomas Corbett, now of Calgary, and his bride, to visit his mother and numerous relatives. Beyond any other former resident of our city Mr. Corbett has a record that is most enviable, for to his credit stands the saving of many people from drowning. As a contributor says: "It is not to our credit that no public recognition of his heroism has been made or his name even submitted to the Royal Humane Society for its medal. How many boys has he taught to swim? Their name is legion, and his prowess in the water exceeds that of any resident in the history of the city."

Cut this out and take it to R. Templeton & Co.'s drug store and get a free sample of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. For biliousness and constipation they are unequalled. They improve the appetite, strengthen the digestion and regulate the liver and bowels.

It is always much easier to get interested in making art dollies for Hottentots than it is to be just simply human to the washerwoman at home.

Death Ended Poor Dean's Sufferings.

VICTIM OF SCALDING ACCIDENT PASSED AWAY AT THE HOSPITAL LAST NIGHT.

Eugene Dean, the G. T. R. fireman, who at an early hour on Monday morning was badly scalded whilst in the discharge of his duties on the line, died last night at the hospital here. The remains, after being prepared for burial, were at an early hour this morning shipped to Goderich for interment.

The unfortunate man was accidentally scalded by the blowing off of the crown sheet of the boiler of the engine he was firing upon. Deceased was a married man 28 years of age, and resided at York, Goderich being his former home. He had been an employee of the G.T.R. for some time, and was a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen. In religion he was a Roman Catholic. A wife and two children survive.

"Our Lodge" — Past Master Bro. R. Cole.

"The King," was then proposed and responded to by all in singing God Save the King.

Pleasure and Pain In This Function.

BROTHERHOOD OF HOLLOWAY ST. CHURCH HELD A BANQUET LAST NIGHT.

A social function took place last evening at Holloway St. Church, which had both a pleasant and a regrettable side.

It was a gathering of the members of the Brotherhood in connection with that church, who desired to honor their ex-President, Mr. W. J. Magrath, who is about to leave the city to take up his residence at Edmonton, Alta. Mr. Magrath did much to inaugurate the Brotherhood and keep it in a flourishing condition. Not only will he be much missed in this connection, but by the church organizations generally.

A supper was served, and was presided over by Mr. H. Holgate, President of the Brotherhood. Nearly all the members were present, and a few guests. After justice had been done to the spread a toast list was carried out and nearly all present spoke, referring to the guest of the evening and regretting his departure from the city.

Mr. Magrath spoke at some length, reviewing his connection with the church, and said he was pleased that it was now out of debt and presenting such an attractive appearance. He incidentally remarked that he might at no distant day again return to Belleville to reside permanently.

Mr. Hess, Secretary of the Y.M. C.A., gave an excellent address, reviewing generally the work of the Association and the prospects of the local branch.

Rev. R. H. Leitch, the pastor, D. Barragar, P. F. Canniff and G. T. Woodley were amongst those who spoke and their remarks were full of praise for what Mr. Magrath had done for the church generally.

The singing of the hymn "God be with you till we meet again," brought the gathering to a close.

Christmas Tree.

The annual Christmas entertainment of Emmanuel Church Sunday School was held last evening, and, despite the inclement weather, there was a good attendance. The children furnished the programme, which consisted of carols, motion songs, dialogues, etc., after which gifts were distributed from the Christmas tree.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"DOLLY VARDEN"

The very inclement weather, there is no doubt, had much to do with the light attendance at the opera house last night, when the pleasing comic opera, "Dolly Varden" was put on. The performance was given with the same finish and excellence as before, and those who saw it were, of course, delighted. Dainty "Dolly Varden," with its wealth of scenery and costumes and catchy music, will always be a favorite in Belleville.

The Railways and The Lake Shore

The following letter appears in a Toronto paper:

To the Editor: I note that you are supporting the property owners on the lake front in their opposition to the sacrifice of their water rights, which will be entailed if the railways are allowed to lay vandal hands upon it. The public, too, are interested. Beauty of scene, preservation of health, the right to freedom of innocent pleasure are all public assets. The water is public domain; so, too, is the free access to it, and to its advantages. Surely Toronto has suffered enough! My two points are these: (1) These railways propose, for purely profit purposes, to advertise a scenic route, and also to save a possible grade. They are not actuated by public policy, or as philanthropists, planning transportation for the general advantage of Canada. (2) Not merely is East Toronto—Kew Beach—interested, but the whole front, including the Bay of Quinte. Why should our attractiveness as a residential centre be destroyed because a commercial undertaking chooses to trade on the benefits of our water front? Access to the water — to a wharf, is all right but cutting off the entire water front is another thing. Surely, parliament will not permit this; and if a franchise is given to expropriate the property of another—nolens volens — then it should be with all safeguards to public rights. Once their tentacles get their grip, then protest will be useless. Let our members of parliament think and act. We want the C.P.R. as we want peace, but not at any price.

Institute Official Has His Troubles.

Canadian Mute: Mr. Peppin has the sympathy of all in the Institution in the trouble he has lately been passing through. We mentioned in a former issue that his eldest son, Ray, had been taken to the hospital with scarlet fever. Mr. Peppin remained at home until danger of infection was past and had just returned to duty when his youngest son was stricken with the disease in a mild form and Mr. Peppin had to go into quarantine again. During Mr. Peppin's absence Mr. Lloyd took up the engineer's duties and made necessary repairs in the department, succeeding in a way that was creditable to him; another man had to be engaged for the furnace firing until Mr. Peppin was able to return to duty again.

Belleville Mare Pleases New Owner.

The following letter refers to a well-known and beautiful mare formerly owned in this city:

New York, Nov. 10, 1906.

Mr. J. A. Wheeler, Belleville, Ont. Canada;

Dear Sir, — Your letter addressed to the manager of our Toronto office, Mr. E. B. Quackenbush, has been forwarded to us here.

We desire to thank you for your straightforward letter regarding the bay mare "Love Better," that we purchased from you during the Toronto exhibition. It is true this horse kicked on two or three occasions when we first drove her in New York, but we are satisfied now it was through putting breeching on her and using a collar that did not fit. We had considerable trouble with her the first two weeks, but we are pleased to say she has entirely forgotten it, and we are now well pleased with her. We had her out in the park driving tandem, your mare in the lead and Mr. Wilmott's mare in the cart, and we can assure you they both attracted a good deal of attention. We are well pleased with our bargain, and would not sell "Love Better" to-day for twice the amount we paid for her; in fact we have been offered $2,000, but she is not for sale.

Yours very truly,

Illustrated Lecture In the City Hall.

An entertainment under the auspices of St. Thomas' Church Sunday School was held in the City Hall last evening. Owing to the inclement weather the attendance was not as large as it would have been under favorable circumstances. Rev. Canon McNab, of St. Alban's Cathedral, Toronto, was present and gave an address in reference to the late Queen Victoria's jubilee and King Edward's coronation. Many views of the jubilee and coronation were shown, and these were explained by the Rev. gentleman. The Rector, Rev. Rural Dean Beamish, was chairman and, at the conclusion of the address, prizes were distributed to the scholars.

This Liquor Case Was Dismissed.

ONE OF THE INFORMERS SAID TO HAVE AN UNENVIABLE REPUTATION.

In the evidences submitted at the Police Court on Wednesday in the case of G. Wardhaugh, who was charged with a violation of the Liquor Act, it was showed that one of the informers, namely, C. Hanson, had rather an unenviable reputation. It was shown that on December 1st, 1906, he was charged with being drunk and disorderly, and pleaded guilty. The fine and costs amounted to $9.50. He was at one time a member of the Hamilton police force, and on October 17th, 1905, was subject to a fine and temporarily suspended for neglecting to report off duty. On May 26th, 1906, he was again reported to the Commissioners for insubordination and being asleep on duty, to which charge he pleaded guilty. He was subsequently released from the force.

It was also sworn to here that on Sunday, Nov. 18th, 1906, the day he alleged he obtained liquor at Mr. Wardhaugh's house, he was under the influence of liquor. He admitted that he had that day secured several drinks about the city.

As a result of the investigation the case against Mr. Wardhaugh was dismissed. Mr. Anderson represented the Crown and Mr. Carnew appeared for the accused.

One blow from a sledge exploded the contents and only a small fragment of the white man has been found. Six other men were dismembered and seven persons were seriously injured. A mule and car were blown through the portal of the tunnel and down the mountainside. The car was wrecked, but the mule escaped unscratched. Her name was Maud.

MANITOBA SUFFERS LOSS.

Protests Pass Unheeded — References In the Speech From the Throne to the Boundary Dispute.

Winnipeg, Jan. 4.—The Legislature of Manitoba convened yesterday at 3 o'clock. The reply to the speech from the throne was moved by F. Ashdown of Morden, and seconded by Glen Campbell of Gilbert Plains. The speech intimated that the Government, during recess, had been pressing upon the Government of Canada the justice of Manitoba's claim for an extension of the boundaries.

A conference had been held at Ottawa, consisting of representatives of Ontario, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, with members of the Federal Government, "but, I regret to inform you, with no substantial results to our province." Strong protests had also been made as to the methods, delays and costs in selecting swamp lands that properly belong to the province, under the agreements made between the Dominion and the province in 1885.

"The results of such protests, however, have not so far been of any effect, and as a consequence we not only suffer direct financial loss, but are losing large blocks of land that properly belong to Manitoba."

The recent vote taken on the principle of public-owned system of telephones," the speech says, "has been accepted as a declaration of approval, and my Government has already taken the necessary steps to construct at least 1,000 miles of long-distance lines during the coming summer, which is a guarantee of greatly reduced rates for that very important service.

"The large increase of population, as shown in the census returns, demanding that some changes be made in the boundary of the electoral division, Parliament will therefore be asked to deal with the matter so that a more equable representation may be secured.

"A bill for the purpose of amending the Public Act will be submitted for your consideration, the main feature of which will consist of provisions for the flying of the Union Jack upon a public house in the province."

MANITOBA SNOW-BOUND.

Situation Worse Than For Many Years—Railways Feel It.

Winnipeg, Jan. 4.—One of the worst snowstorms which has struck Winnipeg in years has been in progress during the past few days.

The railroads are being taxed to the utmost in fighting the snow, and yesterday all trains were late or abandoned entirely.

The C.P.R. state that the last snowstorm, when eight inches fell within forty-eight hours, cost them $250,000 The Canadian Northern this winter is costing $12,000 a day more than in the summer time to operate, not counting the loss of traffic.

Old-timers state that even the record of 1879, when the town was snowed in for nearly a month, has been beaten.

McINTOSH BROS.

PETTY DICTATOR SHOT

Assassin's Bullet Slays St. Petersburg's Prefect of Police.

Major General Von Der Launitz Dies In Two Minutes After Being Shot In the Base of the Brain—Nearby Officer Cut Down With His Sabre the Slayer and Killed Him—Active Against Terrorists.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 4.—Major-General Von Der Launitz, prefect of police of St. Petersburg, was shot and killed by a young man at the Institute of Experimental Medicine yesterday afternoon.

Von Der Launitz, at the invitation of Prince Peter Alexandrovitch, Duke of Oldenburg, husband of the Grand Duchess Olga, youngest sister of Emperor Nicholas, was attending the consecration of the institute chapel. During the services there and while standing near several high officials the prefect was approached from the rear by a young man who drew a revolver and shot him in the base of the brain.

Assassin Cut Down.

As the assassin turned to flee, one of the officers present drew his sabre and cut the man down and killed him. The identity of the assassin has not been established.

After dissolution of the Russian Parliament, powers little short of those of a petty dictator were conferred upon Von Der Launitz. He issued a long proclamation, explaining the Government's reasons for dispersing the legislators. Last September Von Der Launitz refused to legalize the Constitutional Democratic party on the ground that its program did not clearly show its political views and refused to legalize the Octoberist party because of the omission in its petition of the address of its headquarters.

Made 588 Arrests In Three Days.

Some idea of his activity may be gathered from figures which he caused to be published Dec. 28 last. It was then announced that the "flying section of the secret police" had made 588 arrests in St. Petersburg during the three days preceding Dec. 29. The prisoners, who, including thirty-three women, were charged with "revolutionary activity and illegal election agitation." It was added that further arrests and searches were proceeding vigorously.

On Nov. 23 last, Von Der Launitz, acting, it was said, under a hint from a higher authority, dispersed a meeting of Constitutional Democrats in St. Petersburg, which he himself had previously sanctioned. The police authorities complained that the speakers would not confine their remarks to answers to their political opponents.

On Nov. 14 last Von Der Launitz suppressed The Russ of St. Petersburg because of the publication of an article of M. Karavaeff, a well-known jurist, who deplored what he termed "the debasement of all moral consciousness in Russia."

Vladimir Von Der Launitz came of an old family of the German nobility, in the Baltic provinces. He served with distinction during the Turkish War of 1887-88, was decorated for bravery, and, in addition to holding the rank of major-general, he was one of the equerries of the court. Von Der Launitz was Governor of Tambov for three years. He stood high in the favor of the Emperor.

Dr. Dubrovin, president of the reactionary League of the Russian Police, was attacked by a revolutionist on the street Wednesday night, several shots being fired at him without effect.

FOR POLAND'S FREEDOM.

National League's Objects Are Militant to Threatening Degree.

Breslau, Silesia, Prussia, Jan. 4.—The articles of association of the Polish National League describe the aim of the league as being "to unite all the national resources for the restoration of the independence of Poland."

The central committee of the league is bound to support any revolutionary action tending to change or destroy the Government.

Article 10 reads: "In case of war between the powers that took part in the dismemberment of Poland, the league's principal care must be to secure for Poland at the critical moment an important position and therefore the central committee must prepare plans for a military and an administrative organization. The committee must collect accurate information concerning the amount of money in the country available in the event of war, and also must arrange a military intelligence system, to obtain information regarding the number, equipment, mobilization, quarters and transportation of troops, the plans of fortresses and magazines, and all technical secrets."

Freezing to Death.

Odessa, Jan. 4.—Snowstorms and blizzards of exceptional severity are prevailing throughout southern and southwestern Russia.

Traffic on the railroads is interrupted and great loss of life is reported.

According to accounts 160 persons succumbed to the cold in the southwestern provinces alone.

Made Soldiers to End Strike.

Sofia, Bulgaria, Jan. 4.—The train service in Bulgaria is greatly disorganized, owing to a strike of the employes of the railroads. The authorities will summon all the striking railroad men to join the colors, all of them belonging to the army reserve and they will then be drafted into the engineer corps and detailed for duty on the railroads.

BIG FIRE AT PORTSMOUTH.

Over Million Dollars Damage to Army and Navy Stores — Corps Equipment Destroyed.

Portsmouth, Eng., Jan. 4.—The fire which broke out Wednesday night among the camp and equipment stores on the Gun wharf here caused damage, according to the official estimates, to the amount of $1,250,000.

The entire equipment of an army corps was destroyed. Although the conflagration is under control, masses of smouldering blankets and other stores occasionally break out into fresh flames.

MAN KILLED; FIREMEN HURT.

Property Loss In Montreal Fire $700,000—Exciting Features.

Montreal, Jan. 4.—One life lost and property to the extent of more than $700,000 destroyed was the result of a fire here yesterday.

The dead man is Hormidas Gagnon, who was crushed in his own home by a falling wall when trying to rescue his son, who escaped without injury.

Following is a list of estimated damage: Two buildings of G. W. Stephens estate, $300,000; I. Mistiken Co., $10,000; Cheeseborough Manufacturing Co., $60,000; Otis Tenson Co., $250,000; Smith Patterson Co., $50,000; Graham Co., $40,000; Gillette Safety Razor Co., $25,000; Stewart McDonald, $10,000; Woodburn Sons Co., $30,000; Hudson Bay Smelting Co., $50,000; Thos. G. Doyle, $2,000; Montreal Cotton Co., $2,000; Allan Duplicating Co., $3,000; Telson Co., $15,000; Standard Clothing Co., $40,000; Beaver Rubber Co., $5,000; Bargain Clothing $10,000; Dodge Pulley Co., $20,000.

The St. David's lane wall crashed down and many of the firemen were injured, and it was there that Gagnon met his death. The injured firemen are John Dupuis, Patrick Hamel, John Livingstone, J. Brosseau, Michael McGrab, James Messett. None are very seriously injured.

Fully three-fourths of the firms affected have been burnt out, but it is understood that the majority of the losses are covered by insurance.

Brennan, the caretaker, told his wife to get a box containing $500. In her excitement she picked up a clock, leaving the cash to burn. With his family, he had to run from his room, and before he could reach the street it was necessary to smash two doors.

The insurance covering the losses amounts to $334,000, well divided, not including the Gorham Co. and the Smith-Patterson Co., whose insurance is carried in the United States and will come close to a total of a quarter of a million.

Big Fire In New York.

New York, Jan. 4.—Fire destroyed the big furniture store of Coperthwaite & Sons at Third avenue and One hundred and twenty-first street last night, entailing a loss of half a million dollars or more and causing the injury of four firemen, none seriously.

Strathcona's Retirement.

London, Jan. 4.—(C. A. P.)—The Yorkshire Post's London correspondent says the view that Lord Strathcona has gone to Ottawa to plead that the Government allow him to resign is discredited, it being contrary to all that is known by his friends. There is the best authority for believing that matters are the other way about.

A New Stomach

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets Restore Lifeless Organs to Normal Condition.

A TRIAL PACKAGE FREE.

Many a sufferer from dyspepsia, indigestion and kindred ailments of the digestive organs carries around an absolutely useless stomach — a dead load, and a cess-pool for ever-increasing disorders. The muscles are seemingly worn-out, the mucous lining has lost its secretive power, and food taken into the stomach lies there and ferments, causing sour eructations, belchings, heartburn, dizziness and other distressing conditions. Many sufferers have given up in despair until they have been induced by some interested friend to try a box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are the dyspeptic's sure and only hope. They are a natural restorative of healthy action to the stomach and small intestines, because they supply just the elements that the weak stomach lacks—pepsin, diastase, golden seal and other digestives.

If you are afflicted with any of the symptoms above described, be assured that your digestive organs are losing power—they need help and there is no more sensible help to be given them than to supply elements which will do the work of digestion for them.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have been found by the test of reputable physicians in the United States and Great Britain to have remarkable digestive powers, one grain of the active principle of these tablets being sufficient to digest 3,000 grains of ordinary food. It is plain that no matter what the condition of your stomach, or how far your disease has progressed, one only of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets taken at meal time will do the work — give your stomach an opportunity to regain its lost powers, the muscles will be strengthened, the glands invigorated, and you will be a new man.

It costs nothing to prove the effectiveness of this cure. Send for a free sample package to-day. F. A. Stuart Co., 78 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at 50 cents a box.

MR. M'GILL DREW $6,000

Drafts on Cuyler, Morgan & Co. Ranged From $25 to $2,500.

Mr. Vaughan, of That Firm, Said That Had They Had an Inkling of the Truth They Would Have Stopped the Account — Commission Completes the Taking of Evidence In New York City.

New York, Jan. 4.—Special Commissioner George Angus and Crown Attorney Corley yesterday completed their investigations of the dealings between former Manager McGill of the Ontario Bank and various New York brokerage houses. They will return to Toronto to-day. Commissioner Angus complimated the brokers on their uniform courtesy.

The chief purpose of the commission being to trace any actual funds of the insolvent bank to the hands of McGill from the brokers, in the form of cash on sight, drafts and the like. Commissioner Angus elicited from Cuyler, Morgan & Co. the information that McGill had drawn from that firm about $6,000 in drafts ranging from $25 to $2,500.

"If our firm here had known we were dealing with bank funds we would have sent his money back. I always understood McGill was a wealthy banker living in Toronto, and was using his own funds here on the market. If we had had an inkling of the truth we would have stopped the account," said Mr. Vaughan.

From Laidlaw & Co. and Charles Head & Co. full statements were secured, which were of a character highly satisfactory to the Canadian officials.

Marshall, Spader & Co. objected to making a statement for publication, but supplied the commissioner with a statement and copy of the McGill account, which filled sixty pages in their books and covered more than two years of his dealing through them in stocks and grain. His marginal dealings with this firm is said to be about fourteen millions.

Ottawa, Jan. 4.—The Grand Trunk Railway Co. has filed with the Railway Commission the location plans for a proposed new entrance into Toronto. This proposed diversion is in order to avoid the heavy grade on the Scarboro' Heights. If gone on with the line will take two years to build.

The Minister of Railways will hear the Grand Trunk's application for approval of the route map of the contemplated diversion on the 16th inst.

Toronto Will Fight It.

Toronto, Jan. 4.—The application of the G.T.R. and C.N.R. for an order granting them permission to enter the city from the east along the water front has aroused the powers that be at the City Hall, and strenuous opposition will be made to the granting of the order by the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Montreal, Jan. 5.—The future Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal is now Master Donald Howard, who is 16 years of age, is attending school near London.

A great many people have asked if his lordship's title would die with him, and the query has not till now received a satisfactory response.

Your correspondent is informed, on undoubted authority, that when Lord Strathcona sent the famous regiment of horse to South Africa it was then arranged by the Imperial authorities that Donald Howard, eldest son of Dr. Howard of London, whose wife is Lord Strathcona's only daughter, should receive the peerage at his grandfather's death.

Young Howard will no doubt fall heir to the greater part of Strathcona's estate, which is estimated at $40,000,000.

It is stated that his lordship will only be in Montreal a few days.

His brother-in-law and confidential agent here, Joseph Hardisty, died a week ago, and Strathcona comes here quite probably to place his Canadian interests in other hands.

Surprise to Secretary.

Halifax, N.S., Jan. 5.—Among the passengers on the steamer Empress of Britain, arrived yesterday morning, was Lord Strathcona, Canada's High Commissioner in London.

William Garson, his confidential agent, stated that his lordship's health was very good, and that he had stood the voyage well. Asked as to the reported resignation, Mr. Garson said that he knew nothing of it.

In reply to the wireless message from Halifax, Lord Strathcona, while still 100 miles from port, sent the following: "My present visit to Canada is rendered necessary by my personal affairs. (Signed) Strathcona."

"Personal Affairs."

St. John, N.B., Jan. 5.—The Empress of Britain arrived in the harbor at 8 o'clock last night. Lord Strathcona will leave for the west on a special train at 7 o'clock this morning. In answer to a Marconigram last night, the High Commissioner said:

"We may well be proud of position of Dominion this New Year, and every true Canadian will do his best to advance its prosperity. Personal affairs require my visit to Canada."

EXPORT DUTY ON POWER.

Dominion Government Decide Upon an Important Step.

Ottawa, Jan. 5.—In the interest of Canadian consumers of electricity the Dominion Government have decided upon a most important policy. It is no less than obtaining authority from Parliament to impose an export duty upon electrical energy, and to forbid any company from exporting power without a license, to be granted in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Governor-in-Council. The object of the proposed legislation is to insure to Canadian consumers all the power they require at reasonable prices.

Who Is Hugh McDougal?

Mexico City, Jan. 5.—Hugh McDougal, a widely-known railroad man, committed suicide by shooting himself Thursday night. McDougal was especially well-known in Toronto.

Toronto, Jan. 5.—Enquiries among railway and engineering officials failed to find any clue to McDougal's identity in Toronto.

Ship Wrecked; Sailor Drowns.

Chatham, Mass., Jan. 5.—The two-masted schooner Alice T. Boardman of Calais, Maine, bound from Calais for Hyannis, with a cargo of lumber, went ashore on Handkerchief Shoals early yesterday and is a total wreck. One member of the crew, Thomas Hendry of St. John, N.B., was drowned.

Oregon Train Wrecked.

Comstock, Ore., Jan. 5.—The northbound Portland express, the fast passenger train on the Southern Pacific Railroad between San Francisco and Portland, was wrecked Thursday night, two miles north of here. The engineer was killed and the fireman is missing.

Discharged.

Gnesan, Prussia, Jan. 5.—The prosecution of several alleged Polish Nationalists for holding a public meeting without Governmental consent, resulted yesterday in their discharge from custody. One of the defendants was a candidate for the Reichstag.

20,000 On Strike In Mexico.

Mexico City, Jan. 5.—It is estimated that 20,000 operatives in the clothes factories on the Pacific are on strike. Their grievances will be arbitrated. They demand higher salaries

TO REVEAL SEIZED DOCUMENTS.

Threatened Action By French Government May Aggravate Situation.

Rome, Jan. 5.—The Osservatore Romano yesterday published this communication from the Vatican:

"It is stated that the French Government intends to publish the text of some of the documents which were seized at the Papal Nunciature in Paris, Dec. 11. The Holy See declares that it declines any responsibility for the publication, leaving it to the persons who may think themselves injured by the publication of the documents to use the means which they judge best to protect their rights. It must be borne in mind, however, that no inventory was made at the time of the seizure of the documents by the French Government."

It was stated at the Vatican that the publication by France of some of the documents seized at the Papal Nunciature would aggravate the fact that their seizure did not appear to be altogether justified. As no inventory was made at the time, the Vatican may even question the genuineness of documents as published.

FOR THE KING'S HIGHWAY.

More Tenders Are Called For Transcontinental Construction.

Ottawa, Jan. 5.—The Canada Gazette to-day contains a notice that tenders will be received by the National Transcontinental Railway Commission up to Feb. 14 for the construction of five more sections of the new national highway.

These will include 50 miles from Moncton westward; about 60 miles from Grand Falls, N.B., westward; 150 miles from Quebec eastward; about 50 miles from La Tugue westward, and 150 miles eastward from the Abitibi River.

Certified cheques must accompany all tenders, the lowest being $75,000 for the shortest section mentioned, and the highest $225,000 for the longer sections.

These sections, together with those that are already let, will constitute about half the total distance.

THE POLICE CHIEFS.

Urge Severe Punishment For Habitual Drunkards On Minister of Justice.

Ottawa, Jan. 5.—A deputation from the Association of Chiefs of Police of Canada, headed by Col. Sherwood, waited upon the Minister of Justice yesterday to bring to his notice resolutions passed at the recent meeting in Toronto.

The deputation emphasized the need of inserting in the criminal code a definition of the term "habitual drunkard" and the necessity of legislating for his punishment; in other words if a man was convicted a certain number of times the judge could have no option but to inflict a severe punishment, specifically stated in the code, and which punishment would be the more severe if convictions increased.

It was also stated by the deputation that a central bureau for identification purposes would be useful.

Hon. Mr. Aylesworth promised to give the matters his attention.

Raisuli, the Bandit.

New York, Jan. 5.—A despatch from Tangier says: Raisuli remains at Zinat and watches the gradual withdrawal of his former friends in impotent rage. He has returned to his mountaineer's costume. He carried his rifle always in his hand and scarcely sleeps at all.

Enquiry to Be Thorough.

Ottawa, Jan. 5.—It was ascertained at the Marine Department yesterday that after Capt. Donnelly will conclude his preliminary investigation into the wreck of the Golspie on Lake Superior, Capt. Spain will hold a thorough and searching enquiry.

Six Deaths At Scranton.

Scranton, Pa., Jan. 5.—Eleven new cases of typhoid fever were reported for the 24 hours ending at noon yesterday, a total of 981 and 47 in Dunmore. Six deaths occurred since Thursday night, making the total 79.

THE MAYORALTY.

Into every discussion or controversy, whether it be political, social or theological, there must always come the last word. Here is our last word in connection with the Mayoralty contest which will have been decided by the time another issue of this paper will lay before its readers.

The contest, it is gratifying to note, has not been embittered to any great extent by personalities or acrid recrimination. Both candidates have worked hard, and whoever is beaten, he will know he has given his successful opponent a fight. Please do not take from the above the inference that Mayor Sulman, in our opinion, stands any chance of defeat. Nay, nay. We have too much confidence in the good sense of the citizens of Belleville to think that they would give modest, unassuming merit the cold shoulder.

The contest which closes next Monday has been somewhat unique owing to the fact that politics has been in no way introduced into it. Mayor Sulman has been assured of the support of members of both parties, and that support comes as a tribute for the hard, conscientious work he has done for the city during his two years as Mayor and four years as alderman.

And what stone can be thrown at Mr C. N. Sulman for his manner of conducting himself since he has been Chief Magistrate of this city? Genial, courteous, approachable, hard-working, thorough in his methods; always on the spot when needed. Can anyone point out where he has neglected the city's interests? Not one.

And what is the argument brought against Mayor Sulman? Simply this: Some people say, "Two years is enough for him. We want to see the honors go round." Was ever a more misleading statement made?

The Mayoralty, we submit, is not a bauble to give as a plaything to any citizen who feels that his standing might be enhanced by being able to write "Mayor" before his name. The position of Mayor is not an empty honor, it is, just now, a position which must, in the city's interest, be filled by the very best man in sight. Large questions loom up, which must be dealt with if Belleville is not to lag behind in the march of progress. The present Mayor has proved, by his dealing with the police force and other matters, that he is not afraid to hew to the line.

In running for a third term the Mayor has violated no precedent. Other men have done it; in the years to come, no doubt, other men will do it. To sum up, then, here is the matter in a nutshell; it is the duty of all citizens, who have the interests of Belleville at heart, to elect as their Chief Magistrate the best man in sight irrespective of all sentimental considerations and false impressions. That man is Mr. Chas. N. Sulman. Vote for him and work for him on Monday next.

Pure salt is just as important as pure water or pure milk.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Last call. Vote for Sulman and a happy new year.

"A lady to vote for me," the Chairman of Gas will say. "Dear me, I'm glad to meter."

Our candidate, who is running for the School Board in Murney Ward, says he'll reach the top of the poll if he has to use a ladder.

Some people appear to think that, there being three candidates for School Trustee in the field in Murney Ward, two of them are to be elected. Not so. Only one is to be elected. Put the newspaper man in. He's up-to-date and in touch with local conditions.

It is well known that Mayor Sulman objected strongly to going into the Council, and only did so after considerable persuasion. After he had taken up the burden of office and mapped out the work he desired to accomplish he should by all means be given another term to carry out his plans. Thus will business men be encouraged to take up some distinct line of policy when entering the Council. Be sure and mark your ballot for Sulman.

Contemptible. One of the arguments used by Mr. Nathanael Vermilyea, why Mr. Denyes should not be elected Reeve of Thurlow, is that he voted for a retiring allowance of $625 to Mr. Thos. Wills, after over 50 years' service as Treasurer of the County, during which time not a ten-cent piece went astray. The sum was no recompense for services rendered. It shows the calibre of the man. What an enlightened and public-spirited Senator he would make. Every man in Belleville who has a vote in Thurlow should record it against him. There is not a county in Ontario which would not have quadrupled the amount to such an honest and exemplary officer.

"A Ratepayer" writes very truthfully and pertinently: "Mr. Editor,—I would like to say this to my fellow-electors: On Monday you will be called upon to mark your ballot for aldermen for the year 1907. By that act you select the men you desire to have the handling of about $200,000 of your money and the taxation of about $4,000,000 of your property. These men will have not only your streets, etc. under their care but will have the management of your $200,000 water plant and your $100,000 gas plant. You want big men for this job. Small men and unsuccessful men might better be selected to stay at home till they grow to proportions equal to the job or get their own affairs into successful condition. If a man has been unsuccessful in his own small affairs it is no reason why he should be given the management of the larger affairs of the whole municipality."

It will be remembered that, on Thursday evening, we published a letter written by Ald. Knox, and, in an editorial note, promised to investigate the correctness of certain statements made by him. This we have done. In his letter Mr. Knox made this statement:

"Now, as you know, our Provincial Government appointed the Hydro-Electric Power Commission to ascertain the available power and report on the various rivers in Ontario which they have most thoroughly done. Now we have their report on our own Moira, which those promoters of other powers seem inclined to dispute; now who shall be believe, the Government Commissioners, who have no interest in the matter, or those people who are trying to sell us power from another source."

"Now," to use one of Mr. Knox's favorite expressions, let us look at the Commission's report, in which he appears to have so much faith: The report of the Chief Engineer states, on page 7,

"The water-powers of the Moira river and its tributaries are numerous and a considerable number of them can be economically developed but none of them are of sufficient importance to justify their being developed for the purpose of long-distance transmission of electricity. They will doubtless be all utilized in time for local purposes—in mining, generating electricity for local use, also for direct hydraulic use in paper and flour mills."

"Now," let us see what the report of the Commission proper says. Here it is, on page 9 of the report:

"The Moira does not possess water-powers of sufficient importance to warrant their being made use of for transmission purposes and their development can safely be left to the united efforts of those parties on the Moira river water-shed who are interested, and who could, by forming a water-power association and incurring a moderate expenditure for storage in Loon Lake and other natural reservoirs, considerably improve the water-powers of the water-shed."

Nothing more, it would appear, remains to be said, except to thank Ald Knox for his tender solicitude for the welfare of certain parties in this city who appear to believe that Belleville needs Healey Falls power, and who, he infers, have been misled by the smooth tales of a promoter. People who know the parties in question will withhold their sympathy for a little while. It will be a clever promoter, indeed, who will overreach them.

As before stated, however, The Intelligencer is wedded to no scheme for obtaining power for this city. So long as it comes we care not how it comes. But would it not be well for Mr. Knox and others, before making statements about Moira River power, to study more closely, the meaning of the language used by the Commissioners?

So much for the Moira power. "Now," will not Mr. Knox upon reflection come to the conclusion that his reflection upon those who are promoting a scheme to secure cheap electric power for Belleville, is unjust? Of course all who invest in an enterprise expect to reap some reward from such investment, while they hope that the localities affected, such as Belleville, will benefit therefrom. If they do not, then the investment is a dead loss. Does Mr. Knox expect to profit by the large investments he has made in the West? If he does, is he to be blamed? Not a bit of it. We hope he may profit largely. And a like hope is extended to those who are endeavoring to secure cheap power for Belleville, and surrounding localities.

Let's have a little more practical business work, and less clap-trap.

By the fire which occurred last night Belleville loses the best advertisement it ever had, and Belleville's regret will be shared by the travelling public.

The loss of the Quinte comes as a calamity to Belleville. The matter is fully treated in another column. Will the hotel be rebuilt? It should be and as speedily as possible, but the question of ways and means is another matter. Everyone must admit, however, that the loss of the famous Quinte is a serious blow to the social, business and mercantile life of Belleville. The question is not so much, "Will it be rebuilt?" as "Can Belleville people afford to allow it to remain unbuilt?"

Some interested people advocate the election of Mr. Sinclair over our present Mayor, Mr. Sulman, saying, "He is not entitled to a third term." That is no argument whatever. In this instance MR. SULMAN is the man to vote for. R. J. Graham had THREE terms as Mayor, and J. W. Johnson served FOUR terms. Don't be misled. Vote for Sulman,

What shall we do to be saved? was the title of one of Robt. Ingersoll's lectures. People of faith and people of no faith flocked to hear it. Thousands are asking "What shall I do to get rid of dandruff?" The answer is, "Kill the germ that causes dandruff, falling hair and finally baldness; and the only thing that will do it is Newbro's Herpicide." That is the very latest discovery of the laboratory, and it is the only preparation that claims to, or that will, kill the pestiferous dandruff germ. It also is a delightful hair-dressing, free from oil or grease or sticky substances. Try it and be convinced of its actual merit. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Make Mr. Sulman's majority as large as you can. He has made an excellent Mayor and is worthy of the loyal support of all classes of our citizens.

The Bulgarians have a novel way of putting a stop to a strike. Just now the train service in Bulgaria is greatly disorganized owing to a strike of the employes of the railroads. The authorities, however, are hopeful that the usual state of things will be quickly restored, as they intend to summon all the striking railroad men to join the colors, all of them belonging to the army reserve, and they will then be drafted into the engineer corps and detailed for duty on the railroads.

British insurance companies have denied all liabilities arising out of the Valparaiso earthquake, on the ground that the policies do not cover losses sustained through earthquakes.

The Governor of Missouri must be a reformer of an advanced type. In his message to the Legislature, he recommends that lobbying should be made a crime, and also recommends a law making it a felony to bet on a horse race, legislation to suppress bucket shops, rigid child labor laws, and prison punishment for violation of the anti-trust laws. It is not likely Missourians are good enough to carry out the Governor's recommendations.

Lord Strathcona, now on his way to Canada, has proved himself to be a wag. While in mid-ocean he received a Marconigram, sent by the Daily Mirror of London, England, as follows: "Strathcona, Empress of Britain: Your resignation rumored. Kindly reply whether true. If so, why?" To which Strathcona replied "Daily Mirror: Thanks for Marconigram. Progressing nicely. Happy New Year. Strathcona." No doubt the Mirror was satisfied with the information received.

The late strike in Hamilton will cost the city about $10,000. In addition, there is the loss of percentage to the city on the street railway earnings, the heavy expense the company went to in taking strike-breakers there and hiring detectives and the loss of business is roughly estimated at $75,000. These strikers, instigated by Yankee interlopers, care little for the injury done; they pay little of the expense.

How enjoyable it must be to live in a free country, where people can do as they please. The United States for instance. If the reader does not realize this fact, let him or her read the following: "Statistics gathered at New Orleans indicate that seventy-two persons were lynched in the United States last year, or on an average of six a month. Of the victims, two were white and 70 black, one being a woman. The crimes which were held to justify this record of violence included such comparatively mild offences as stealing a calf, stealing a dollar, carrying a pistol, disorderly conduct, and marrying in defiance of the color line.

The customs taxation collected during the six months, July to December last, is reported as $26,251,333. This is $3,520,902 more than was taken during the like period of 1905-6. The Government, seemingly, has not yet reached the limit in the people's capacity to pay for its extravagance.

Hon. Mr. Blair.

At a Liberal gathering in New Brunswick on the 28th ult., the Hon. Mr. Blair tried to make his peace with his old political associates. He told them that "he felt at home among them," and in explanation, added that he had "not strayed very far from the old habitation." The prodigal son, however, notwithstanding his return, repentance and confession, was not received by some of the more pronounced advanced Grits, with open arms, nor was the "fatted calf" slaughtered in his honor. On the contrary the malcontents denounced him as a traitor to his party, wondering where and in what company, politically, he would next be found.

This section of the party had not forgotten recent events and were not like the recalcitrant Blair, prepared to swallow themselves. They remembered his declarations in the House of Commons when he left the Government on its Railway policy, denouncing it as a scheme ruinous to the country, and not of a character to justify him in sharing in its responsibility by remaining in the Government, nor did they forget his now historic denunciation of his colleagues by declaring they were dominated by outsiders and their precipitated action was because "Cox could not wait."

This heroic attitude did not last long. Finding ere many months rolled round that he had not a single follower among his old friends, who fawned upon him when he had something to give them, and that no matter what the opposition to the scheme might be among Conservatives, they were not prepared to accept him as even an ally, he began to finesse, and ere long was found listening to and succumbing to the voice of the charmer, whose "sunny smiles" soon seduced him to accept an offer of a $10,000 job, as Chairman of the Railway Commission. This he retained until on the eve of a general election, when he again bolted by resigning his chairmanship, and had not a premature disclosure been made of events, the full truth of which has not yet been fully brought to light, there is no telling, however much it may be surmised, where he would have landed.

Since these significant events he has been floundering in despair, wondering, Macawber like, what would turn up next. Distrusted by former friends and shunned by opponents, he quietly drifts back into the ranks of his former allies, and now swear allegiance to those whom he looks upon as his inferiors, intellectually, and becomes a follower of those who despise him.

How the great Reform party of former days has degenerated!

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"AROUND THE CLOCK."

The announcement is made that the big musical comedy success, "Around the Clock," will play an engagement at the opera house here on Friday, Jan. 11th. "Around the Clock" is a musical comedy in three acts and four scenes, and will serve to again introduce to our theatre-goers that jolly band of comedians from across the sea—the Ritchie London Comedy Company. There is not an artist in this group of players who is not up-to-date in everything pertaining to comedy and pantomime. The musical portion of the performance is the work of L. O. Smith and Sebastian Hiller, while Frank Huffman wrote the book, and their joint effort met with instant success on its first presentation. Special scenery and other effects are carried intact for each act, which enables Mr. Ritchie and his associates to offer a programme perfect in every detail.

Mr. Langley Dead.

Mr. Michael Langley, a well-known resident of the city, died last night after a rather extended illness. Deceased, who was 87 years of age, was born in the County of Tipperary, Ireland. A widow and a family of two sons, James, of Niagara Falls, N.Y., and William, of this city, and a daughter, Miss Maggie, of Salt Lake City, survives.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

HOCKEY.

Belleville Boys Won a Hard-fought Match.

There was a fine attendance at the hockey match last night, though the crowd did not look nearly so large in the big new rink—beg pardon, arena. The ice, considering the recent weather, was in good shape. It being the first association match here this season, hockey lovers were anxious to see how the locals would shape up. The Brockville Crescents came up with a victory over Kingston to their credit, and the knowing ones, when they saw the visitors practising, were not any too sure of victory for the locals last night. The Crescents are a swift, "rangy" bunch, and are also gentlemen on and off the ice. The match last night was a strenuous one, and though a lot of short penalties were imposed, there was no deliberately dirty play. Our old friend, F. C. Waghorne, of Toronto, was referee, and his eagle eye has lost none of its sharpness. The match started about 8.30, with the boys facing each other this way:

Belleville goal.
Boland.
Pepper.
Connolly.
Allen.
Burke McGuire Turner
Serviss Price Sellery
O'Donahue
Dailey.
Kehoe.
Warwick.
Brockville goal.

The lads started off like race-horses, and it was seen that the visitors were fast and had their share of aggressiveness. The play at first was a good deal in Belleville territory, and the local defence was very busy. O'Donahue, the Brockville rover, showed up as a dangerous man, and started his rushes early, but it was good to see how little Burke checked back and held the red-topped gent. down. In fact, the locals can ascribe their victory to the way their forwards checked back in the first half. Connolly and Pepper were right on the job all the way, and their superiors, as defence men, are probably not in junior hockey to-day, but no defence can withstand a forward line which comes down, unhampered, four abreast, and that is what would have happened only for the speedy and persistent checking back of the Belleville forwards. Well, to make a long story short, Belleville got the first on a fine rush of Connolly's, who went through the visiting bunch, passed to Burke, and the first tally was hung up before us. Time, 9 minutes. Brockville got the second in one minute, on a nice bit of combination play, and the third also went to them on a shot from near the centre. Score 2—1, with Belleville having the short end. The boys grew very strenuous just here, and the checking was close and hard. Seven men were sent off by Wag. before the next goal was scored. The locals were fighting hard to even the score, and the visitors were doing their level best to retain the advantage. Finally, Belleville got the fourth, and the applause was something terrific. Half-time came with the score 2—2. It looked very much like anybody's game. Condition would decide the winners, as there was little to choose between them in speed and skill.

The Second Half.

Neither team seemed very aggressive in the second half, and play opened out rather slow. The visitors had evidently shot their bolt in the first half, and their condition was not what a winning team should have. Gradually the locals woke up again, and from then to the close it was Belleville all the way. Neat play of the forwards put the locals in the lead, and there was never any danger of Brockville tieing the score. With only 30 seconds to play the locals got another, and the match ended 4—2 in their favor.

Caught in the Net.

The new men on the local team showed up well.

A few more games, and very few junior teams will have any license to beat our lads.

If Manager Arnott could arrange for the assassination of those boys who hammer the sides of the rink with their sticks he would oblige many of his patrons, especially the ladies.

The new rink is as far ahead of the old one as a Pullman is ahead of a freight car.

Neither of the goal-keepers had much to do last night, but Boland, the local, showed up with a quick eye.

The officials were: Goal umpires, Belleville, K. Taylor; Brockville, Mr. Cossitt. Time-keepers, Belleville, W. Burke; Brockville, Mr. Graham. Penalty time-keepers, Belleville, Sandy Burrows; Brockville, Mr. Dobbie.

No less than 21 men were hung on the fence by "Wag," but the penalties were all for trivial offences. Here is the roll of honor: Brockville—O'Donahue, Serviss, Price (2), Sellery (2), Dailey (3), total 9; Belleville—McGuire (2), Turner (4), Allen (2), Pepper, Connolly (2), Burke, total 12.

Disgruntled Ones Should Count Twenty

CORRESPONDENT HAS A FEW WORDS OF ADVICE TO PARTIES IN THIS CITY.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Sir,—The readers of Dickens' works may remember a certain young lady who, when excited, was always importuned by her father to count twenty. I would advise some of our Conservative friends to do a little counting and count on a day of reckoning with the rank and file before they forsake Mr. Sulman for Mr. Sinclair in this contest for the Mayoralty.

That the action of Mr. Sulman regarding a certain political appointment is endorsed by all Conservatives of inflexible integrity is a fact beyond question. The attempts of some Conservatives to introduce political discord and petty spite into this campaign appears puerile, small and contemptible, while the action of Mr. Sulman, actuated by a spirit of right and justice, appeals to the moral sense of every man of integrity.

Tories and Grits are equally interested in men of inflexible integrity being appointed to public government positions, and if Mr. Sulman, as Mayor, did his best to block any improper appointment it proves he is not a man to shirk an unpleasant duty.

It must be highly gratifying for Mr. Sinclair to know he is getting support from old friends of Mr. Sulman, not from any good feeling or respect for him, but because they have political feeling against Mr. Sulman.

In closing I will advise these disgruntled politicians to count twenty and count slowly.

Yours, etc.,
"AJAX."

Fruit Cures Constipation

"Fruit-a-tives" cure Constipation because they are Fruit Juices in Tablet form.

Constipation means a disordered liver. When the liver is weak, bile is lacking. And it is the bile—which the liver excretes—that flows into the intestines and moves the bowels.

Fruit is the great liver tonic. It invigorates the liver and causes more bile to flow into the bowels.

Purgatives, powders and purging mineral waters, never reach the liver. They irritate the bowels and FORCE them to move. They generally do harm. They NEVER do any PERMANENT good.

"Fruit-a-tives" are fruit juices—in which the medicinal action is many times intensified by the wonderful change which takes place when the juices of apples, oranges, figs and prunes are combined.

"Fruit-a-tives" have already proved a cure to many thousands of people in Canada.

"Fruit-a-tives" are free from calomel, cascara, senna and other bowel irritants. They are concentrated fruit juices with valuable tonics and internal antiseptics added.

"Fruit-a-tives" move the bowels regularly and easily every day — and thus cure Constipation.

50c. a box—6 boxes for $2.50. Sent on receipt of price if your druggist does not handle them.

THE SOUL OF THE SINGER.

We read the song that is written—
A few little, grotesque signs,
Arranged in a certain meter,
With rhymes at the ends of the lines;
And by the thought or the music
Some chord in our hearts is stirred;
But the song in the soul of the singer
Is never heard.

The one who best sees the picture
Is he with the soul for art,
The one who best reads the poem
Is he with the poet heart.
The thoughts that are rarest and sweetest
Are deepest from sight interred,
The song in the soul of the singer
Is never heard.

Some yearnings may not be spoken;
Some loves are so wholly blest,
Some dreams are so tinged with heaven
They never can be expressed.
We miss the intangible something
Behind the veil of the word,
The song in the soul of the singer
Is never heard.

We meet, but are veiled in spirit;
Familiar and yet unknown;
A realm of our inmost beings
Where we are alone, alone.
In each is a strain peculiar
On no other heart conferred.
The song in the heart of the singer
Is never heard.

A sad ending. Whiskey the cause. Chicago, Dec. 31. —A despatch to the Tribune from Spokane, says: "Once a millionaire wheat speculator, the partner of 'Old Hutch,' in the Chicago wheat pit, G. G. Leonard, died yesterday at the county poor farm at Spangle, unattended by friends or relatives. One son is superintendent of the largest steel mills at Birmingham, Ala.; a daughter is the wife of Professor Fisher, in the University of California, and his wife and two other daughters reside in Chicago. Drink brought about his downfall, wrecking his health and breaking up his family relations. "Judge" Leonard, as he was familiarly known, was born in New York 53 years ago. In the early eighties he practiced law in Chicago. He became associated with Hutchison in the famous wheat corner which made him a multi-millionaire. He had been president of the school board and superintendent of the Presbyterian Sunday school. He located in Spokane in 1880."

The "Scotsman" criticizes the action of Newfoundland in re the modus vivendi entered into by the English Cabinet and the United States upon the fishery question, and declares Newfoundland is ungrateful. It says:

London, January 2.—The Scotsman, reviewing the Colonial Administration of 1906, says of the dispute regarding the fisheries, that Newfoundland is one of the most ungrateful colonies. It is a small matter; but, like the quarrel between the San Francisco School Board and Japan, it contains an element of international friction which the most level-headed statesmanship may, owing to the obstinacy of the parties, find it difficult to smooth over.

Church and State has no longer a hold upon France, and is fast weakening in Spain. Here is the way the Church is being treated in France. On the 2nd of January, 1907, the tribunal at Bar le Due rendered judgment in the action of M. Varmesson, president of the Association Culturelle at Culy, against M. Camus, treasurer of the Vestry, to compel the latter to surrender the parish books and property. M. Camus is ordered to surrender everything to M. Varmesson without delay under penalty of paying 50 francs fine daily for a month, after which time a new judgment will be made regarding damages. This decision establishes the legality of the Association Culturelles, which were formed despite the papal interdiction.

THE AVLUE OF CHARCOAL.

FEW PEOPLE KNOW HOW USEFUL IT IS IN PRESERVING HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

COSTS NOTHING TO TRY.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics, in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

STRANGE MURDER IN WEST.

Dead Man Propped Against Fence After Fight Over a Woman, Who Saw But Won't Tell.

Rosthern, Sask., Jan., 5.—Leaning upon the fence with one arm over it, in front of the residence of J. J. Friesen, Michael Kaminisky, a young Galician, 21 years of age, was found yesterday afternoon at 5.30, with his head crushed in several places. His face had also been slashed horribly with a knife. The body was still warm when found.

The murder was the result of a fight over a girl. She was an eye-witness, but refuses to divulge the name of the murderer. A sweating process will be used to worm out of her the story.

Many witnesses are being held by the police.

It is surmised the fight started near the elevators, and after the murderous attack the man was placed in a sleigh and put in the position where he was found later. The sleigh and footmarks are seen to that point, but no signs of a struggle. People passed the spot a few minutes previous and nothing was to be seen.

The Sewing Room.

The more important things that will make a sewing room a comfort and a pleasure are an old pier glass, which can either be hung or mounted, and if possible a piece of furniture of the "dresser" variety, which will give a mirror opposite. This can be turned to afford a full length view of both back and front of the figure. A kitchen table long enough to hold a skirt, with an extra leaf along the back so that it can be made square for cutting out circular skirts or capes, is also an addition. Then a scrapbasket, workbaskets and a hamper in which to keep rolls of lining and materials which may be wanted at any moment, with a low folding table, a low and a high chair and the machine, and your sewing room is properly equipped. The presence of a "Judy," or padded form, and a tree rack, on which half finished garments can be hung, is also of great convenience.

DANGER IN HIGH SPEEDS.

The Force Developed by Swiftly Moving Automobiles.

Danger to drivers of automobiles grows rapidly greater with each new burst of speed. A correspondent of the Scientific American develops the theme as follows: "The danger in all cases increases as the square of the speed. Take three machines of the same make, one going five miles an hour, one twenty miles an hour and one forty miles an hour. The second has stored up in it, due to its rapidity of motion, sixteen times as much energy as the first, and if it leaves the road and runs into an obstacle, such as a tree, a stone wall or a ditch, it will strike with sixteen times as great force. In going around a curve or turning a corner it is sixteen times as likely to upset, skid into the ditch or strip a tire. When the power is shut off and the brakes applied it will go sixteen times as far before it can be brought to a stop. If it comes upon a pedestrian suddenly the latter will have to exert sixteen times as much energy to get out of the way in time and if struck will be struck with sixteen times the force. The third machine will be sixty-four times as likely to get into trouble in going around a curve as the first.

"An object going five miles an hour is moving with the same speed as it would have attained in falling ten inches. In moving ten miles an hour it is going as fast as though it had fallen three and a half feet. Twenty miles an hour is generally considered a very conservative speed. Now, twenty miles an hour is the same speed that would be obtained were the machine to fall thirteen feet through the air, thirty miles an hour is equivalent to a fall of thirty feet, forty miles an hour to a fall of fifty-two feet, sixty miles an hour to a fall of 120 feet and 120 miles an hour to a fall of 480 feet.

"A person struck by an automobile going twenty-five miles an hour receives the same jar as though he himself had fallen from a height of twenty-one feet, or, say, from a second story window; by one going forty miles an hour, as though he had fallen fifty-two feet, or, say, from the top of a lofty tree; by one going 120 miles an hour, as though he himself had fallen from the top of the Washington monument."

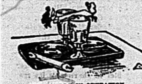
FOR YOUNG FOLKS

OSCILLATING CANDLE.

It Works Like the Walking Beam of a Watt Engine.

The little motor represented herewith operates not by steam nor by electricity nor by compressed air. It possesses no boiler, no cylinder, no piston and consists simply of a stearin candle. Let the reader take a candle and perform the experiment for himself. Insert in the center of the candle and at right angles with it the heads of two pins previously heated. These pins will constitute the axis of the motor and are to be placed upon the edge of two wineglasses. If the two ends of the candles are lighted they will burn, and a drop of stearin will fall into one of the plates placed beneath in order to receive it. The equilibrium of the scale beam will be broken, and the other end of the candle will descend, causing the end that has just lost the first drop of stearin to rise. This oscillatory motion will cause several drops to fall from the end that has just descended and which in its turn becomes the lighter and will therefore rise, while the other descends, and the oscillatory motion, slight at first, will take on a greater and greater amplitude, the candle, slightly inclined upon the horizon at first, finally taking a nearly vertical position. There is nothing more interesting than to watch this oscillatory motion, which does not cease unless one blows out the two flames or the two candles are entirely consumed—that is to say, at the end of half an hour. If now it is desired to utilize the motion of the candle while it is in operation it may be connected by a thin iron wire with small figures cut out of cardboard and jointed, to which it will give a to and fro motion. It may be considered as the walking beam of a Watt engine, and to each extremity may be connected a small piston moving in a vertical cylinder. Finally and more simply there may be fixed to the axis by means of pins, which will keep it at a distance in order to prevent the contact of the flames, a strip of light cardboard, representing a plank, to the extremities of which may be glued two figures that will play a seesaw and thus render the experiment still more attractive to the young.



THE CANDLE IN OPERATION.

A Pocket Notebook.

It is not the usual custom of young people to take notes, but as they grow older and their interest in the affairs of life widens they will discover that a number of matters will come to their attention and will slip away again unless there is something to help the memory. While the suggestion may not be of use to many of you, for the benefit of the few who like to be systematic the habit of carrying a little notebook with an alphabetical index is strongly recommended. In this put down at least a brief note regarding what you wish to remember, in each case entering it under the letter beginning the most prominent name or word connected with it. If you cannot put down the exact item you wish to remember at least note where you found it. The amount of time saved by this habit as you grow older will enable you to read a large number of excellent books, for to seek in vain a bit of information is not only extremely irritating, but exceedingly wasteful of time. Particularly in reading will a little notebook prove a great help. It is better to choose a tiny book, so that it will never be in the way.—St. Nicholas.

Pick a Name For Yourself.

One of the customs practiced by our Puritan forefathers was that of inflicting ludicrous and terrifying names upon their children. One Puritan damsel when asked her baptismal name answered, "Through-Much-Tribulation-We-Enter-the-Kingdom-of-Heaven, but for short they call me Tribby." Another unfortunate maiden bore the name The-Gift-of-God Stringer. A sickly boy was christened Faint-Not Hewitt. Another labored under Fight-the-Good-Fight-of-Faith White. A little girl who had a propensity for crying was at the age of eight christened Weep-Not Billing. There also were Thunder Goldsmith, The-Work-of-God Farmer, Search-the-Scriptures Morton, Be-Courteous Cole and, worst of all, Kill-Sin Pimple.

A Sleeping Bird.

If you have a pet bird look at it closely when it is asleep and you will see that it does not, as is generally believed, tuck its head under its wing. You have heard all your life that a bird turns its head and lays it on the soft and yielding feathers of its back, which sometimes entirely hide it.

The Wise Man.

There is a man in our town
Who is so wondrous wise
He knows he cannot sing at all,
And so he never tries.

He also knows he has no wit
Like many funny folks,
And so he never bothers us
By getting off his jokes.

And when he has no word to say
He's wise enough, though young,
To sit about while others talk
And hold his little tongue.

reminiscences as he saw fit, gave a tolerably truthful account of his conversation with Spide. The source of his information, its general incompleteness and the frequent divergences occasioned by the boy's attempt to incorporate into the narrative a satisfactory reason for his own presence in the yards, did not detract from its value in Oakley's estimation. The mere fact that the men had held a meeting was in itself significant. Such a thing was new to Antioch, as yet unvisited by labor troubles.

"What is that you say about my father?" For he had rather lost track of the story and caught at the sudden mention of his father's name.

"Spide says they got it in for him. I can't just remember what he did say. It was something or other Griff Ryder knows about him. It's funny, but it's clean gone out of my head, Mr. Oakley."

Oakley started. What could Ryder know about his father? What could any one know?

He was not left long in doubt. The next morning shortly after he arrived at the office he heard the heavy shuffling of many feet on the narrow platform outside his door, and a deputation from the carpenter shop led by Joe Stokes and Branyon entered the room. For a moment or so the men stood in abashed silence about the door and then moved over to his desk.

Oakley pushed back his chair and as they approached came slowly to his feet. There was a hint of anger in his eyes. The whole proceeding smacked of insolence. The men were in their shirt sleeves and overalls and had on their hats. Stokes put up his hand and took off his hat. The others accepted this as a signal and one after another removed theirs. Then followed a momentary shuffling as they bunched closer. Several who looked as if they would just as soon be somewhere else breathed deep and hard. The office force—Kerr, Holt and Miss Walton—suspended their various tasks and stood up so as not to miss anything that was said or done.

Stokes took a step forward and cleared his throat as if to speak. Then he looked at his comrades, who looked back their encouragement at him.

"We want a word with you, Mr. Oakley," said he.

"What have you to say?"

"Well, sir, we got a grievance," began Stokes weakly, but Branyon pushed him to one side hastily and took his place. He was a stockily built Irish-American, with plenty of nerve and a loose tongue. The men nudged each other. They knew Mike would have his say.

"It's just this, Mr. Oakley: There's a man in the carpenter shop who's got to get out. We won't work with him no longer!"

"That's right," muttered one or two of the men under their breath.

"Whom do you mean?" asked Oakley, and his tone was tense and strenuous, for he knew. There was an awkward silence. Branyon fingered his hat a trifle nervously. At last he said doggedly:

"The man who's got to go is your father."

"Why?" asked Oakley, sinking his voice. He guessed what was coming next, but the question seemed dragged from him. He had to ask it.

"We got nothing against you, Mr. Oakley, but we won't work in the same shop with a convicted criminal."

"That's right," muttered the chorus of men again.

"Get out of here!" he ordered hotly.

"Don't we get our answer?" demanded Branyon.

While the interview was in progress McClintock had entered and now stood at the opposite end of the room, an attentive listener.

"No!" cried Oakley hoarsely. "I'll put whom I please to work in the shops. Leave the room, all of you!"

The men retreated before his fury, their self confidence rather dashed by it. One by one they backed sheepishly out of the door, Branyon being the last to leave. As he quitted the room he called to Dan:

"We'll give you until tomorrow to think it over. But the old man's got to go."

McClintock promptly followed Branyon, and Clarence darted after him. He was in time to witness the uncorking of the master mechanic's vials of wrath and to hear the hot exchange of words which followed.

"You can count your days with the Huckleberry numbered, Branyon," he said. "I'm hanged if I'll have you under me after this!"

"W'll see about that!" retorted ven roughly. "Talk's cheap."

"You're a sneak, Branyon! What's

"You're a liar!" Nevertheless McClintock spoke only the truth. At Branyon's last word he smashed his fist into the middle of the carpenter's sour visage with a heavy, sickening thud. No man called him a liar and got away with it.

But Dan was too demoralized to consider or even reply to this. He was feeling a burning sense of shame and disgrace. The whole town must know his father's history, or some garbled version of it. Worse still, Constance Emory must know. The pride of his respectability was gone from him. He felt that he had cheated the world of a place to which he had no right, and now he was found out. He could not face Kerr nor Holt nor McClintock. But this was only temporary. He couldn't stand among his ruins. Men survive disgrace and outlive shame just as they outlive sorrow and suffering. Nothing ever stops. Then he recognized that, since his secret had been wrested from him, there was no longer discovery to fear. A sense of freedom and relief came when he realized this. The worst had happened, and he could still go on. How the men had learned about his father he could not understand, but instinct told him he had Ryder to thank. Following up the clew Kenyon had given him, he had carefully looked into Roger Oakley's record, a matter that simply involved a little correspondence.

"The man who's got to go is your father."

He had told Branyon and Stokes only what he saw fit and had pledged himself to support the men in whatever action they took. He would drive Oakley out of Antioch. That was one of his motives. He was also bent on cultivating as great a measure of personal popularity as he could. It would be useful to Kenyon and so advantageous to himself. The congressman had large ambitions. If he brought his campaign to a successful issue it would make him a power in the state. Counting on this victory, Ryder had mapped out his own career. Kenyon had force and courage, but his judgment and tact were only of a sort. Ryder aspired to supply the necessary brains for his complete success. Needless to say, Kenyon knew nothing of these benevolent intentions on the part of his friend. He could not possibly have believed that he required anything but votes.

Oakley turned to Clarence.

"Run into the carpenter shop and see if you can find my father. If he is there ask him to come here to me at once."

The boy was absent only a few moments. Roger Oakley had taken off his work clothes and had gone uptown before the men left the shop. He had not returned.

Dan closed his desk and put on his hat.

"I am going to the hotel," he said to Kerr. "If anybody wants to see me you can tell them I'll be back this afternoon."

"Very well, Mr. Oakley." The treasurer was wondering what would be his superior's action. Would he resign and leave Antioch or would he try and stick it out?

Dan hurried uptown to the hotel. He found his father in his room, seated before an open window in his shirt sleeves and with his Bible in his lap. He glanced up from the book as his son pushed open the door.

"Well, Dannie?" he said, and his tones were mild, meditative and inquiring.

"I was looking for you, father. They told me you'd come uptown."

"So I did. As soon as I heard there was going to be trouble over my working in the shops I left."

"Did they say anything to you?"

"Not a word, Dannie, but I knew what was coming and decided to quit work."

of the bed near the old man. "I can't let them say who shall work in the shops and who not. The whole business was trumped up out of revenge for the cut. They want to get even with me for that, you see. If I back down and yield this point there is no telling what they'll ask next—probably that the wages be restored to the old figure."

He spoke quite cheerfully, for he saw his father was cruelly hurt.

"It was all a mistake, Danny—my coming to you, I mean," Roger Oakley said, shutting the book reverently and laying it to one side. "The world's a small place after all, and we should have known we couldn't keep our secret. It's right I should bear my own cross, but it's not your sin, and now it presses hardest on you. I'm sorry, Dannie"— And his voice shook with the emotion he was striving manfully to hide.

"No, no, father. To have you here has been a great happiness to me."

"Has it, Dannie? Has it really?" with a quick smile. "I am glad you can say so, for it's been a great happiness to me—greater than I deserved." And he laid a big hand caressingly on his son's.

"We must go ahead, daddy, as if nothing had happened. If we let this hurt us, we'll end by losing all our courage."

"It's been a knockout blow for me, Dannie," with a wistful sadness, "and I've got to go away. It's best for you I should. I've gone in one direction and you've gone another. You can't reconcile opposites. I've been thinking of this a good deal. You're young and got your life ahead of you, and you'll do big things before you're done, and people will forget. I can't drag you down just because I happen to be your father and love you. Why, I'm of a different class even, but I can't go on. I'm just as I am, and I can't change myself."

"Why, bless your heart, daddy," cried Dan, "I wouldn't have you changed! You're talking nonsense. I won't let you go away."

"But the girl, Dannie; the girl—the doctor's daughter! You see, I hear a lot of gossip in the shop, and even if you haven't told me I know."

"We may as well count that at an end," said Dan quietly.

"Do you think of leaving here?"

"No. If I began by running, I'd be running all the rest of my life. I shall remain until I've accomplished everything I've set out to do if it takes ten years."

"And what about Miss Emory, Dannie? If you are going to stay, why is that at an end?"

"I dare say she'll marry Mr. Ryder. Anyhow, she won't marry me."

"But I thought you cared for her?"

"I do, daddy."

"Then why do you give up? You're as good as he is any day."

"I'm not her kind; that's all. It has nothing to do with this. It would have been the same anyhow. I'm not her kind."

Roger Oakley turned this over slowly in his mind. It was most astonishing. He couldn't grasp it.

"Do you mean that she thinks she is better than you are?" he asked curiously.

"Something of that sort, I suppose," dryly. "I want you to come back into the shops, father."

"I can't do it, Dannie. I'm sorry if you wish it, but it's impossible. I want to keep out of sight. Back east when they pardoned me every one knew, and I didn't seem to mind, but here it's not the same. I can't face it. It may be cowardly, but I can't."

CHAPTER XII.

OAKLEY had told his father he was going to call at the Emorys'. He wanted to see Constance once more. Then it didn't much matter what happened.

As he passed up the street he was conscious of an impudent curiosity in the covert glances the idlers on the corners shot at him. With hardly an exception they turned to gaze after him as he strode by. He realized that an unsavory distinction had been thrust upon him. He had become a marked man. He set his lips in a grim smile. This was what he would have to meet until the silly wonder of it wore off or a fresh sensation took its place. And there would be the men at the shops. There intercourse had hitherto been rather pleasant and personal, as he had recognized certain responsibilities in the relation which had made him desire to be more than a mere taskmaster. The thought of his theories caused him to smile again. His humanitarianism had received a jolt from which it would not recover in many a long day.

The hands already hated him as a tyrant and probably argued that his authority was impaired by the events of the morning, though how they arrived at any such conclusion was beyond him, but he had felt something of the kind in Branyon's manner. When the opportunity came it would be a satisfaction to undeceive them, and he was not above wishing this opportunity might come soon, for his mood was bitter and revengeful when he recalled their ignorant and needlessly brutal insolence.

Early as he was he found, as he had anticipated when he started out, that Ryder was ahead of him. The editor was lounging on the Emorys' porch with the family. He had dined with them.

As Dan approached he caught the sound of Constance's voice. There was no other voice in Antioch which sounded the same or possessed the same quality of refinement and culture. His heart beat with quickened pulsations and his pace slackened. He paused for an instant in the shadow of the lilac bushes that shut off the well kept lawn from the street. Then he forced himself to go on. There was no gain in deferring his sentence. Better have it over with. Yet when he reached the gate he would gladly have passed it without entering had it not been that he never abandoned any project simply because it was disagreeable. He had done too many disagreeable things not to have outlived this species of cowardice.

The instant he saw him the doctor rose from his seat on the steps and came quickly down the walk. There was no mistaking the cordiality he gave his greeting, for he intended there should be none. Mrs. Emory, too, took pains that he should feel the friendliness of her sentiment toward him. Constance, however, appeared embarrassed and ill at ease, and Dan's face grew very white. He felt that he had no real appreciation of the changed conditions since his father's story had become public property. He saw it made a difference in the way his friends viewed him. He had become hardened, and it had been impossible for him to foresee just how it would was plainly a shock. The very kindness he had experienced at the hands of the doctor and Mrs. Emory only served to show how great the shock was. In their gracious, generous fashion they had sought to make it easy for him.

Oakley and the editor did not speak. Civility seemed the rankest hypocrisy under the circumstances. A barely perceptible inclination of the head sufficed, and then Ryder turned abruptly to Miss Emory and resumed his conversation with her.

Dan seated himself beside the doctor on the steps. He was completely crushed. He hadn't the wit to leave, and he knew that he was a fool for staying. What was the good in carrying on the uphill fight any longer? Courage is a fine quality, no doubt, but it is also well for a man to have sense enough to know when he is fairly beaten, and he was fairly beaten.

He took stock of the situation. Quite independent of his hatred of the fellow, he resented Ryder's presence there beside Constance. But what was the use of struggling? The sooner he banished all thought of her the better it would be for him. His chances had never been worth considering.

He stole a glance at the pair, who had drawn a little to one side and were talking in low tones and with the intimacy of long acquaintance. He owned they were wonderfully well suited to each other. Ryder was no mean rival, had it come to that. The world had given him its rub. He knew perfectly the life with which Miss Emory was familiar. His people had been the right sort. He was well born and well bred, and he showed it.

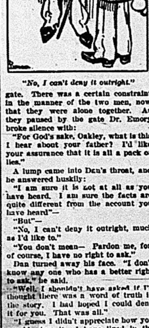
It dawned upon the unwilling Oakley slowly and by degrees that to Constance Emory he must be nothing more or less than the son of a murderer. He had never quite looked at it in that light before. He had been occupied with the effect rather than the cause, but he was sure that if Ryder had told her his father's history he had made the most of his opportunity. He wondered how people felt about a thing of this kind. He knew now what his portion would be. Disgrace is always vicarious in its consequences. The innocent generally suffer indiscriminately along with the guilty.

The doctor talked a steady stream at Oakley, but he managed to say little that made any demand on Dan's attention. He was sorry for the young man. He had liked him from the start, and he believed but a small part of what he had heard. It is true he had had the particulars from Ryder, but Ryder said what he had to say with his usual lazy indifference, as if his interest was the slightest and had vouched for no part of it.

He would hardly have dared admit that he himself was the head and front of the offending. Dr. Emory would not have understood how it could have been any business of his. It would have finished him with the latter. As it was, he had been quick to resent his glib, sneering tone.

But Dan's manner convinced the doctor that there were some grounds for the charges made by the hands when they demanded Roger Oakley's dismissal, or else he was terribly hurt by the occurrence. While Dr. Emory was reaching this conclusion Dan was cursing himself for his stupidity. It would have been much wiser for him to have remained away until Antioch quieted down. Perhaps it would have been fairer, too, to his friends, but since he had blundered he would try and see Miss Emory again. She should know the truth. It was characteristic of him that he should wish the matter put straight, even when there was no especial advantage to be gained.

Soon afterward he took his leave. The doctor followed him down to the gate. There was a certain constraint in the manner of the two men, now that they were alone together. As they paused by the gate Dr. Emory broke silence with:



"No, I can't deny it outright."

"For God's sake, Oakley, what is this I hear about your father? I'd like your assurance that it is all a pack of lies."

A lump came into Dan's throat, and he answered huskily:

"I am sure it is not at all as you have heard. I am sure the facts are quite different from the account you have heard"—

"But"—

"No, I can't deny it outright, much as I'd like to."

"You don't mean— Pardon me, for, of course, I have no right to ask."

Dan turned away his face. "I don't know any one who has a better right to ask," he said.

"Well, I shouldn't have asked it I'd thought there was a word of truth in the story. I had hoped I could deny it for you. That was all."

"I guess I didn't appreciate how you would view it. I have lived in the shadow of it so long"—

The doctor looked aghast at the admission. He had not understood before that Dan was acknowledging the murder. Even yet he could not bring himself to believe it. Dan moved off a step as if to go.

"Do you mean it is true, Oakley?" he asked, detaining him.

"Substantially, yes. Good night," he added hopelessly.

"Wait," hastily. "I don't want you to go just yet." He put out his hand frankly. "It's nothing you have done anyhow," he said as an afterthought.

"No, but I begin to think it might just as well have been."

Dr. Emory regarded him earnestly. "My boy, I'm awfully sorry for you, and I'm afraid you have got in for more than you can manage. It looks as though your troubles were all coming in a bunch."

Dan smiled.

"My antecedents won't affect the situation down at the shops, if that is what you mean. The men may not like me any the better or respect me any the more for knowing of them, but they will discover that that will make no difference where our relations are concerned."

"To be sure. I only meant that public opinion will be pretty strong against you. It somehow has an influence," ruefully.

"I suppose it has," rather sadly.

"Do you have to stay and face it? It might be easier, you know— I don't mean exactly to run away"—

"I am pledged to put the shops and road on a paying basis for General Cornish. He'd about made up his mind to sell to the M. and W. If he does it will mean the closing of the shops, and they will never be opened up again. That will wipe Antioch off the map. Not so very long ago I had a good deal of sympathy for the people who would be ruined, and I can't change simply because they have, can I?" with a look on his face which belonged to his father.

The doctor stroked his beard meditatively and considered the question.

"I suppose there is such a thing as duty, but don't you think, under the circumstances, your responsibility is really very light?"

Dan laughed softly.

"I didn't imagine you would be the first to advise me to shirk it."

"I wouldn't ordinarily, but you don't know Antioch. They can make it very unpleasant for you. The town is in a fever of excitement over what has happened today. It seems the men are not through with you yet."

"Yes, I know. My father should have gone back. It looks as if I'd yielded, but I couldn't ask him to when I saw how he felt about it."

"You see, the town lives off the shops and road. It is a personal matter to every man, woman and child in the place."

"That's what makes me so mad at the stupid fools!" said Oakley, with some bitterness. "They haven't the brains to see that they have a lot more at stake than any one else. If they could gain anything from a fight I'd have plenty of patience with them, but they are sure losers. Even if they strike and the shops are closed for the next six months it won't cost Cornish a dollar—indeed, it will be money in his pocket."

"I don't think they'll strike," said the doctor. "I didn't mean that exactly, but they'll try to keep you on a strain."

"They have done about all they can in that direction. The worst has happened. I won't say it didn't bruise me up a bit. Why, I am actually sore in every bone and muscle. I was never so battered, but I'm beginning to get back, and I'm going to live the whole thing down right here. I can't have skeletons that are liable to be unearthed at any moment."

He took a letter from his pocket, opened it and handed it to the doctor.

"I guess you can see to read this if you will step nearer the street lamp."

The letter was an offer from one of the big eastern lines. While the doctor knew very little of railroads, he understood that the offer was a fine one and was impressed accordingly.

"I'd take it," he said. "I wouldn't fritter away my time here. Precious little thanks you'll ever get."

"I can't honorably break with General Cornish. In fact, I have already declined, but I wanted you to see the letter."

"I am sorry for your sake that you did. You are sure to have more trouble."

"So much the more reason why I should stay."

"I am quite frank with you, Oakley. Some strong influence is at work. No, it hasn't to do with your father. You can't well be held accountable for his acts."

Ryder's laughter reached them as he spoke. Oakley could see him faintly outlined in the moonlight, where he sat between Constance Emory and her mother. The influence was there. It was probably at work at that very moment.

"I wouldn't be made a martyr through any chivalrous sense of duty," continued the doctor. "I'd look out for myself."

Dan laughed again.

"You are preaching cowardice at a great rate."

"Well, what's the use of sacrificing oneself? You possess a most horrible sense of rectitude."

"I would like to ask a favor of you," hesitating.

"I was going to say if there was anything I could do"—

"If you don't mind," with increasing hesitancy, "will you say to Miss Emory for me that I'd like to see her tomorrow afternoon? I'll call about 3—that is"—

"Yes, I'll tell her for you."

"Thank you," gratefully. "Thank you very much. You think she will be at home?" awkwardly, for he was afraid the doctor had misunderstood.

"I fancy so. I can see now, if you wish."

"No, don't. I'll call on the chance of finding her in."

"Just as you prefer."

Oakley extended his hand.

"I won't keep you standing any longer. Somehow our talk has helped me. Good night."

"Good night."

The doctor gazed abstractedly after the young man as he moved down the street, and he continued to gaze after him until he had passed from sight in the shadows that lay beneath the whispering maples.

CHAPTER XIII.

PERHAPS it showed lack of proper feeling, but Oakley managed to sleep off a good deal of his emotional stress, and when he left his hotel the next morning he was quite himself again.

His attitude toward the world was the decently cheerful one of the man who is earning a good salary and whose personal cares are far from being numerous or pressing. He was still capable of looking out for Cornish's interests, and his own, too, if the need arose.

He went down to the office alert and vigorous. As he strode along he nodded and smiled at the people he met on the street. If the odium of his father's crime was to attach itself to him it should be without his help. Antioch might count him callous if it liked, but it must not think him weak.

His first official act was to go for Kerr, who was unusually cantankerous, and he gave that frigid gentleman a scare which lasted him for the better part of a week, for Kerr, who had convinced himself overnight that Oakley must resign, saw himself having full swing with the Huckleberry and was disposed to treat his superior with airy indifference. He had objected to hunting up an old order book Dan wished to see on the score that he was too busy, whereat, as Holt expressed it, the latter "jumped on him with both feet." His second official act was to serve formal notice on Branyon that he was dismissed from the shops. He was even harsh with Miss Walton, and took exception to her spelling of a typewritten letter which he was sending off to Cornish in London.

He also inspected every department in the shops and was glad of an excuse he discovered to reprimand Joe Stokes, who was stockkeeper in the carpenter's room, for the slovenly manner in which the stock was handled. Then he returned to the office and as a matter of discipline kept Kerr busy all the rest of the morning hauling dusty order books from a dark closet. He felt that if excitement was what was wanted he was the one to furnish it. He had been too easy.

Naturally the office force gave a deep sigh of satisfaction when Oakley closed his desk and announced that he was going uptown and would not return. Miss Walton confided to Kerr that she just hoped he would never come back.

It was a little before 3 o'clock when Dan presented himself at the Emorys'. The maid who answered his ring ushered him into the parlor with marked trepidation. She was a timid soul. Then she swished from the room, but returned almost immediately to say that Miss Emory would be down in a moment.

When Constance entered the room he advanced a little uncertainly. She extended her hand quite cordially, however. There was no trace of embarrassment or constraint in her manner.

As he took her hand Dan said simply, going straight to the purpose of his call:

"I have thought a good deal over what I want to tell you, Miss Emory." Miss Emory instantly took the alarm and was on the defensive. She enveloped herself in that species of inscrutable feminine reserve men find so difficult to penetrate. She could not imagine what he had to tell her that was so pressing. He was certainly very curious and unconventional. There was one thing she feared he might want to tell her which she was firmly determined not to hear.

Oakley drew forward a chair.

"Won't you sit down?" he asked gravely.

"Thank you, yes." It was all so formal they both smiled.

Dan stood with his back to the fireplace, now filled with ferns, and rested an elbow on the mantel. There was an awkward pause. At last he said slowly:

"It seems I've been the subject of a lot of talk during the last two days, and I have been saddled with a matter for which I am in no way responsible, though it appears to reflect on me quite as much as if I were."

"Really, Mr. Oakley," began Constance, scenting danger ahead. But her visitor was in no mood to temporize.

"One moment, please," he said hastily. "You have heard the story from Mr. Ryder."

"I have heard it from others as well."

"It has influenced you"—

"No, I won't say that," defiantly. She was not accustomed to being catechised.

"At least it has caused you to seriously doubt the wisdom of an acquaintance," blurted Oakley.

"You are very unfair," rising, with latent anger.

"You will greatly oblige me by sitting down again."

And Constance, astonished beyond measure at his tone of command, sank back into her chair with a little smothered gasp of surprise. No one had ever ventured to speak to her like that before. It was a new experience.

"We've got to finish this, you know," explained Dan, with one of his frankest smiles, and there was a genial simplicity about his smile which was very attractive. Constance, however, was not to be propitiated, but she kept her seat. She was apprehensive lest Oakley would do something more startling and novel if she attempted to cut short the interview.

She stole a glance at him from under her long lashes. He was studying the carpet, apparently quite lost to the enormity of his conduct. "You have heard their side of the story, Miss Emory. I want you to hear mine. It's only fair, isn't it? You have heard that my father is an ex-convict?"

"Yes," with a tinge of regret.

"That he is a murderer?" plunging ahead mercilessly.

"Yes."

"And this is influencing you?"

"I suppose it is," helplessly. "It would naturally. It was a great shock to us all."

"Yes," agreed Dan, "I can understand, I think, just how you must look at it."

"We are very, very sorry for you, Mr. Oakley. I want to explain my manner last night. The whole situation was so excessively awkward. I am sure you must have felt it."

"I did," shortly.

"Oh, dear, I hope you didn't think me unkind!"

"No." Then he added, a trifle wearily: "It's taken me all this time to realize my position. I suppose I owe you some sort of an apology. You must have thought me fearfully thick skinned." He hoped she would say no, but he was disappointed. Her conscience had been troubling her, and

To-morrow's International Sunday School Lesson.

GOD, THE CREATOR — GOLDEN TEXT: "IN THE BEGINNING GOD CREATED THE HEAVEN AND THE EARTH."

HISTORICAL SETTING.

Genesis.—Origin, creation, beginnings.

The author is unknown, but the book belongs to what was called the books of Moses.

Composite.—At whatever date this book was finally put together as we now have it, it clearly embodies a number of distinct documents woven together in one narrative.

The date is unknown, either of the original documents or the final revision, which was probably late.

1. In the beginning. "Before anything was made that was made," as in John 1: 1, and Heb. 1: 10. "The beginning of the history that follows (the Greek equivalent) meant absolutely of the beginning of existence." God is self-existent, from eternity, but the beginning of his creation of our universe is here described. God. Hebrew. The root is one denoting power, plural "powers." "The plural form is not merely a plural of majesty, but indicates the manifold powers and attributes residing in, the one Being who is the object of awe and worship. When the name is given to false gods, the verb is in the plural; when, as here, to the one true God, the verb is, with rare exceptions, in the singular.

2. And the earth. "Earth can here only mean the mass of matter out of which the world was finally created; in other words, chaos. . . the substance of the earth, located where the earth was destined to remain." Was without form, "waste" and void. "Confusion without order, form and substance." "The words describe a chaotic condition," "a formless mass." Exactly expressing the scientific nebular hypothesis. And darkness. Before motion there was no light. Was upon the face of the deep. The Hebrew word "is a poetic word, properly a mass of raging waters, so called from their noise and roaring."

3. And God said. "The creative word of command, the fiat of God, that word in which his will is comprised and energized." Let there be light. Nothing is said of the source of light, but light is essentially the same from whatever source.

4. The light, that it was good. "By means of this formula . . the work is expressly recognized as one corresponding to the will of God, perfect, the subject of his pleasure; but at the same time is described as finished and concluded." God divided the light from the darkness. "They were to have each its own distinct existence." "Fixed definite limits for their duration."

5. Called the light day, as we do now, to express that part of the time which is filled with light. So night was, and is still, that portion of time covered with darkness. To say that this is the beginning of the alternation of our present day and night is to read into the story what is not there, and to contradict the later statement of the author that that alternation appeared on the fourth day. And the evening, the darkness described above, and the morning, the light which followed it, were the first day. R.V., "one day."

6. Let there be a firmament. Hebrew, from a verb meaning "to beat," "to extend, by beating," means "an expanse," "the firmament of the sky or vault of the upper air." It is well translated by our Latin word from "firm,"—solid, compact, stable, and hence applied to the sky, "the vault of heaven viewed as something solid and abiding." The appearance of the sky is to-day that of a solid dome, and it certainly is abiding, and we still use the word firmament, and speak of the skies pouring down rain as expression used of old (Gen. 7: 11; Psa. 104: 3, 13), but that does not imply that we believe there is a solid vault like a molten mirror, with literal doors and windows.

7. Made the firmament. By separating the waters as described.

8. Called the firmament Heaven. "The most magnificent ordinance of the clouds." The era of the second day was this necessary preparation for the eras that were to follow.

9. Let the waters . . . be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear. A simple act necessary to the eras of vegetable and animal life.

11. Let the earth bring forth grass, green herbage, fresh verdure, specially the grasses and smaller plants for animals' food, or the beginning of vegetation in general. And God said. "The world of plants originally came into existence through the earth being miraculously fertilized by the Word of God." While in fact there is no "spontaneous generation," the story is so told as to express some kind of development and evolution with God behind it.

14. Let there be lights in the firmament. "The sun, moon and stars had been created in the beginning, so that this statement cannot refer to their creation, but to their appointment, by becoming visible to their mission to the earth. It is implied that whatever life was upon the earth before this time, existed before the sun was visible through the thick clouds, the waters above the firmament.

16. Now God made, not created, two great lights, which did not exist before on the surface of the world. It was God who (17) set them in the firmament. All of them were God-made. To give light. "Explaining why although the existence of light was not dependent on them, there was more of it when they appeared than when they were invisible."

20. Let the waters bring forth abundantly. "More correctly, 'Let the waters swarm with swarms of living creatures'." The first animal life appears here to have been in and through the water.

21. And God created . . . every living creature. For the first time since the original creation in v. 1 is the word "create" used again, asserting that something new — life, was put into creation, which had not existed before. Great whales. "Sea monsters." Every winged fowl. Birds of all kinds. There is no statement as to the order in which these appeared, only that all these kinds came into existence during this period.

24. Let the earth. The expression implies that God in making these animals used in some way the means already existing. The living creature. "Beings of the same general character as those belonging to the sea—animals." Cattle. "Domestic animals." Creeping thing. "Doubtless includes not only reptiles, but all the other smaller animals that move on or near the ground." Beast of the earth. Wild animals. The different order in which these three classes are arranged in v. 25, shows that there is no reference here to any order of development; but only an including of all classes under God's creative work.

The last work on this day is the creation of man. "God's noblest work," "Creation's masterpiece," the Lord of all the rest of creation, but also dependent on all that went before. This is the subject of our next lesson.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When the tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Housekeeping in Japan.

I never could regard housecleaning seriously in Japan, where the walls can be put aside by one hand, where there is no particular furniture to worry one and where even the matting can be laid and lifted without tacks or nails. But the Japanese housekeepers of my acquaintance rather resented my light attitude, assuring me, quite after the manner of housekeepers all over the world, that it is all very hard and requires much work—oh, very much work indeed. In order to justify myself to one housekeeper I drew a comparison of her own difficulties and those of an American woman, but the American picture seemed to her so terrible and she became so deeply sympathetic that I had to stop short to save her feelings.—Housekeeper.

First Man Dressmaker.

One day in 1730 a beautiful carriage appeared on the boulevard of Paris with an escutcheon in the shape of a pair of corsets and an open pair of scissors painted on the panel of each door. This was the coat of arms of Rhomberg, the first man who made a name as a woman's dressmaker. Rhomberg, who was the son of a Bavarian peasant from the neighborhood of Munich, owed his rapid success to his genius for concealing and remedying defects of figure. He left an annual income of 50,000 francs to his heirs.

Byron and His Title.

Professor Masson in the first published records of the ancient grammar school of Aberdeen recounts this school legend about the poet Byron: "It was said that on his coming to school the first morning after his accession to the peerage was known and on the calling out of his name in the catalogue no longer as 'Georgi Gordon Byron,' but as 'Georgi Baro de Byron,' he did not reply with the usual and expected 'adsum,' but, feeling the gaze of all his schoolfellows, burst into tears and ran out."

Result of Laziness.

"When Mark Twain was a boy at school in Hannibal," said a veteran Missourian, "the schoolmaster once set the class to writing a composition on 'The Result of Laziness.'

"Young Clemens at the end of half an hour handed in as his composition a blank slate."

THE OCEAN LINER.

Safety Devices That Are Operated From the Bridge.

It is in its safety devices and the provision made to meet every possible accident that the ocean liner is perhaps most remarkable. All the machinery which may be set in motion in case of danger is centered on the bridge, and so perfectly has it been arranged that the entire vessel could be controlled if the necessity should arise by means of a series of levers and push buttons. About the walls of the wheelhouse are arranged curious looking indicators, much the same as one sees behind the desk of a great hotel. About them are hung a surprising variety of barometers, thermometers, thermostats, wind and rain gauges and other less familiar looking instruments. There are rows upon rows of buttons and levers on every hand, all highly polished and in the most perfect working order. The danger of fire at sea, for instance, is anticipated by a thermostat connected with the frame filled with little squares like the hotel indicator. There are thermometers in every part of the ship electrically connected with this box which are constantly on guard. If a fire should start in any part of the great ship the temperature would of course rise, and the fact would instantly be announced in the wheelhouse by the ringing of a bell, while a red light would flash at the same time in one of the squares of the indicator. The man at the wheel could tell at a glance the exact point of danger.—Francis Arnold Collins in St. Nicholas.

POTATOES IN FRANCE.

Parmentier's Wily Plan to Kill the Prejudice Against Them.

The way in which Parmentier created a demand for potatoes in France would have done credit to the willest of wily tradesmen. Nothing would at first induce the simple minded peasants to cultivate the popular tuber. They would not listen to lectures on its virtues nor accept seed potatoes free of cost for planting.

Parmentier therefore decided to get the better of their prejudice by artifice and with this object leased as much land as he could round Paris and planted it with potatoes. Just before the ripening of the crop he posted watchers round the fields and issued notices that all persons stealing potatoes would be severely punished, the crop being intended for the tables of the king and nobles.

Such delicacies, continued the notice, were too good for ignorant peasants, who would touch them at their peril. Of course watch was only kept during the day, and at night the fields were robbed right and left by the peasants, who were curious to taste the strange vegetable and jealous that it should be reserved for their betters.

As soon as they had tasted the succulent tubers the pilferers were only too anxious to plant as many as they could possibly purchase, the wily Parmentier's scheme thus succeeding beyond the most extravagant anticipations.

The Chinese Lily.

To raise the Chinese sacred lily in water remove the brown dried skin and all the hard callous at the base of the bulbs. Do not separate the bulbs, but take a sharp knife and score the main bulb as though to quarter it, but do not cut more than a quarter of an inch deep. Cut the offshoot also. This wastes the bulb, but develops the foliage growth. Arrange the bulbs in a glass bowl, steadying them with pebbles, bits of marble and shells; also put in broken charcoal to keep the water sweet. The water may be changed once or twice before they bloom. Place in a dark cupboard or closet for ten days until the roots are well started.

A President's Pipe.

General Jackson was a poor eater, and well for him that he was, or he would have often gone hungry on the days when large crowds came to the White House for a free lunch. It is related on one occasion the poor man was moved to thank the Almighty that after the crowd had gone there was a raw piece of steak in the ice chest off which he could make a dinner. There seems to be absolutely no foundation for the stories of Jackson being a hard drinker, for his physical condition forbade all excesses. He liked his toddy in company with his corncob pipe, but he was no lover of all kinds of intoxicants.—Home Magazine.

A King's Logic.

George IV. of England prided himself on lifting his hat to every one who saluted him in public, but once it was observed that he bowed to every one on the street till he came to a man who swept a crossing, whom he passed without notice. He explained the matter afterward, when points of etiquette were under discussion, by saying, "To salute a beggar without giving him something would be a mockery, and to stop for the purpose of bestowing sixpence would wear the semblance of ostentation in a prince."

The View of Experience.

"What I want," said the constituent, "is a nice, easy position."

"My friend," answered Senator Sorghum, "give up that idea. When an easy position is discovered so many people are after it that a man has to fight ten hours a day to hold on to it."—Washington Star.

WOMAN'S WORLD

MRS. J. ELLEN FOSTER.

Prominent as a Lawyer, Orator and Reformer.

Mrs. J. Ellen Foster of Washington, who has won fame as a lawyer, an orator and a reformer, is investigating the condition of women and child workers throughout this country. Mrs. Foster was detailed from the department of justice to do this work by direction of President Roosevelt, who has the fullest confidence in her ability as an investigator and statistician.

Mrs. Foster has had years of experience that peculiarly fits her for gathering just such statistics as these. She was among the first women in the country to study and practice law, and most of her clients were moneyless and defenseless women and children. She has been prominent in most of the best reform movements which have engaged women's clubs and societies and usually had charge of the work of crystallizing the sentiment into political action. On two occasions she brought special trainloads of factory women from New England to testify before senate committees as to their wages and living conditions.

MRS. J. ELLEN FOSTER.

In 1900 Mrs. Foster was appointed by Secretary of State John Hay to represent the United States at the international Red Cross conference at St. Petersburg. In 1905 she accompanied the Taft party to the Philippines and made a special report to President Roosevelt on the condition of women and children there.

Mrs. Foster then made a trip around the world, in the course of which she studied the condition of women and children in China and India.

Mrs. Foster is an ardent advocate of temperance and was one of the founders of the W. C. T. U. in Massachusetts, in which state she was born. She has spoken in the cause of temperance all over the Union and was in the thick of the fight which resulted in making Iowa a temperance state.

"Weeping Willows."

"If there were more tears, there would be more marriages," said a matchmaker. "Whatever men may say, they like a woman who has not lost the ability to weep in true feminine fashion. In spite of their alleged strength, men always want some one in whom they can confide. What sympathy can they expect from a woman who knows not how to weep and regards tears as undignified? No man really likes to see a woman cry, but all men prefer a woman who can and does cry—a tender hearted creature who, although brave enough, does not try to incase herself in a sort of additional outer skin or suit of mail that renders her proof against sentiment. It is very questionable if this stoicism is good for women in any way. It is a relief to shed tears, and many a man would be glad if it were not regarded as cowardice for him to weep. It is one of nature's methods of assuaging grief."

Cheerful Bedrooms.

A cheerful bedroom is one of the essential points for an invalid or convalescent, and, since it is difficult to find a house with all the bedrooms facing south, some one must be unselfish enough to give the sunniest rooms to the less robust members of the famern exposure is the best for a sleeping room, because the early morning sun is healthful, but if the room must, perforce, face north it should have a light, cheerful paper and the lightest possible draperies. The bed should not be placed so that the light from the window shines directly in the eyes of the sleeper. It may be conducive to early rising, but the effect upon the eyes is unpleasant and often harmful. If the bed must face the windows and the footboard is not high enough to shield the eyes, a screen should be put across overnight between the window and the bed.

A Famous Skin Lotion.

A famous lotion, which not only whitens and clears the skin, but is also said to efface scars and even smallpox pittings, may be used at night and morning. Take one-half ounce of Jordan almonds, one and a half drams of bitter almonds, half a pint of distilled water and seven grains of bichloride of mercury in powder form. Care should be taken in making this lotion that nothing alkaline or metallic should touch the liquid. To make the almond milk blanch the almonds, crush in a mortar and add half of the distilled water. Put a lump of sugar in to prevent the two ingredients from separating, then beat well; strain through a flannel. Add the mercury, which has been previously dissolved in the other half of the water. When beaten together add sufficient water to make a pint. Apply twice a day and allow to dry on, then wipe off with soft cloth.—Philadelphia Press.

White Spots on the Table.

Who is not tormented with "white spots" on the dining table? To remedy, have three cloths and three saucers containing one kerosene, one alcohol and one sweet oil. Apply kerosene first of all. If kerosene or raw linseed oil is applied as soon as the spot is first made it will often remove it at once. After the stain has been allowed to stand for some time, however, first apply the kerosene, the second cloth with alcohol and finally the third cloth with sweet oil or linseed oil, rubbing the last in thoroughly until the spot has disappeared.

Movable Kitchen Cupboard.

A movable kitchen cupboard is a delight to the housewife, for this useful piece of furniture is like a parlor cabinet, as far as completeness is concerned. It has compartments for the flour barrel and large bowls underneath. It has shelves of varying depths for plates and cups and saucers. It has a small closet with labeled drawers of spices and others for sugar and the like, while, on the order of a desk, one shelf is let down for a bread board. All this is compactly arranged in a remarkably small space suited to the modern kitchen.

A Plate Shelf.

When the plate rail around the dining room is not sufficient to hold all the plates and the ceiling is so high as to leave an ugly blank space above the doorway an excellent idea is to build a narrow shelf over the lintel and bank it with plates and perhaps a tall, graceful vase filled with grasses or autumn leaves. The shelf should [illegible] course, be stained to match the [illegible] work in the room, but it is quite possible for the home carpenter to put [illegible] such a contrivance.

Novel Way of Mending.

A good way to mend a round [illegible] a silk or woolen dress where otherwise only a patch could remedy matters is the following: The frayed portions around the tear should be carefully smoothed and a piece of the material, moistened with very thin mucilage, placed under the hole. A heavy weight should then be put upon it until dry, when it is only possible to discover the mended place by careful observation.

Saving the Woodwork.

To prevent the marring of mantels, furniture and window sills by flower vases or pots place beneath them li[illegible] cracker or cake boxes now so common on the market. A supply of these squares can be cut in a few moments, and if kept in a handy place their use will soon become a habit, saving furniture and woodwork from many unsightly rings.

Taking a Compliment.

It is said that the way a woman takes a compliment stamps her place in society. A blush denotes the debutante, a giggle the silly or unsophisticated, a brusque protest the sensible but unpolished, but the quiet, unelated smile, with a quieter "Thank you," if reply be necessary, unmistakably denotes the woman of social training, the Eye-Strain Producing Pain in the Back.

In two cases lately where the family physician suspected eye-strain as the cause, because in the first case where the pain was in the small of the back, it was bad only during school hours; in the second case where it was between the shoulders and down the spine, it was after using the eyes for a long time at close work. On being tested in both cases, astigmatism was found, and after being corrected with the proper glasses all the pain in the back disappeared in both cases. In all cases where headaches are worse after close work, shopping, or after a journey or long drive, etc., they are invariably caused by eye-strain.

We correct the eye-strain, and all the results are cured.

NOTICE.

We notice in the Toronto papers that the Hotel Quinte fire was alleged to have been caused by electric wires.

We beg to contradict same, as, a few weeks ago, we made a personal inspection of the wiring at Hotel Quinte and found everything in good order.

And sometime after the fire started the lights were on, proving conclusively that it was not the wiring which started the fire.

Belleville's Calamity; Quinte Burns Down.

Fire Believed to Have Started From Electric Wire, and Spread Under Floors Before Discovered--Many Guests Lost Effects--Two Narrow Escapes--Losses and Insurance--History of the Famous Hotel--Incidents of the Disaster.

The worst calamity that has befallen Belleville for many years—if not in its entire history — came last night when the princely Hotel Quinte the pride of our citizens and the theme of praise for everybody who entered its hospitable doors, was burned down.

From the time the fire was discovered last night, and all through today, the event has been the sole topic of conversation among all classes of our citizens, and expressions of regret and sympathy were to be heard on every hand.

Not only had the splendid hotel come to be recognized as the best hostelry in Ontario outside of the metropolis, being thus a great "feather in Belleville's cap," but it had become inseparably associated with the social life of the major portion of our citizens, to whom, therefore, the loss comes as almost a personal one.

Many a man, as he gazed at the blackened walls this morning, had his memory stirred and his heart saddened by thoughts of splendid social functions held within its walls in recent years. Small wonder, indeed, if the sight called up memories of the "touch of vanished hands," and the "sound of voices that are still."

The fire was first detected last night by a smell of smoke on the second floor, near the elevator landing. It seemed to be between the floors. How quickly the fire spread may be judged by the fact that Mr. M. Gordon, who had an appointment with a traveller in room 16, which is near where the fire broke out, entered the room above mentioned without detecting any smell or sign of smoke. He sat down to wait for the gentleman with whom he had the appointment and, five minutes later, hearing some commotion, opened the room door and found out there was a fire. The smoke was then so dense and overpowering that Mr. Gordon was almost overcome in going down the stairs.

The fire alarm was sent in at 9.48, and the firemen arrived promptly. When the brigade came upon the scene there did not appear to be, outside of the smoke, any signs of fire, but it soon became apparent that the devouring element had worked its way under the flooring from room to room, and was all ready to burst out in different places almost simultaneously, which it appears to have done

HOW IT STARTED

It is generally rumored that the fire started from the electric wiring between the floors just above the main entrance to the hotel, on Pinnacle street.

Mr and Mrs. Jenkins were away at a party when the fire broke out, and their feelings when they saw the splendid building apparently doomed to destruction can be better imagined than described.

The staff of the hotel worked like beavers to save what they could, and made their way, through the dense and stifling smoke, through all the rooms to see that no guests should be forgotten and lives lost.

Mr. Frank Fitzpatrick, the assistant manager, presented a striking and pathetic sight as The Intelligencer saw him about 11 o'clock last night. With a wet handkerchief still tied across his nose and mouth he came slowly and wearily through the crowd which surrounded the doomed building. He said the books and records of the hotel had been saved, and a thorough search made in all the rooms. He felt sure that no lives were lost. And then the urbane and popular little chap whose friends are legion, looked as though his feelings were about to overcome him. [illegible] of the Quinte, loved the place like "Home, Sweet Home."

By 10.30 a tremendous crowd had arrived on the scene, and Bridge St., the post office corner and Pinnacle street were packed with spectators. "A calamity for Belleville" was the general verdict.

In the rear of the hotel, as one stood at the back of Bridge Street Church, it could be seen that no human power could save the building. Flames had burst out of the roof, and the whole centre flat was a seething furnace. The crash of breaking glass could be heard in all directions. The firemen were plying their streams bravely, but without avail. The handsome and splendidly appointed Quinte, Belleville's pride, was doomed.

dining-room, then shot up through the roof, and the glare extended all over the city, making some places as light as day.

The firemen worked like Trojans all night, and prevented the flames from spreading to other buildings, but slowly and surely the fire licked up all the inflammable parts of the interior of the hotel, and only subsided when there was nothing left to burn.

The building was completely gutted, only the walls standing this morning.

MANY GUESTS LOST EFFECTS.

Whilst the hotel register showed there were a goodly number of transient guests, in addition to many city people who boarded there, but few were at the hotel when the alarm was given. Owing to this unfortunate state of affairs, most of the guests lost their effects, for when they did arrive on the scene the building was filled with dense and stifling smoke, which it was impossible to face in order to save anything

NARROW ESCAPES.

Two narrow escapes are recorded. An elderly gentleman named James Lowrie, who boarded at the Quinte, was taken out of his room in an unconscious condition, he having retired for the night. But for the timely assistance he would have perished.

Mrs Jenkins' father, who lived at the Quinte, was also taken out in an unconscious condition.

The Brockville hockey team, which put up at the Quinte, lost some of their effects, and some of the players cut quite a swath as they posed on the corner with their hockey suits still on.

Mr. H. R. Beattie was a roomer at the Quinte, and lost everything except what he had on. Some valuable keepsakes of Harvey's were destroyed.

Mr. W. B. Northrup, M. P., who was a guest at the hotel, lost a considerable quantity of wearing apparel. In fact, all the guests and employees, with hardly any exception lost heavily.

Mr. J. V. Jenkins, as before stated, had been, with Mrs. Jenkins, to a social function. Mr. Jenkins found, when he arrived at the hotel, that all the wearing apparel he had left in the world was a dress suit.

THE LOSS AND INSURANCE.

The loss on building and contents is estimated at over $100,000, with an insurance of $60,000, divided among thirteen companies.

Mr. Jenkins assumed the management of the Quinte on May 1st, seven years ago, and has since, as everybody knows, done all possible to make the hotel the splendid success it was.

The hotel had a staff of 40, and, according to the register, the following guests were within its walls last evening:

P. E. Dowie, Toronto.
D. L. Robertson, Montreal.
W. N. Fielding and son, Toronto.
F. M. Sloan, Toronto.
R. F. Rapley, Montreal.
J. Ruse, Calgary.
J. Gleare, Deseronto.
J. Coward, Winnipeg.
J. A. Culverwell, Cobourg.
D. McDonald, Guelph.
C. C. Jennings, Toronto.
J. C. Dickson and wife, Bancroft.
W. Jefferson, Montreal.
Mrs. Meudell, W. B. Northrup, M. P., Miss Irwin, James Lowrie, J. A. McFee, H. R. Beattie, Prof. P. Denys, Mrs. L. W. Yeomans, city.

THE QUINTE'S HISTORY.

The syndicate which built the Quinte was composed of the following gentlemen: Messrs. H. Corby, ex-M.P., W. H. Biggar, ex-M.P.P.; G. E. Thompson, Thos. Ritchie, John Bell K. C., D. M. Waters and Col. Lazier. Of these two have passed away and the remainder with one exception, are still residents of the city.

The building had a frontage of 98 feet on Pinnacle street. The foundation was constructed of Point Ann stone, laid in rock-faced random work. The superstructure was of Don Valley red pressed brick. On the Pinnacle street side an open square tower was carried up 40 feet above the roof, and was surmounted by a flag staff. The entrances on both sides which led into the office were of portico design and attractive in appearance. The dining-room, which had recently been improved and beautifully decorated, was in size 37 x 45 feet with enriched panelled ceiling.

The dining-room, in addition to being supplied with an endless variety of beautiful dishes, had for use hundreds of dollars worth of silverware, all of which was lost. The dishes bore the mark of the hotel.

The different firms who had a hand

Wilson, contractors, Kingston; subcontractors: Harris & Walton, mill work; Geo. Twining, painting; Elliott Bros., Kingston, plumbing and heating; Douglas Bros., Toronto, tinners, etc.; John Lorigan, Montreal, marble flooring; J. W. Walker, Belleville, hardware, etc.; J. Ferguson, Toronto, elevator; J. W. Scott, Ottawa, electrician; American Copper Co., gas and electric lighting fixtures; C. E. Smith & Co., extra plumbing; S. T. Harris, carpenter work; London Furniture Co.; Wrought Iron Range Co., Toronto; Meriden Britannia Silver Co.; Geo. Ritchie & Co., carpets, curtains, etc.; G. S. Tickell & Sons and several other firms had smaller contracts.

The furniture of the main building was throughout of quartered oak.

The Quinte was formally opened on February 28, 1895, with Mr. C. F. Hunter as its first manager.

ALARMS THIS MORNING.

The fire brigade was called out twice this morning, owing to the fact that the ruins had again burst into flames. Crowds of people stood around the streets in the vicinity, watching the firemen work and discussing the matter.

THE INSURANCE LOSSES.

Following are the companies which carried insurance and their losses:

Anglo-American	$10.000
Montreal-Canada	10,000
Traders	10,000
Commercial Union	7,500
Hand-in-Hand	5,000
Equity	4,000
Monarch	2,300
Ottawa	2,500
North British & Mercantile	2,500
Norwich Union	2,500
Merchants	2,000
Independent	1,500

Of the above total of $60,000, $3,500 was on the annex, which was only slightly damaged. This leaves $56,500 on the hotel proper.

TWO SIGHTSEERS INJURED.

This morning, shortly after 11 o'clock, two citizens were injured whilst viewing the ruins. Messrs. Geo. Perry and L. Bolyea were beneath the porch on the Bridge street entrance when a quantity of bricks fell. Mr. Perry was struck on the side of the face with a brick, but was not seriously injured. Mr. Bolyea did not fare so well. One or more of the falling bricks fell upon his head, inflicting a nasty wound and rendering him unconscious. At first it was feared that he had sustained serious injuries, but such fortunately proved not to be the case. He received a bad scalp wound, which was soon attended to by medical men who were upon the scene.

TELEGRAMS OF SYMPATHY.

Mr. Jenkins has received a number of telegrams sympathizing with him, in the loss he and the city have sustained, amongst them being the following:

Chicago, Jan. 5th.
J. V. Jenkins, Belleville;

Very sorry to hear of yours and the city's great loss. Accept sincere sympathy. Call on me if I can be of any assistance to you in any way.

H. CORBY.

Toronto, Jan. 5th.
J. V. Jenkins, Belleville;

Your many friends all over Canada will deeply sympathize with you in your great loss. Can we look after your little daughter until settled? Would take great care of her. Let me know if there is anything at all I can do to help you in your hour of trial.

F. H. HERBERT.

Napanee, Jan. 5th.
J. V. Jenkins, Belleville;

Sorry to hear of the loss of your hotel.

D. C. McNAUGHTON.

NOTES OF THE FIRE.

It was freely rumored on the streets last night that the fire had started from electric wires, but it will be noted in another column that the management of the Trenton Electric Company deny this. They say that the electric lights were burning for some time after the fire was discovered, and this, they say, shows conclusively that the wires did not cause the fire.

A rumor became quite freely circulated this morning that a life had been lost in the burning building, but there does not appear to be grounds for such a rumor.

The opinion was expressed by many people that certain portions of the hotel walls should be pulled down, as they, at present, form a menace to pedestrians who are passing by.

The question is freely asked, "Will the Quinte be rebuilt?" and is just as freely answered "It must be." Mr. Jenkins, when seen in relation to the matter, declined to talk on it. He was not in a position at present, he said, to discuss the matter at all.

Some people feared that, owing to its close proximity, there might be danger of Bridge St. Church catching fire, but the slate roof of that structure, and its solid stone walls, saved it from any harm.

It is many a day since the local fire fighters had such a hard task as that which faced them in the Quinte fire, but they stuck to their duty nobly, and did all that men could do under the circumstances.

A HOUSE GOWN.

Besides Being Attractive It Is a Real Economy.

So many girls spend all their available money for street and party clothes, quite content to look shabby and ungroomed while about their own home. Any cast off piece of finery or an antediluvian walking skirt is sufficiently good for "around the house."

This idea is indicative of a frivolous nature and slovenliness and should be avoided by all self respecting young women. An attractive appearance when about the house is greatly to be desired, and it is a real saving of money, too, to have a decided change of clothing for indoor wear.

The real economy is to provide oneself with a house dress of some sort. It is worth the effort and the few minutes to change one's dress as soon as one comes into the house. Street boots are exchanged for light slippers—a great saving on feet, stockings, shoes, carpets and nerves—and the boots are put away with trees. Boot trees are a necessary indulgence in the economical girl's scheme. Boots will last twice as long with their help.

Any girl who can hold a needle can make herself a "negligee" more or less elaborate, but always dainty. She should also be able to make herself a shirt waist suit of some lightweight, durable stuff—pongee, foulard, cashmere—that with the aid of fresh collars and cuffs will always look attractive in the house.—Boston Traveler.

FRIENDSHIP.

Practical Suggestions That Women Should Take to Heart.

Never let a question of money arise if you wish to have your friendship live.

Ask consideration, ask mental help, but do everything that is possible. Economize in every way that you can before asking money from your friend.

You will find that if you ask your friends for money, though the money itself may have been given cheerfully, willingly, that something is lost, the joy is not just as it was.

Respect your friend's religion. Your knowledge is not so great that you can say that you alone are right, and if your friend is good and sweet and kind and sympathetic, why should you wish to change the sect of the church she attends?

Consider the weaknesses of your friend. Remember her life's story as you know it, her surroundings and the story of her soul as you read it, and be sympathetic and bear patiently with her as only a real friend can.

Always credit her with doing the best that she can, and if you do not quite understand something give her the benefit of a doubt and think that in the beginning she started with the intention of doing something kindly to you.

Constant consideration is the secret of friendship.

KITCHEN HELPS.

When finely chopped nuts are needed for salads or sandwiches run the nuts through the meat chopper.

Plenty of shelves and drawers or a patent kitchen cabinet are great helps to the woman whose time is spent in cooking.

Select a dozen or so of the smoothest and largest splints from the new broom and lay them away to use in testing cake when it is baking.

Every kitchen outfit should have a measuring glass that is marked to measure teaspoonfuls, tablespoonfuls and gills as well as halves, thirds and quarters.

A heavy chalk mark laid a finger's distance from the sugar box and all around (there must be no space not covered) will surely prevent ants from troubling.

5 or 500 or 5,000,000

Each biscuit as light as if made by fairy hands.

BY A GROCER'S CLERK

"The McGill Girl," Dashing Woman Forger, Caught in Toronto.

Grace Cameron, Most of Whose Victims Grinned and Bore It, Now Behind the Bars—Vivid story of Her Capture and of Her Method of Operating—Made Clean Breast of It to Police.

Toronto, Jan. 5.—Only a girl, not yet twenty, but the smartest bogus cheque operator that ever came Torontoway, and one who has been a terror to a goodly number of prominent citizens during the past three months, was finally landed by a fluke late last night.

Handsome, dressed in the latest of fashion, and with a grandiose air that make a duchess jealous, it is no wonder that many citizens took the bait and got badly bit in consequence.

"The McGill Girl."

She is known by many aliases, the principal of which is "The McGill Girl," but she gave her correct name, during a lengthy interview with Detective-Sergt. Duncan as Grace Cameron.

Her capture was due to the smartness of a grocer and his clerk. When she was taken to police headquarters she talked and placed information in Sergt. Duncan's hands that will make many professional and business men very nervous.

Altogether thirteen charges were laid against her last night. On the first of these charges Ruth Wilson, who she claims is her sister-in-law, but who the police alleged is her sister, as there is a striking resemblance between the two, will appear with her. Miss Wilson was with her when the arrest was made.

Caught By $15 Cheque.

The cheque, which was responsible for the capture, was only for $15. At 8 o'clock Charles W. Coxwell, grocer of 17 Howard street, was busy in his store when he was called to the phone. In answer to his hello a female voice softly asked, "Is that Mr. Coxwell?"

"This is Mrs. Winnett speaking. Could you cash a cheque for me for $15 on my husband's account—Dr. Winnett, you know."

Mr. Coxwell said he would be very pleased and "Mrs. Winnett" replied that she would send round her maid immediately. The maid proved a very winsome creature, too winsome in fact for even obliging Mr. Coxwell. He tumbled to a game, and quickly made an excuse and was back to the phone, and soon in earnest conversation with Doctor Winnett.

Doctor Winnett Orders Capture.

"That's the woman who's been forging my name right along, capture her," said the doctor.

The charming maid was just disappearing amid a flutter of rustling skirts through the door.

"After her quick," cried Coxwell to his clerk and the adventure-seeking youth hustled. Back to the telephone went the grocer-detective, and was shortly pouring the whole story into the attentive ears of Detective Tipton, who soon thereafter arrived at the store.

"The Cop Had Her."

His face took a fall when he was told that the bird had flown, but the phone bell rang again and the youth joyously shouted that "the cop had her."

Time flew again until the detective burst through a multitude at the St. Andrew's street and Spadina avenue and claimed his prize. P. C. Jeffreys of No. 3 division stood alert until the arrival of the hurry-up wagon, when he returned to his beat with a sigh and a blush on his face.

Very few minutes sufficed to impress Miss Cameron that Sergt. Duncan knew quite a lot, and as a result she gave him her history, beginning with her departure from home and her subsequent reign in the City of Toronto. Miss Cameron told the detective chief that she came from Massachusetts, U.S.A., and that she lived there with Miss Lizzie Shaw up till a year ago.

Grace Cameron's History.

Her home was in the little town of Attleborough, Mass. Eighteen summers passed before she left her home in the country for the bustle of the metropolitan city of Buffalo. She kept faith with the world until she was thrown out of employment. She then came to Toronto and sought service with Dr. Doolittle, who she subsequently claimed as victim in one of her cheque adventures. From there she went to a place well known by the police in the capacity of maid, still playing square.

How She Blossomed.

She then bloomed forth at one of the leading hotels, resplendent in costumes fit for a princess, and continued to make the acquaintance of many legal and medical men. It was then that she began to use the material in her hands. She knew this man's grocer, and a telephone message, mentioning that she wanted a cheque cashed, was the finish until her victim tallied his bank account at the customary time and came to this particular amount, when he would whistle, and that was the end of it. Milady's operations took enormous bounds, but she fooled herself when she began forging the names of gentlemen whom she did not know, and this she admits was the cause of her capture.

Telephone message after telephone message have been received by the detective department. At last the detectives have found somebody does want to prosecute. Dr. Winnett has been victimized no less than six times by the same woman, and when five [illegible] rest was made out. Her sixth attempt upon Dr. Winnett's bank account proved disastrous.

It is suprising that all the cheques in the detectives' hands are for the small amounts and constitute the unknown friends of Miss Cameron. Ruth Wilson took her arrest as a great joke. She refused to say anything and was so boisterous as to crack jokes with the detectives.

Made a Clean Breast of It.

Miss Cameron made a clean breast of pretty nearly all. For three solid weeks Detective Kennedy has been on her trail, picking up cheque after cheque for various sums, but in each instance unable to find a victim willing to prosecute.

Miss Wilson, just as they were going to be searched by the matron, eney, was found on her. She said that she was 23 and that it had proved her unlucky year. Miss Cameron says that she never squeezed more than for fifty dollars at the most.

On the 14th of last month she forged and cashed a cheque at A. H. Cooper's made out apparently by W. D. Norton, 152 Wellesley street, for $15. A cheque on Dr. Winnett for $20 was cashed by her on the 17th at Reeves' butcher store, 203 Wellesley street. Dr. Doolittle, 180 Sherbourne street, was soaked for $15, the cheque being cashed at J. and W. McFarren's, grocers, Queen and Sherbourne streets, on the 28th.

Miss Wilson on the way to the station gave her address as Hotel Lafayette, Buffalo.

Miss Cameron will be charged with forgery and attempting to obtain money by bogus cheques.

ERNEST HASTINGS OF PARKHILL

Young Canadian Actor Victim of the Omaha Train Wreck.

Toronto, Jan. 5.—Ernest Hastings, who was killed in a railway wreck near Omaha on Thursday, was well-known in Toronto.

He was a graduate of Toronto University and of Osgoode Hall. He was born at Parkhill, Ont., where his father still lives.

In his early twenties he went on the stage. He was first with Ada Rehan in Shakespearian roles, and later went to California, where he became the most popular actor on the Pacific coast.

Three or four years ago he was in Toronto as the parson in Lover's Lane, and made a decided hit in this part, both here and in New York. Last year he was leading man with Roselle Knott, and in the spring played with her at the Grand Opera House here.

Ernest Shipman, theatrical manager, St. Louis, yesterday, said: "I had planned to have Ernest Hastings succeed Robert Edeson in Strongheart next season.

"He was a credit to Canada and to the Canadian stage. He was a man of high ideals, and of most loveable disposition. He was keenly interested in well-natured plans for the formation of an association of Canadian actors, managers and writers, with the aim of establishing a Canadian dramatic circuit that would be of national importance.

"If my financial hopes are realized I hope to take up this idea of Mr. Hastings and make it my life's work. The present affords a great opportunity for the presentation of a characteristic Canadian play, a play that will give a true index to the Canadian spirit."

Mr. Hastings had reached a high place in his profession, and his untimely taking off will be regretted by a wide circle of friends in Canada.

MR. GARDINER'S REPLY

Answers the First Twelve of the Truss Charges With Denials.

Principal of the Ontario Institute of the Blind At Brantford Says They Are the Result of Spite Because He Rebuked Truss For Indolence—Also Says That His Accuser is Grossly Incapable.

Brantford, Jan. 5.—Principal Gardiner was on the witness stand in his own defence at yesterday afternoon's session of the Ontario Institute for the Blind enquiry. Each charge laid by the complainant, Truss, was taken up separately, and Mr. Gardiner went thoroughly into the first twelve on the list.

The charge as to his unfitness for position was repudiated by showing his prominence in matters of education prior to his appointment, and also by the pains taken to acquire special knowledge requisite for the blind.

To the charge that things went to smash within a month of Gardiner's appointment in matters of discipline, the principal cited cases where improvement have taken place, and gave a general review of the disciplining rules. No change had taken place in regard to locking the entrance of the institute in the present principal's time, and there had been no improper association between male and female pupils in the grounds.

To the charge that three pupils remained from Saturday to Sunday in a house of illfame, it was untrue, and the house in question, with a father and mother, and three sons, was not of the sort alleged by Truss.

In regard to pupils' attendance at church Mr. Gardiner submitted figures to show that it was on the increase. He had never suspended the rules against smoking, but was continually requesting adult pupils who smoked not to do so in the presence of smaller pupils. There were only six who used tobacco at present in the institute, and with these the habit was one of long standing.

No pupil had suffered from a bad disorder in his time, and the evidence of Dr. Marquis, who once examined a suspect, was given as corroboration.

Truss charged that Mr. Gardiner purchased more willow than was required. What was left unused had been due to incompetence of the former in having it peeled, and not due to his mismanagement.

Principal Gardiner stated he never used improper language in the institution or elsewhere, and gave explanations of an alleviating character in the specific instances alleged by Truss.

The charge that improper conduct had taken place between inmates and laundry girls was absolutely false, and the evidence of maids was cited. The pupils in question had been sternly rebuked for their visit to the laundry.

Mr. Gardiner admitted that industrial work had deteriorated, but this was due to a combination of circumstances which could in no way be ascribed to him. Truss was thoroughly incapable, slept during instruction hours and was too lazy to do his work. The charges had been founded from spite, because of the principal's rebuke to him about his indolence.

MacKinnon, local representative for James Alexander, Limited, Montreal, showing the various figures in connection with the cheese trade on the Kingston and Napanee boards during the season just closed. The estimated total make was 70,000 cheese, meaning a total estimated revenue of $708,050. The highest price paid was 13 1-8c, and the lowest 10 1-2c.

Poisoned By Canned Salmon.

Toronto, Jan. 5.—Canned salmon is blamed for nearly causing the death of five persons at 137 Manning avenue. W. J. Hughes, his wife, child, sister and mother ate salmon for supper and about midnight all complained of illness. Dr. Wood was summoned. He thinks they are all out of danger, although Mr. and Mrs. Hughes are still confined to their beds.

Magnets In The Court.

Grace Cameron and Ruth Wilson Arraigned on Saturday.

Sensational Developments Promised In the Unfolding Story of the Alleged Woman Cheque Forgers--As a Rule, Keep Up an Air of Lightheartedness, But Broke Down and Cried After Appearance in Dock.

Toronto, Jan. 7.—The arrest of Grace Cameron and Ruth Wilson Friday on charges of forgery is the beginning of a story the unwinding of which promises to be full up with sensation. The relation of the life led by these two young women in Toronto and other cities in Canada and the United States, if it comes to be made under oath, will be decorated with names writ high on the social register. The arrest of the pair is declared to have aroused the liveliest apprehensions in the breasts of well-known people.

The police say they could lay a score of charges against the two women. They have information which outlines adventures, the scenes of which are laid in the best hotels of Toronto, Ottawa Hamilton, Buffalo, New York and Boston. In many cases of the alleged passing of forged cheques the victims are said to be unwilling to come forward, by reason of the particular method pursued by the women.

Name Is Harris.

The police believe that the women are sisters, that their real name is Harris, and that they came from the neighborhood of Newmarket. The one calling herself Cameron has most charges against her, but the supposed sister is alleged to have been a willing ally, and is directly charged. The "Cameron" girl was known under that name in several of the hotels where she stayed, while in others she borrowed the names of people well known.

Photographed and Measured.

The pair were magnets for a crowd of eager spectators at police headquarters Saturday morning, the crowds following even to the top floor, where the door closed on the good-looking prisoners, the police matron and three plain clothes men. The crowd waited for an hour outside, while behind the frosted glass Ruth Wilson and Grace Cameron submitted to the detailed measuring required by the Bertillon system. They laughed and joked with the officers, pretended to be pleased when the gallery artist photographed them, and were vastly interested in the taking of the finger-prints. They were afterwards taken downstairs separately, and driven to the lock-up. They are keeping up, as a rule, an air of lightheartedness, but once after their appearance in the dock they broke down and cried.

Arraigned In Court.

The two women appeared before the Police Magistrate Saturday morning.

Grace Cameron, who gave her age as 19, is a tall, well-built young woman, of shrewd and attractive appearance.

Her tasty attire was completed by a long, neat-fitting fawn coat and a brown-plush hat from which a pendant white veil partly obscured her features.

She was charged with making false documents, i.e., cheques, and defrauding therewith on Dec. 14, W. H. Knowlton out of $15; on Dec. 17, Dr. F. Winnett out of $15; on Dec. 27, Dr. P. E. Doolittle out of $15, and on Jan. 4, aided by Ruth Wilson, attempting to defraud C. W. Coxwell out of $14.

Ruth Wilson, a pretty semi-blonde of 23, wore a New York walking habit, and a black fur stole.

Besides being jointly arraigned with her fair companion on the Coxwell charge, she was accused of defrauding John Pettigrew out of $15 by the cheque method on January 4.

Both prisoners, unrepresented by counsel, were remanded until the 11th.

Boy Forger Arrested.

Buffalo, N. Y., Jan. 7.—A 16-year-old boy, giving his name as Wright, and his home at Uxbridge, was arrested here last night for passing bogus cheques. He is said to have operated in a number of Canadian banks and hotels, including Toronto and Montreal institutions.

Cobalt's First Election.

Cobalt, Jan. 7.—The election of a council for the town of Cobalt took place Saturday. W. E. Running, A. S. Goloska, D. Cusson, Joseph Morin, H. H. Lang and John Martin are elected councillors by acclamation. For mayor, H. J. Finlan, broker, secured 102 votes and M. J. O'Connor, barrister, 69 votes. Only 40 per cent. of the votes were polled. The elected and their friends were banquetted by Mr. Verner, proprietor of the mint.

A Wolf In Winnipeg.

Winnipeg, Jan. 7.—The intense cold and the heavy fall of snow is having the effect of driving wild animals into towns in search of food. A wolf was actually seen on Main street, Winnipeg, on Saturday near the Bank of Hamilton. It was chased by a mob of newsboys, but escaped and ran across the river into the woods. Saturday a lynx was wounded and captured within a few hundred yards of the C.P.R. depot.

Raisuli's Fortress Falls.

Tangier, Jan. 7.—Zinat, Raisuli's stronghold, was practically destroyed by fire, and fell into the hands of the troops of the Sultan yesterday after an almost bloodless fight. Raisuli and his 700 followers succeeded in eluding capture and reached the mountains despite the elaborate plans of War Minister Gabbas to prevent their escape.

Canadians at Yale.

New York, Jan. 7.—Yale University's catalogue, issued Saturday, shows 3 247 students and 442 faculty members. New York has 639 students and Canada 23. A feature is the increasing number of Canadian students, who usually stand high in scholarships.

A NAVY FOR RUSSIA.

Czar Learns the Truth and Will Move as Soon as Able.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 7.—At a recent conference of the highest naval authorities, summoned personally by the Emperor, and presided over by himself, His Majesty enjoined the officers to speak with the utmost frankness, and for the first time he was informed of the full extent of the corruption responsible for defeats at the hands of the Japanese. Those present at the conference gathered that the Emperor was fully determined to put through a complete naval program as soon as the finances of the empire permit.

Evil Conditions at Lodz.

Lodz, Russia, Jan. 7.—The continuation of the strike is reaching a frightful increase in the distress and crimes are also augmenting.

The Ambulance Society is refusing to send ambulances into the suburbs to succor the men who are wounded in street fights, because the hooligans threaten to murder the attending physicians.

Russia's Famine.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 7.—The appropriation of $18,000,000 for famine relief being exhausted, Premier Stolypin has asked the Council of Ministers for a new credit of an equal amount.

Fred Dane Appointed.

Toronto, Jan. 7.—Frederick Dane was appointed on Saturday to the vacancy on the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway commission, made vacant by the resignation two months ago of Cecil B. Smith. J. L. Englehart is chairman of the commission, and Dennis Murphy, the second member. The labors of the office are recognized by an honorarium of $1,000 a year. The appointment is made, of course, on the recommendation of the Provincial Government.

Mr. Dane is a commercial man of practical experience, gained in wholesale business relations. Mr. Dane is 45 years of age.

The Harriman Enquiry.

New York, Jan. 7.—The Interstate Commerce Commission concluded the preliminary portion of its enquiry into the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific railways and allied Harriman lines in this city Saturday, and adjourned, to meet again next Thursday in the Federal Building at Chicago. The testimony taken Saturday tended further to show the great scope of the power conferred upon President E. H. Harriman by the boards of directors of the various lines under Union Pacific control.

Tug Skylark Total Wreck.

Port Colborne, Jan. 7.—The tug Skylark, belonging to Haney & Miller, left this port on Thursday afternoon, to get to Port Stanley. Word was received yesterday that the tug is a total wreck off Port Maitland, where it grounded in a heavy fog.

Carnegie Goes West.

Neepawa, Man., Jan. 7.—Andrew Carnegie has sent an offer to erect handsome library buildings here if the town will contribute 10 per cent. of its cost annually towards maintenance.

Centenarian's Death.

Kingston, Jan. 7.—Mrs. Patrick Clint, 100 years, and William Newlands, contractor, died in Kingston on Saturday. The venerable lady was a former hotelkeeper here.

Boiler Through the Ice.

Cobalt, Jan. 7.—An 80-ton boiler belonging to the Nipissing mine went through the ice of Cobalt Lake Friday night, having been left standing on ice.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Nice weather for election day.

Somebody will be sadder and wiser to-night. Who do you s'pose it will be?

• • •

The schools reopened again to-day, to the intense delight (?) of everybody concerned.

A correspondent writes; Wouldn't it be well to notify pedestrians to avoid interfering with boys using Front St. sidewalks as a hockey rink and step into the road so as to be out of the boys' way? The police seem to not notice it.

The Quinte fire happened on Friday night, and picture post cards of the ruins were on sale on Saturday morning. That's quick work.

It is sad to reflect that, after the big fire had passed without any casualties, a looker-on should have been killed just when people supposed all danger was passed. The lesson in the case of poor Bolyea seems to be that a man's fate follows him up pretty close, wherever he is.

Dozens, nay hundreds, of people are asking, what are the prospects for the rebuilding of Hotel Quinte. The Intelligencer is in a position to say that the matter stands in this way: If any syndicate or individual will advance the sum of $50,000 towards it, and the city will grant exemption from taxation other than school taxes, with free water, for a period of ten years, the Quinte will be rebuilt and run again under the management of Mr. J. V. Jenkins.

In the meantime, offers are pouring in to Mr. Jenkins, from east and west, asking him to take the management of high-class hotels. Evidently the fame of the Quinte's proprietor was not by any means confined to this locality. Mr. Jenkins does not at present know what will be done in regard to the rebuilding of the Quinte. That largely remains with our citizens. If they want the magnificent hostelry to rise, phoenix-like, from it's ashes, let them say so.

The first question for the incoming Council to answer will be, can they see their way clear to assist in the rebuilding of one of Belleville's very best assets by allowing Mr. Jenkins exemption from taxation for a term of years? Everyone can see how dependant Belleville was upon the Quinte as the headquarters for social functions, banquets to distinguished guests, etc. The Board of Trade should speedily meet and consider the question of recommending action to the Council in regard to this matter. Belleville has suffered a severe loss, which is being felt more and more as the days go by, and it is the duty of all to do what they can to see that the loss shall be repaired as speedily as possible.

Home Rulers are again distrusting themselves. Allegations of financial wrong-doing on the part of one section of the party is charged by the section of the faction. The O'Brien section is at war with the Redmondites and revelations as to the misappropriation of Home Rule funds are boldly threatened. The matter is to be settled by a jury, which is to decide what became of the large sums which came from the United States, Canada, and Australia, which, Home Rule papers aver, were obtained under false pretences, and which enabled the bosses of the party to defy the people. It is about time this Home Rule medicant fraud was exposed, so as to prevent further impositions upon the honest but unsuspecting dupes.

Another raid is to be made upon the Dominion Treasury. The Minister of Railways and Canals told the Liberals of New Brunswick the other day that the Government contemplated taking over all the branch lines in that Province; and followed with the declaration that "Attorney-General Pugsley said the taking over of the branch lines would mean much for the people of the parts of the Province whom they served. He considered that this declaration was most important and should be made a prominent plank of the party platform." The Government has already relieved its friends in the Maritime provinces of two or three bankrupt concerns. Now, they propose relieving others. It is a fortunate thing that the country is prosperous, or these reckless spendthrifts would bankrupt it also.

The result flowing from the growth of Socialism and Labor combinations is aptly portrayed by the New York Sun. It points out that "Class is arrayed against class. The relations between the employer and the employed are destroyed and enmity and hatred have taken their place. The rich are held up to universal execration and are assailed in the pillory which Mr. Roosevelt has built for them. All over the land there is impatience with the law and intolerance of judges. The constituted authorities are set at defiance Men chafe at the restraints which are the safeguards of liberty. Labor, earning reward heretofore undreamed of, is discontented and unruly: it is more than ever the prey of the innumerable agitators whose trade it is to debauch and plunder it. It is losing its habit of thrift and industry and its wages turn from a blessing to a curse. There is a greater unrest and a greater uneasiness in the air than there was before Sumter was fired on."

It was twenty-one years yesterday, since Bridge St. Methodist Church was burnt. No wonder, then, that on last Friday night the Bridge St. people watched with more intense interest than many others the progress of the Quinte hotel fire. "A burnt child dreads the fire."

• • •

Returns of the elections will be read out at the City Hall at 8.30 this evening. So the Returning Officer says.

Kind Heart of Dumas Pere.

(Harper's Weekly.)

Dumas pere, when manager of the Theatre Historique, was continually studying the influence of the temperature on the sale of tickets — at least, he seemed to do so; in fact, his seeming interest in the show of the thermometer was, like so many other acts of his, nothing but an expression of the proverbial kindness of his heart.

One day Dumas happened to meet an old friend whom he had not seen for thirty years. "Where are you going to dine to-night?" he asked the friend.

"To-night I shall dine nowhere," was the answer.

"Oh, no," said Dumas, "you are mistaken; you shall dine with me." He led the friend into his house and gave him the upper place at his table. The poor man had not had such a dinner for a long time and Dumas, when retiring into his writing room after the coffee, said: "It is a matter of course that I expect you to-morrow at the same time."

The friend came the next day and the day after this and so on for ten years up to his death. One day, however, he told Dumas that as he was eating bread he did not earn this arrangement could not continue. "If I am not able honestly to earn my meal I shall not come again. Tell me in what way I can be of service to you."

Dumas thought a moment, then he said: "You can do me a great favor. You may go to the new bridge every day and take the temperature by Chevalier's thermometer. The temperature, you must know, is of great moment in the matter of the sale of tickets. Could you do this?"

The poor fellow answered affirmatively and from that time on reported to Dumas every day. "At noon the thermometer showed so and so many degrees in the shade." And Dumas, who, of course, did not care in the least about the temperature, replied with the same regularity: "I am very much obliged. If you only knew what a service you are doing me!"

Daily Intelligencer.

Aylesworth's Big Job.

Hon. Mr. Aylesworth seems to be treading on dangerous ground in his proposed bill "for the suppression of electoral corruption."

Such a measure will surely run counter to the electoral ethics of his leaders in the administration, reckoning Sir Wilfrid.

Both these great Liberals are on record as favoring a resort to methods which come under Mr. Aylesworth's designation.

Speaking at the Club Nationale, in Montreal, Sir Wilfrid said in the year 1877:

"I would have you rely mainly on the justice of your cause, yet I have learned by experience that we must not forget those human devices that are so essential to victory."

The "human devices" referred to, as exposed in the election trials of 1874, lost 29 seats to the Liberals. Sir Wilfrid knew very well what he was talking about three years after. He has been consistent throughout.

Sir Richard was even more outspoken for corruption at an earlier period. Speaking at Napanee in 1873, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce said, as reported in his own paper:

"He knew there were a large number of men in the country who wanted to be bought. He knew that because he had bought them twice when he was an unrepentant sinner."

It is much to be feared that Sir Richard is still unrepentant regarding political morality. In his notorious defence of Jackson, charged with procuring false evidence to unseat Donald Sutherland in South Oxford, he said it was only "an indiscretion." The fault was "in being found out."

Mr. Aylesworth will have a hard time converting these "unrepentant sinners," one of whom thought the revelations of corruption before Mr. Denison "a great ado about a small piece of pork."

G. T. R. Fireman Dead.

On Christmas day, Thomas Leo Brown, aged 20 years, a son of Mr. Thos. Brown, an ex-engineer of the G.T.R., was taken ill with an attack of typhoid fever, which proved fatal, as he died on Saturday afternoon. Deceased was a fireman on the G.T.R. and a popular young man. He was a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, under whose auspices the funeral was held this afternoon. Deceased was born here and lived here all his life. He was a member of St. Michael's Church.

DESTROY THE CAUSE.

You Cannot Cure Dandruff Without Destroying the Cause of It.

Many people wash their scalps Saturday night or Sunday to try to keep the dandruff down for the week, but on Monday night the scalp has begun to itch, and Tuesday morning will find a good supply of dandruff when the hair is brushed. There is but one real scientific way of curing dandruff, and that is to kill the germ that causes it, and falling hair, and finally baldness. There is only one preparation that will destroy the germ, and that is Newbro's Herpicide. It is an entirely new discovery and the only hair preparation that is based on the new scientific principle. In addition Herpicide is a very refreshing hair dressing for regular toilet use. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. The Power Question.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Dear Sir,—On my return from Toronto to-night, where I had been attending the Engineers' Club banquet (I being a member of that society), I was amazed to read a letter signed by Ald. Knox published in your journal, which letter I am able to prove is not only an implied perversion of facts, but harmful towards the development of the Northumberland-Durham Power Co., of which I am the Managing Director.

Before producing proof of my charges, I wish to take Ald. Knox to task for his make-believe patriotism to the good City of Belleville. Ald. Knox states that if he were to consult his own interest he would advise Belleville to secure power from the Trent River because he claims to have an interest in a water power there, but nevertheless advises Belleville to get her power from the Moira.

Ald. Knox refers no doubt to the Chisholm's power twelve miles north of Trenton, of which he claims ownership to a small portion of these rapids—the whole of which being only 12 foot head, and in fact so insignificant that the Hydro-Electric Power Commission report does not include it among those Trent River powers worthy of long distance transmission.

As is known, the company of which I am manager control by lease, patent and deeds, most of Healey Falls and rapids, the whole of which has a head of 73 feet. The company is now waiting commencement of developments until the balance of the rapids is secured from the Dominion Government, which it is hoped will soon happen.

Just recently I have purchased the larger portion of the other four large powers on the Trent River—those which the Commission recommend should along with Healey Falls be controlled by one company, "all being worked in unison and under one management"—and thus I have shown myself obedient to the advice of the Crown, as represented by its Commission. We shall have to submit to the policy of the Ontario Government, viz., the regulation of rates by the Commission.

It may be interesting to know that Ald. Knox pressed me to purchase his portion of a small water power at a figure much larger, too, in comparison than that of other powers, and because I did not buy from him, am I to understand he desires by publishing his letter to block the company's development, feeling of course that when it developed water power in such great quantities as to enable us to supply all the available electric power wanted in the district, it was thus shutting him out of a market for a time for his power.

He claims also that my only motive in the development of water power is the profit I will receive. Surely Ald. Knox does not think I should be altogether philanthropic. At least is not my work more commendable than the retired life he leads—sitting down waiting for the unearned increment on the properties in which he has invested, and "knocking" the good efforts I am making to develop the only feasible scheme for power for Belleville's requirements?

Ald. Knox states that the Commission reported that Belleville can obtain 4900 horse-power from the Moira. That is not correct. Their report simply states that these 16 little powers would total that amount of water power at the dams, but it does not state that these 16 powers, which are distributed over a distance of over 30 miles from Belleville, will deliver that amount of electric power to the factory or the house. A large amount of these Moira powers are already in use at the dams, and even were the balance transmitted to Belleville there would be great losses in generation from water to electricity, transforming of current, loss in miles of transmission and step-down transformation, as also in local distribution—and thus only delivering to the consumer a small portion of the amount Ald. Knox claims.

Besides, there would be the doubling-up of operating staffs of men at each of the 16 dams and the separate constructions would be costly, whereas one crew of men could operate one power house of a capacity of nearly the whole of these 16 little dams.

In fact, the Hydro-Electric Commission report completely explodes the question of supplying Belleville's power requirements from the Moira River, notwithstanding that Ald. Knox implies the contrary. The Commission's report reads as follows:

"The Moira does not possess water powers of sufficient importance to warrant their being made use of for transmission purposes." It again reads:

"Coming, however, to the lower Trent River, your Commissioners find several very important powers which have been previously referred to as the proper source of electrical power to be transmitted to the Lake Ontario industrial centres."

And then again the Chief Engineer's report reads: "The water powers of the Moira River and its tributaries are numerous and a considerable number of them can be economically developed, but NONE of them are of sufficient importance to justify their being developed for the purpose of long distance transmission of electricity. They will doubtless be all utilized in time for local purposes—in mining, in generating electricity for local use; also for direct hydraulic use in paper and flour mills."

Ald. Knox also gives misleading comparisons, such as stating that there is a 15 foot head of water on the Moira near Belleville, and then writing that this is one foot higher than a certain water power in the Trent, but failing to mention the enormous difference in the quantity of water of one—a mighty river and the other a smaller and uncertain stream.

Belleville's present requirements of electric power are nearly 7000 horse power, including the two cement mills and rolling mills—to be delivered to the consumer—not water power at the source of development.

But then more power is required for the new factories, which is, after all, the chief aim. Therefore no scheme of electric transmission is worthy of consideration, which cannot deliver 10,000 horse-power or more to Belleville.

The company's undertaking when completed is a scheme of some thirty-three thousand horse-power transmitted from the Trent River, hence all now will appreciate the fact that it is the only feasible scheme of electric transmission. Therefore all these "knocks" from Mr. Knox and other knockers should stop, and instead, all Bellevillians having the honest desire of forwarding her manufacturing interests should lend a hand to the company's operations. Cheap power is the chief factor that will bring manufactories.

The company is being promoted by the leading manufacturing and business men of Belleville, Port Hope, Cobourg and the contiguous district, and is it not the duty of others to assist in this laudable work.

Speaking of municipal matters, I cannot help but express my appreciation of the support given the company by all of the members of last year's Council—Ald. Knox excepted—and I incline to the opinion that upon reflection he will not be proud of his complete but not disinterested isolation.

Yours faithfully,

THE DYNAMITER.

He Must Be a Man of Many Parts, With Nerve and Coolness.

In an article on "Dynamite; the Power Untamable," Samuel Hopkins Adams thus describes the man who handles the explosive and his ways:

"The finished type of the dynamiter is the man who has had the ability to rise and the luck to survive long enough to graduate from the plant and become an agent. In his best embodiment the explosive agent is something of a chemist, something of a quarryman, something of an electrician, a good deal of a mineralogist and above all a man of resource and coolness. It is he who does the exploding. The factory gets notice from a railroad that a contract is open for the destruction of a ledge of rock which blocks their line of advance. Away goes the agent, with his gripsack full of ready made destruction, to look the thing over. First he draws upon his mineralogic lore to determine the nature of the rock. If it is very hard he uses a high grade of his explosive, which delivers a quick, shattering blow. In case of soft rock the lower grade supplies a blast which will produce a wider effect, although it will not break the dislodged rock into such small pieces. Next as a quarryman he considers the nature of the ledge and the indicated fissures or veins and plans his drilling accordingly. Then he must attend to the drilling of the holes, the tamping of the charge and—here his electrical knowledge is called for—the arrangement of the batteries. After a few blasts he gives the railroad company his estimate, and if it is accepted he may oversee the job himself.

"Often he meets his rivals on the ground. Then comes the tug of war. Tricks of the trade are many and not all of them scrupulous. Where many agents are gathered together it seems to be a point of honor with every man to handle his particular article with the utmost apparent carelessness, while he manifests a shrinking timidity toward the products of his competitors. This is to impress the outsider. So the agent will toss about a twenty-five pound package of dynamite like so much meal, kick it, drop it over fences or down ledges and generally maltreat it. If the dynamite is fresh this is all right, but occasionally something goes wrong, and theory, together with the theorist, is blown to atoms in practice. Theoretically a high explosive should detonate only when set off by means of a fulminate of mercury cap, and some of the safety explosives apparently live up to this. But anything with nitroglycerin in it is best treated with consideration, for nitro is a very uncertain quantity."

For American Citizens.

When the visitor approached the diplomatic gallery of the senate chamber the doorkeeper informed him, says a writer in the Philadelphia Ledger, that the gallery was reserved for foreign representatives.

"It is, hey?" said the visitor. "Well, I want to tell you right now that this is a free country, and this is the senate of the United States, and I demand admission in the name of American citizenship."

"Oh!" said the doorkeeper. "Why didn't you say at first that you were an American citizen? Just step around to the second door from here. That gallery is reserved for American citizens."

With chest puffed up the stranger betook himself to the door indicated and was at once admitted to the public gallery.

Only London Humor Genuine.

All the best humor that exists in our language is cockney humor. Chaucer was a cockney. He had his house close to the abbey. Dickens was a cockney; he said he could not think without the London streets. The London taverns heard always the quaintest conversation, whether it was Ben Jonson's at the Mermaid or Sam Johnson's at the Cock. Even in our time it may be noted that the most vital and genuine humor is still written about London.—Illustrated London News.

CHRISTMAS ANTHEM.

(By Arthur J. Burdick.)

If there's one thing that this Christmas
  More than others I desire,
'Tis to hear a Christmas anthem
  By the old-time village choir.
I may live to be a hundred,
  But I never will forget
Christmas in the old home village
  And the good old time quartet.

There was Liza Briggs, contralto;
  The soprano, Mary Jones,
And the tenor, who was noted
  For the clearness of his tones.
But the basso was the stunner—
  Had a voice so hoarse and strong
It would fairly knock the slivers,
  So to speak, right off the song!

I can recollect the anthem
  Always sung on Christmas day.
"Gloo-rye, gloo-rye, in the 'ighest!"
  We could hear the tenor say.
Then the basso joined the effort.
  "Pay-son airth, goo-dwill toe man,
Gloo-rye, pay-son, gloo-rye, payson"—
  That's the way the anthem ran.

Then the women gathered courage:
  "Awngils sang the glawd reef-rain"
And the basso followed after;
  "Awngils raff-rain," o'er again.
"Reef-rain, raff-rain, ruff-rain, roof-rain"
  Shouted each, then all went back
And began again at "Gloo-rye,"
  Sailing on another tack.

After various frantic efforts,
  Going back from time to time,
  Singly, doubly, all together,
  In a climax, quite sublime,
They all met at last in concert
  On the anthem's final note
And, to peaceful silence sinking,
  Let their voices gently float.

'Twas a pleasure thus to listen
  And to watch the vocal race.
Once again I'd like to hear them
  And behold each well known face.
I may live to be a hundred,
  But I never will forget
Christmas in the old home village
  And that good old-time quartet.

The surprising growth of Northwest cities and twons is shown in the increased valuation of property. The assessment of property in Calgary in 1905 was $7,781,921, and in 1906 was $12,893,796, an increase in one year of $5,111,875. Nearly all other cities and towns are prospering proportionately as rapidly.

The Trade and Navigation report for the year ending November last, shows importations to have been $148,392,127, mostly of merchandise, and our domestic exports $115,212,079. This shows an increase in imports, compared with the same period of 1905, of $30,000,000, and of exports only $4,000,000. The country would appear to be acting very much like its Government, and taking no thought of the morrow or the bills it may bring. Lower the tariff still more, and the importations will increase and less be manufactured in Canada, and as a consequence less employment for the artisan and laborer. Then stagnation. It's coming.

The Quebec Chronicle says: "One of the standard arguments against railways like the I. C. R., owned and operated by the Government, is that as a rule they do not pay — that they are usually run at a loss. Of course, this is not always true: nor is it true in the case of the I.C.R. under its present management." Humbug. Why deceive the people? Last year the Intercolonial Railway earned less than one-tenth of one per cent. on the capital invested in the railway. A similar showing on the part of any other railway in Canada would have put it into bankruptcy.

Some people and some institutions profit by men becoming very rich. The Chicago Tribune estimates a total of $106,388,063 given in bequests in 1906. This total does not include contributions to charity in the general sense, church collections or minor subscriptions, but only such donations and bequests as have been published in the daily papers and do not touch contributions under $1,000.

As compared with former years, the record stands thus: 1901, $122,888,732; 1902, $77,397,167; 1903, $76,634,978; 1904, $46,296,980, and 1905, $104,586,122. The donations for 1906 amounted to $61,179,093, the bequests to $45,208,970. The total was distributed as follows: To educational institutions, $32,492,636; to charities, $49,397,615; to religious organizations, $5,413,475; to museums, art galleries, and public improvements, $16,819,700, and to libraries, $1,704,617.

He has provided buildings for seventeen libraries, at a cost of $273,000, as compared with last year, and has given $1,167,500 to forty-four small colleges, as compared with $2,755,700 to 114 colleges last year. His gifts of organs to churches, as reported, are $10,925, as compared with $11,825 in 1905.

Mrs. Russell Sage, widow of her skinflint husband, is appearing on the stage as a philanthropist. Her gifts thus far amount to $52,200 for schools, $16,000 to churches, and $1,000 to charity, but it is estimated that she will make some large donations in 1907.

Perkins' Denials.

New York, Jan. 7.—"I am not guilty of the offences charged against me by the indictments. I did not make the entries in the books of the New York Life Insurance Co. specified in the indictments, nor did I, directly or indirectly, counsel, command, induce or procure any other person to make such entries."

George W. Perkins, formerly vice-president of the New York Life Co., made this sworn reply Saturday to the charges that he had caused false entries to be made in the company's books to conceal the real nature of some of its stock transactions.

PEOPLE OF THE STAGE.

Theatrical Life Has Few Joys and Much Bitterness.

Booth, to whom Henry E. Abbey would cheerfully have paid $1,000 a night for 150 consecutive nights, was one of the most unhappy men on the face of God's earth. He had buried two wives, been through the mortification of bankruptcy and so far as worldly wealth is concerned, so far as the comforts of a settled home go, had yet to make the one and secure the other. This being the case, what do you suppose is the fate of minor people? The fact is that they work hard, are underpaid, never play the parts they prefer, pay much, by far the greater portion of their salaries, for stage costumes, invariably have a gang of hangers on who eat the bread they earn, are out of engagements most of the time and ninety times out of a hundred die so poor that they are buried at the expense of their fellows. In the first place, it is extremely difficult for them to obtain a position, and, having a position, how few its advantages. They have to rehearse at inconvenient times; they go out in all kinds of weather regardless of their health or comforts or home desires; they dress in outlandish places, either wet, damp and chilly or overheated. They are at the capricious mercy of speculative managers, and, having found by experience that there is very little sympathy for them, either before or behind the footlights, they wrap themselves in a garment of mental indifference to appearances, which is utterly misunderstood by a cynical and suspicious world.

I know of a girl who was called to a Sunday night rehearsal. Her father was very ill, but the rental of their rooms, the fees for the doctor and money for the drugs depended upon her attending to her business. It was imperative that she should be in the theater at 7:30 o'clock. Having arranged the room as women only can, having placed upon the table by the bedside of her father his medicine, she kissed him goodby and, with a loving touch, promised to be back as early as possible. You know what Sunday night rehearsals mean. They mean 1, 2, 3, 4 o'clock the next day. That is what this one meant. The girl hastened home. The candle light had gone, the cold gray of the early morning was in the room, the father was dead upon the bed.

ODD FOUNDATION.

A Town Built on an Immense Bank of Oyster Shells.

The secondary foundation of Crisfield, Md., is the bottom of the Chesapeake bay, and between the bottom of Crisfield and the bottom of the bay are oyster shells to the number of millions, probably hundreds of millions. On this great stratum of oyster shells stand houses, wharfs and business places. A railroad runs along on it, bridges cross its dividing places, men walk and talk and do business, steamboats and sailboats—yes, hundreds of sailboats—have their landings alongside it; merry boating parties put off from the shore by moonlight and fish and crab and return in the early morn—all to this great bank of oyster shells sunk in the blue water.

Crisfield lives by oysters and crabs—not by eating them, for Crisfielders rarely eat either, but by catching them, boiling them, packing them, shipping them, selling them. He who would know the crab can best learn it by visiting this wholly and solely crab town on the Chesapeake. Men in boats quickly fill barrels with crabs and bring them ashore to the "factories." Here they are counted, sorted, steamed, packed in barrels and shipped until one wonders who can possibly eat all these mountains and myriads of crabs. There are many people in this country. A crab apiece for them all once a year in the season "would mean some crabs." At least so one of the crab dealers put it.—Philadelphia Record.

MUSKRAT BUILDERS.

The House in the Meadow and How It Is Constructed.

I have always been told that muskrat houses mean a severe winter. Instead of a sign of cold weather, the muskrat house means simply that one or more muskrats have chosen to live in the low meadow or at the shallow head of the pond, where there is no chance to burrow underground and have a bedroom that cannot be flooded by the high tides of winter.

These same muskrats, along the steep banks of a river, would tunnel into the earth and there dig a bedroom out of reach of the highest flood. They do not always succeeed, however, as they are often washed out of their winter beds by spring freshets.

The house in the meadow is usually built over a tall, stout tussock, whose grassy top forms the bed. This is domed over, making a large room big enough for one or for half a dozen, according to the number of muskrats sharing the work. At least two openings or dives lead from the bed into open water at the foot of the tussock. And this water never freezes. When ice forms outside, the warmth of the muskrats' bodies is sufficient to keep the doors free, through which the dwellers shoot at instant alarm, for these passages lead into winding burrows and waterways that run far out through the rich, rooty meadow.—Country Life In America.

Parliament.

The name "parliament" is derived from the French word "parler," to speak. The word was originally written "parlement," as in French, and, although the spelling has gradually changed, the pronunciation remains the same. The earliest mention of the word "parliament" in the English statutes is in the preamble to the statute of Westminster in 1272. For the origin of the institution itself we must go back to Anglo-Saxon times, when it flourished as the witenagemot. In the reign of Henry III. parliament was formally separated into the two houses of lords and commons, and the deliberations were conducted in separate chambers.

Hindoo Moon Lore.

According to the Hindoos, a lunar eclipse is the contact between the moon and another planet called Rahoo, but the masses believe that, owing to the will of God, Rahoo, or the serpent-like planet, catches hold of the moon by its hideous mouth and releases it after a short time. At first contact the Hindoos bathe in the sea and anxiously await the release. After the contact they take another bath. During the interval they are not allowed even to drink a cup of water, as their belief is that all things in the world get polluted during the contact.—Singapore Times.

Bells and the Koran.

It is said in the Koran that beautiful bells are hung upon the trees of paradise in such a way as to be stirred by wind from the golden throne of God whenever the blessed ones in his presence wish for music. It is to this that the author of "Lalla Rookh" refers in the lines:

Bells as musical
As those that on the golden shafted trees
Of Eden, shook by the eternal breeze.

Matches.

"Who are those young people in that box?" asked the man in the parquet.

"There's Elsie Blugore and her fiance, and Mazie Rich and hers, and Belle Browne and hers. They're all to be married next month."

"Indeed! Quite a box of matches, eh?"—Philadelphia Press.

A Vegetable Roast.

Boy — Ma, I thought you said the Specks were vegetarians. Ma—So I did; they are. Boy—Well, I heard Mr. Specks tell pop that when he got home late the other night Mrs. Specks had a roast waiting for him.

Not In His Line.

Lawyer—You should learn shorthand and typewriting, Billy. The Office Boy—Aw g'wan! I never cared fer flowers an' candy!—Puck.

Head Office - Waterloo, Ont

Many a man means his desires when he talks of his duty.

Never call a convention of your friends to find out what you think yourself.

The Manager Of the B. & A.

By VAUGHAN KESTER

Copyright, 1901, by Harper & Brothers

she was perfectly willing to share her remorse with him since he was so ready to assume a part of it. She was as conventional as extreme respectability could make her, but she had never liked Oakley half so well. She admired his courage. He didn't whine. His very stupidity was in its way admirable, but it was certainly too bad he could not see just how impossible he was under the circumstances.

Dan raised his eyes to hers. "Miss Emory, the only time I remember to have seen my father until he came here a few weeks ago was through the grating of his cell door. My mother took me there as a little boy. When she died I came west, where no one knew me. I had already learned that, because of him, I was somehow judged and condemned too. It has always been hanging over me. I have always feared exposure. I suppose I can hush it up after awhile, but there will always be some one to tell it to whoever will listen. It is no longer a secret."

"Was it fair to your friends, Mr. Oakley, that it was a secret?"

"I can't see what business it was of theirs. It is nothing I have done, and, anyhow, I have never had any friends until now I cared especially about."

"Oh!" and Miss Emory lowered her eyes. So long as he was merely determined and stupid he was safe, but should he become sentimental it might be embarrassing for them both.

"You have seen my father. Do you think from what you can judge from appearances that he would kill a man in cold blood? It was only after years of insult that it came to that, and then the other man was the aggressor. What my father did he did in self defense, but I am pretty sure you were not told this."

He was swayed by a sense of duty toward his father and a desire to vindicate him—he was so passive and enduring. The intimacy of their relation had begotten warmth and sympathy. They had been drawn nearer and nearer each other. The clannishness of his blood and race asserted itself. It was a point of honor with him to stand up for his friends and to stand up for his father most of all. Could he, he would have ground his heel into Ryder's face for his part in circulating the garbled version of the old convict's history. Some one should suffer as he had been made to suffer.

"Of course Mr. Ryder did not know what you have told me," Constance said hastily. She could not have told why, but she had the uneasy feeling that Griff required a champion, that he was responsible.

"Then you did hear it from Mr. Ryder?"

She did not answer, and Oakley, taking her silence for assent, continued: "I don't suppose it was told you either that he was pardoned because of an act of conspicuous heroism, that at the risk of his own life he saved the lives of several nurses and patients in the hospital ward of the prison where he was confined." He looked inquiringly at Constance, but she was still silent. "Miss Emory, my father came to me to all intents an absolute stranger. Why, I even feared him, for I didn't know the kind of man he was, but I have come to have a great affection and regard for him. I respect him, too, most thoroughly. There is not an hour of the day when the remembrance of his crime is not with him. Don't you think it cowardly that it should have been ventilated simply to hurt me, when it must inevitably hurt him so much more? He has quit work in the shops, and he is determined to leave Antioch. I may find him gone when I return to the hotel."

"And you blame Mr. Ryder for this?"

"I do. It's part of the debt we'll settle some day."

"Then you are unjust. It was Mr. Kenyon. His cousin is warden of the prison. He saw your father there and remembered him."

"And told Mr. Ryder," with a contemptuous twist of the lips.

"There were others present at the time. They were not alone."

"But Mr. Ryder furnished the men with the facts."

"How do you know?" And once more her tone was one of defiance and defense.

"I have been told so, and I have every reason to believe I was correctly informed. Why don't you admit that it was a cowardly piece of business to strike at me over my father's shoulder?" demanded Oakley, with palpable exasperation. The narrowness of her nature and her evasions galled him. Why didn't she show a little generous feeling? He expected she would be angry at his words and manner. On the contrary, she replied:

"I am not defending Mr. Ryder, as you seem to think, but I do not believe in condemning any one as you would condemn him—unheard."

She was unduly conscious perhaps that sound morality was on her side in this.

"Let us leave him out of it. After all, it is no odds who told. The harm is done."

"No, I shall ask Griff."

Dan smiled doubtfully.

"That will settle it if you believe what he tells you."

"His denial will be quite sufficient for me, Mr. Oakley," with chilly politeness.

There was a long pause, during which Dan looked at the carpet and Miss Emory at nothing in particular. He realized how completely he had separated himself from the rest of the world in her eyes. The hopelessness of his love goaded him on. He turned to her with sudden gentleness and said penitently:

"Won't you forgive me?"

"I have nothing to forgive, Mr. Oakley," with lofty self denial, and again Dan smiled doubtfully. Her saying so did not mean all it should have meant to him.

He swept his hand across his face with a troubled gesture. "I don't know what to do," he observed ruefully. "The turf seems knocked from under my feet."

"It must have been a dreadful ordeal to pass through alone," she said. "We are so distressed for your sake." And she seemed so keenly sympathetic that Dan's heart gave a great bound in his breast. He put aside his mounting bitterness against her.

"I don't know why I came to see you today. I just wanted to, and so I came. I don't want to force a friendship."

Miss Emory murmured that no excuse was necessary.

"I am not too sure of that. I must appear bent on exhibiting myself and my woes, but I can't go into retirement, and I can't let people see I'm hurt."

His face took on a strong resolve. He couldn't go without telling her he loved her. His courage was suddenly riotous.

"Once, not long ago, I dared to believe I might level the differences between us. I recognized what they were, but now it is hopeless. There are some things a man can't overcome, no matter how hard he tries, and I suppose being the son of a murderer is one of these." He paused and, raising his eyes from the carpet, glanced at her, but her face was averted. He went on, desperately: "It's quite hopeless, but I have dared to hope, and I wanted you to know. I hate to leave things unfinished."

There was a long silence, then Miss Emory said softly:

"I am so sorry."

"Which means you've never cared for me," dryly.

But she did not answer him. She was wondering how she would have felt had the confession come forty-eight hours earlier.

"I suppose I've been quite weak and foolish," said Dan.

She looked into his face with a slow smile.

"Why do you say that? Is it weak and foolish to care for some one?"

"Wasn't it?" with suddenly kindled hope, for he found it hard to give her up.

Miss Emory drew herself together with a sigh.

"I never thought of this," she said, which was hardly true; she had thought of it many times.

"No," admitted Dan, innocently enough, for her lightest word had become gospel to him, such was his love and reverence. "You couldn't know." Poor Oakley, his telling of it was the smallest part of the knowledge. "I think I see now, perfectly, how great a difference this affair of my father's must make. It sort of cuts me off from everything."

"It is very tragic. I wish you hadn't told me just now." Her lips trembled pathetically, and there were tears in her eyes.

"I've wanted to tell you for a long time."

"I didn't know."

"You have heard the story from Mr. Ryder."

"Of course you couldn't know," he repeated. Then he plunged ahead recklessly, for he found there was a curious satisfaction in telling her of his love, hopeless as it was.

"It has been most serious and sacred to me. I shall never forget you—never. It has helped me in so many ways just to know you. It has changed so many of my ideals. I can't be grateful enough."

Miss Emory approved his attitude. It was as it should be. She was sorry for him. She admired his dignity and repression. It made him seem so strong and purposeful.

"You will find your happiness some day, Mr. Oakley. You will find some one more worthy than I." She knew he would be insensible to the triteness of her remark.

"No," generously, "that couldn't be. I'll not find any one. I'll not look."

"Oh, but you will!"

Already, with the selfishness of her sex and a selfishness which was greater than that of her sex, she was regretting that she had allowed him to step so easily into the position of a rejected lover.

"I don't want you to think it is going to ruin my life," he said quietly, "or anything of that sort."

An appeal to her pity seemed weak and contemptible.

"I have striven to win what I can't have, what is not for me, and I am satisfied to have made the effort."

Miss Emory bit her lip. He was going to put her out of his life entirely. It was ended, and he would do his best to forget her with what speed he might, for he loved her and was too generous to wish her to suffer. This generosity, needless to say, was too altruistic for Constance to fully appreciate its beauties. Indeed, she did not regard it as generosity at all. She resented it. She realized that probably she would not see him again—at least, the meeting would not be of his making or choosing. There was to be no sentimental aftermath. He was preparing to go, like the sensible fellow he was, for good and all, and she rebelled against the decree. It seemed brutal and harsh. She was angry, hurt and offended. Perhaps her conscience was troubling her too. She knew she was mean and petty.

"I don't think it could have been very serious to you, Mr. Oakley," she murmured, gazing abstractedly from the window.

"I don't know why you think that. I can't say any more than I have said. It includes all." She wanted to tell him he gave up too easily.

"At any rate, we are friends," he added.

"Are you going?" she cried, with a ring of real longing and regret in her voice, lifted out of herself for the moment at the thought of losing him.

Dan nodded, and a look of pain came into his face.

"Yes, I am going."

"But you are not going to leave Antioch?"

"Oh, no!"

And Miss Emory felt a sense of relief. She rose from her chair. "Then I shall see you again?"

"Probably," smiling. "We couldn't well avoid seeing each other in a place the size of this."

He held out his hand frankly.

"And I shan't see you here any more?" she asked softly.

"I guess not," a little roughly. The bitterness of his loss stung him. He felt something was wrong somewhere. He wondered, too, if she had been quite fair to him, if her ability to guard herself was entirely commendable after all. He knew in the end his only memory of her would be that she was beautiful. He would carry this memory and a haunting sense of incompleteness with him wherever he went.

She placed her hand in his and looked up into his face with troubled, serious eyes.

"Goodby." It was almost a whisper. Dan crossed the room to the door and flung it open. For an instant he wavered on the threshold, but a moment later was striding down the street, with his hat jammed needlessly low over his ears and his hands thrust deep in his trousers pockets.

At the window Constance, with a white, scared face, was watching him from between the parted curtains. She hoped he would look back, but he never once turned his head.

CHAPTER XIV.

On Thursday the Herald published its report of the trouble at the shops. Oakley had looked forward to the paper's appearance with considerable eagerness. He hoped to glean from it some idea of the tactics the men would adopt, and in this he was not disappointed. Ryder served up his sensation, which was still a sensation, in spite of the fact that it was common property and two days old before it was accorded the dignity of type and ink, in his most impressive style:

> The situation at the car shops has assumed a serious phase, and a strike is imminent. Matters came to a focus day before yesterday and may now be said to have reached an acute stage. It is expected that the carpenters, of whom quite a number are employed on repair work, will be the first to go out unless certain demands which they are to make today are promptly acceded to by General Cornish's local representative.
> Both sides maintain the strictest secrecy, but from reliable sources the Herald gathers that the men will insist upon Mr. Branyon being taken back by the company.
> Another grievance of the men, and one in which they should have the sympathy of the entire community, is their objection to working with the manager's father, who came here recently from the east and has since been employed in the shops. It has been learned that he is an ex-convict, who was sentenced for a long term of imprisonment in June, 1875, for the murder of Thomas Sharp at Burton, Mass.
> He was only recently set at liberty, and the men are naturally incensed and indignant at having to work with him. Still another grievance is the new schedule of wages.
> A committee representing every department in the shops and possessing the fullest authority met last night at the Odd Fellows' hall on South Main street, but their deliberations were secret. A well authenticated rumor has it, however, that the most complete harmony prevailed and that the employees are pledged to drastic measures unless they get fair treatment from the company.

Ryder tacked a moral to this, and the moral was that labor required a champion to protect it from the soulless greed and grinding tyranny of the great corporations which had sprung into existence under the fostering wing of corrupt legislation. Of course "the picturesque statesman from old Hanover" was the Hercules who was prepared to right these wrongs of honest industry and to curb the power of Cornish, whose vampire lusts fattened on the sweat of the toiler, and especially the toiler at Antioch.

A copy of the paper was evidently sent the "picturesque statesman," who had just commenced his canvass, for in its very next issue the Herald was able to print a telegram in which he "heartily indorsed the sentiments embodied in the Herald's ringing editorial on the situation at Antioch" and declared himself a unit with his fellow citizens of whatever party in their heroic struggle for a fair day's wage for a fair day's work. He also expressed himself as honored by their confidence, as, indeed, he might well have been.

Dan digested the Herald's report along with his breakfast. Half an hour later, when he reached the office, he found McClintock waiting for him.

"The men want to see you, Mr. Oakley. They were going to send their committee in here, but I told 'em you'd come out to them."

"All right. It's just as well you did." And Oakley followed him from the office.

The men were clustered about the great open door of the works in their shirt sleeves. From behind them in the silence and the shadow came the pleasant, droning sound of machinery, like the humming of a million bees. There was something dogged and reckless in the very way they stood around with folded arms or slouched nervously to and fro.

Dan singled out Bentick and Joe Stokes and three or four others as the committee and made straight toward them.

"Well, men, what do you want?" he asked briskly.

"We represent every department in the shops, sir," said Bentick civilly, "and we consider Branyon's discharge as unjust. We want him taken back."

"And suppose I won't take him back, what are you going to do about it, eh?" asked Dan good naturedly, and, not waiting for a reply, with old time deftness he swung himself up into an empty flat car which stood close at hand and faced his assembled workmen.

"I don't wish to make him a scapegoat for the rest of you."

"You know why Branyon was dismissed. It was a business none of you have much reason to be proud of, but I am willing to let him come back on condition he first offers an apology to McClintock and to me. Unless he does he can never set his foot inside these doors again while I remain here. I agree to this because I don't wish to make him a scapegoat for the rest of you, and I don't wish those dependent on him to suffer."

He avoided looking in McClintock's direction. He felt rather than saw that the latter was shaking his head in strong disapproval of his course. The committee and the men exchanged grins. The boss was weakening. They had scored twice—first against Roger Oakley and now for Branyon.

"I guess Branyon would as lief be excused from making an apology if it's all the same to Milt," said Bentick less civilly than before, and there was a ripple of smothered laughter from the crowd.

Dan set his lips and said sternly, but quietly, "That's for him to decide."

"Well, we'll tell him what you say, and if he's ready to eat humble pie there won't be no kick coming from us," remarked Bentick impartially.

"Is this all?" asked Oakley.

"No; we can't see the cut." And a murmur of approval came from the men.

Dan looked out over the crowd. Why couldn't they see that the final victory was in his hands? "Be guided by me," he said earnestly, "and take my word for it, the cut is necessary. I'll meet you halfway in the Branyon matter. Let it go at that."

"We want our old wages," insisted Bentick doggedly.

"It is out of the question. The shops are running behind. They are not earning any money, they never have, and it's as much to your interests as mine or General Cornish's to do your full part in making them profitable.

"Wages can't go back until the business in the shops warrants it. If you will continue to work under the present arrangement, good and well. If not, I see no way to meet your demands. You will have to strike. That, however, is an alternative I trust you will carefully weigh before you commit yourselves. Once the shops are closed it will not be policy to open them until fall, perhaps not until the first of the year. But if you can afford to lie idle all summer it's your own affair. That's exactly what it means if you strike."

He jumped down from the car and would have left them then and there, but Bentick stepped in front of him.

"Can't we talk it over, Mr. Oakley?"

"There is nothing to talk over, Bentick. Settle it among yourselves." And he marched off up the tracks, with McClintock following in his wake and commending the stand he had taken.

The first emotion of the men was one of profound and depressing surprise at the abruptness with which Oakley had terminated the interview, and his evident willingness to close the shops, a move they had not counted on. It dashed their courage.

"We'll call his bluff!" cried Bentick, and the men gave a faint cheer. They were not so sure it was a bluff after all. It looked real enough.

There were those who thought with a guilty pang of wives and children at home and no pay day, the fortnightly haven of rest toward which they lived. And there were the customarily reckless souls, who thirsted for excitement at any price and who were willing to see the trouble to a finish. These ruled, as they usually do. Not a man returned to work. Instead they hung about the yards and canvassed the situation. Finally the theory was advanced that if the shops were closed it would serve to bring down Cornish's wrath on Oakley and probably result in his immediate dismissal. This theory found instant favor and straightway became a conviction with the majority.

At length all agreed to strike, and the whistle in the shops was set shrieking its dismal protest. The men swarmed into the building, where each got together his kit of tools. They were quite jolly now and laughed and jested a good deal. Presently they were streaming off uptown, with their coats over their arms, and the strike was on.

An unusual stillness fell on the yards and in the shops. The belts as they swept on and on in endless revolutions cut this stillness with a sharp, incisive hiss. The machinery seemed to hammer at it, as if to beat out some lasting echo. Then gradually the volume of sound lessened. It mumbled to a dotage of decreasing force, and then everything stopped with a sudden jar. The shops had shut down.

McClintock came from the office and entered the works, pulling the big doors to after him. He wanted to see that all was made snug. He cursed loudly as he strode through the deserted building. It was the first time since he had been with the road that the shops had been closed, and it affected him strangely.

The place held a dreadful, ghostly inertness. The belts and shafting, with its innumerable cogs and connections, reached out like the heavy knuckled tentacles of some great lifeless monster. The sunlight stole through the broken, cobwebbed windows to fall on heaps of rusty iron and heaps of dirty shavings.

In the engine room he discovered Smith Roberts and his assistant, Joe Webber, banking the fires, preparatory to leaving. They were the only men about the place. Roberts closed a furnace door with a bang, threw down his shovel and drew a grimy arm across his forehead.

"When do you suppose I'll get a chance to build steam again, Milt?"

"Oakley says we won't start up before the first of September."

CHAPTER XV.

The first weeks of the strike slipped by without excitement. Harvest time came and went. A rainless August browned the earth and seared the woods with its heat, but nothing happened to vary the dull monotony. The shops, a sepulcher of sound, stood silent and empty. General Cornish, in the role of the avenger, did not appear on the scene, to Oakley's discomfiture and to the joy of the men. A sullen sadness rested on the town. The women began to develop shrewish tempers and a trying conversational habit, while their husbands squandered their rapidly dwindling means in the saloons. There was large talk and a variety of threats, but no lawlessness.

At intervals a rumor was given currency that Oakley was on the verge of starting up with imported labor, and the men, dividing the watches, met each train, but only familiar types, such as the casual commercial traveler with his grips, the farmer from up or down the line, with his inevitable paper parcels, and the stray wayfarer were seen to step from the Huckleberry's battered coaches. Finally it dawned upon the men that Dan was bent on starving them into submission.

Ryder had displayed what for him was a most unusual activity. Almost every day he held conferences with the leaders of the strike, and his personal influence went far toward keeping the men in line. Indeed, his part in the whole affair was much more important than was generally recognized

The political campaign had started, and Kenyon was booked to speak in Antioch. It was understood in advance that he would declare for the strikers, and his coming caused a welcome flutter of excitement.

The statesman arrived on No. 7, and the reception committee met him at the station in two carriages. It included Cap Roberts, the Hon. Jeb Barrows, Ryder, Joe Stokes and Bentick. The two last were an inspiration of the editor's and proved a popular success.

The brass band hired for the occasion discoursed patriotic airs, as Kenyon in a long linen duster and a limp, wilted collar presented himself at the door of the smoker. The great man was all blandness and suavity—an oily suavity that oozed and trickled from every pore.

The crowd on the platform gave a faint, unenthusiastic cheer as it caught sight of him. It had been more interested in staring at Bentick and Stokes. They looked so excessively uncomfortable.

Mr. Kenyon climbed down the steps and shook hands with Mr. Ryder. Then, bowing and smiling to the right and left, he crossed the platform, leaning on the editor's arm. At the carriages there were more greetings. Stokes and Bentick were formally presented, and the congressman mounted to a place beside them, whereat the crowd cheered again, and Stokes and Bentick looked, if possible, more miserable than before. They had a sneaking idea that a show was being made of them. Ryder took his place in the second carriage, with Cap Roberts and the Hon. Jeb Barrows, and the procession moved off uptown to the hotel, preceded by the band playing a lively two step out of tune and followed by a troop of bare legged urchins.

After supper the statesman was serenaded by the band, and a little later the members of the Young Men's Kenyon club, attired in cotton flannel uniforms, marched across from the Herald office to escort him to the rink, where he was to speak. He appeared radiant in a Prince Albert and a shiny tile and a boutonniere, this time leaning on the arm of Mr. Stokes, to the huge disgust of that worthy mechanic, who did not know that a statesman had to lean on somebody's arm. It is hoary tradition, and yet it had a certain significance, too, if it were meant to indicate that Kenyon couldn't keep straight unless he was propped.

A wave of fitful enthusiasm swept the assembled crowd, and Mr. Stokes' youngest son, Samuel, aged six, burst into tears, no one knew why, and was led out of the press by an elder brother, who alternately slapped him and wiped his nose on his cap.

Mr. Kenyon, smiling his unwearied, mirthless smile, seated himself in his carriage. Mr. Ryder, slightly bored and wholly cynical, followed his example. Mr. Stokes and Mr. Bentick, perspiring and abject and looking for all the world like two criminals, dropped dejectedly into the places assigned them. Only Cap Roberts and the Hon. Jeb Barrows seemed entirely at ease. They were campaign fixtures. The band emitted a harmony destroying crash, while Mr. Jimmy Smith, the drum major, performed sundry bewildering passes with his gilt staff. The Young Men's Kenyon club fell over its own feet into line, and the procession started for the rink. It was a truly inspiring moment.

Since an early hour of the evening the people had been gathering at the rink. It was also the opera house, where during the winter months an occasional repertory company appeared in "East Lynne," "The New Magdalen" or Tom Robertson's "Caste."

The place was two-thirds full at a quarter to 8, when a fleet courier arrived with the gratifying news that the procession was just leaving the square and that Kenyon was riding with his hat off and in familiar discourse with Stokes and Bentick.

Presently out of the distance drifted the first strains of the band. A little later Cap Roberts and the Hon. Jeb Barrows appeared on the makeshift stage from the wings. There was an applausive murmur, for the Hon. Jeb was a popular character. It was said of him that he always carried a map of the United States in tobacco juice on his shirt front. He was bottle nosed and red faced. No man could truthfully say he had ever seen him drunk, nor had any one ever seen him sober. He shunned extremes. Next the band filed into the balcony and was laboriously sweating its way through the national anthem when Kenyon and Ryder appeared, followed by the wretched Stokes and Bentick. A burst of applause shook the house. When it subsided the editor stepped to the front of the stage. With words that halted, for the experience was a new one, he introduced the guest of the evening.

It was generally agreed afterward that it had been a great privilege to hear Kenyon. No one knew exactly what it was all about, but that was a minor consideration. The congressman was well on toward the end of his speech and had reached the local situation, which he was handling in what the Herald subsequently described as "a masterly fashion, cool, logical and convincing," when Oakley wandered in and, unobserved, took a seat near the door. He glanced about him glumly. There had been a time when these people had been, in their way, his friends. Now those nearest him even avoided looking in his direction. At last he became conscious that some one far down near the stage and at the other side of the building was nodding and smiling at him. It was Dr. Emory. Mrs. Emory and Constance were with him. Dan caught the fine outline of the latter's profile. She was smiling an amused smile. It was her first political meeting, and she was finding it quite as funny as Ryder had said it would be.

Dan listened idly, hearing only a word now and then. At length a sentence roused him. The speaker was advising the men to stand for their rights. He rose hastily and turned to leave. He had heard enough, but some one cried out, "Here's Oakley!" and instantly every one in the place was staring at him.

Kenyon took a step nearer the footlights. Either he misunderstood or else he wished to provoke an argument, for he said, with slippery civility: "I shall be pleased to listen to Mr. Oakley's side of the question. This is a free country, and I don't deny him or any man the right to express his views. The fact that I am unalterably opposed to the power he represents is no bar to the expression here of his opinion."

Oakley's face was crimson. He paused irresolutely. He saw the jeer on Ryder's lips, and the desire possessed him to tell these people what fools they were to listen to the cheap, lungy patriotism of the demagogue on the stage.

He rested a hand on the back of the chair in front of him and leaned forward with an arm extended at the speaker, but his eyes were fixed on Miss Emory's face. She was smiling at him encouragingly, he thought, bidding him to speak.

"This is doubtless your opportunity," he said, "but I would like to ask what earthly interest you have in Antioch beyond the votes it may give you?"

Kenyon smiled blandly and turned for one fleeting instant to wink at Ryder. "And my reply is this: What about the twenty million dollar specimen of American manhood who is dodging around London on the money he's made here in this state, yes, and in this town? He's gone to England to break his way into London society, and, incidentally, to marry his daughter to a title."

A roar of laughter greeted this sally.

"That may be," retorted Oakley hotly, "but Antioch has been getting its share of his money too. Don't forget that. There's not a storekeeper in this audience whose bank account will not show in hard American dollars what General Cornish does for Antioch when Antioch is willing to let him do for it. But, granted that what you have said is true, who can best afford to meet the present situation, General Cornish or these men? On whom does the hardship fall heavier, on them or on him?"

"That was not the spirit which prevailed at Bunker Hill and Lexington! No, thank God; our fathers did not stop to count the cost, and we have our battles today just as vital to the cause of humanity, and I for one would rather see the strong arm of labor wither in its socket than submit to wrong or injustice!"

Oakley choked down his disgust and moved toward the door. There were applause and one or two cat calls. Not heeding them, he made his way from the building. He had reached the street when a detaining hand was placed upon his arm. He turned savagely, but it proved to be only Turner Joyce, who stepped to his side, with a cheerful "Good evening, Mr. Oakley. They seem to be having a very gay time in there, don't they?"

"Have you been in?" demanded Oakley grimly.

"I? Oh, no! I have just been taking a picture home."

"Well," said Oakley, "I have just been making a fool of myself. I hope that is something you are never guilty of, Mr. Joyce." Joyce laughed and tucked his hand through his companion's arm.

"Doesn't every one do that occasionally?" he asked.

Dan shook off his bitterness. Recently he had been seeing a great deal of the little artist and his wife, who were about the only friends he or his father had left in Antioch. They walked on in silence. Joyce was too tactful to ask any questions concerning his friend's affairs, so he ventured an impersonal criticism on Kenyon, with the modest diffidence of a man who knows he is going counter to public sentiment.

"Neither Ruth nor I had any curiosity to hear him speak tonight. I heard him when he was here last. It may be my bringing up, but I do like things that are not altogether rotten, and I'm afraid I count him as sort of decayed." Then he added, "I suppose everybody was at the rink tonight?"

"The place was packed."

"It promises to be a lively campaign, I believe, but I take very little interest in politics. My own concerns occupy most of my time. Won't you come in, Mr. Oakley?" for they had reached his gate.

On the little side porch which opened off the kitchen they found Ruth. She rose with a pleased air of animation when she saw who was with her husband. Oakley had lived up to his reputation as a patron of the arts. He had not forgotten, in spite of his anxieties, a promise made Joyce months before, and at that very moment safely bestowed in Mrs. Joyce's possession were two formidable looking strips of heavy pink paper, which guaranteed the passage of the holder to New York and return.

"I hope this confounded strike is not going to interfere with you, Mr. Joyce," said Oakley as he seated himself. He had discovered that they liked to talk about their own plans and hopes, and the trip east was the chief of these. Already he had considered it with them from every conceivable point of view.

"It is aggravating, for, of course, if people haven't money they can't very well afford to have pictures painted. But Ruth is managing splendidly. I really don't think it will make any special difference."

"I am determined Turner shall not miss this opportunity. I think if it wasn't for me, Mr. Oakley, he'd give up most everything he wants to do or has set his heart on."

"He's lucky to have you, then. Most men need looking after."

"I'm sure I do," observed the little artist, with commendable meekness.

To be continued.

UNRECORDED ACTIONS

MAKING MEN'S CHARACTER ARE THE GREAT MAJORITY.

BIOGRAPHY OF THE SAVIOUR

World Would Not Contain the Books Recording It If the Many Things Which Jesus Did Should Be Written Every One—Plea for Spiritual Consistency In Daily Walk and Conversation.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1907, by Frederick Diver, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 6.—In this sermon the preacher, taking the unrecorded life of Christ as an illustration, shows that consistency demands that Christian principles should govern us in our private and domestic affairs as well as in public. The text is John xxi, 25, "The which if they should be written every one."

"Have you ever heard of our buried treasure?" a gentleman asked me some time ago. "No. What treasure?" "Well," said he, "I will come around this afternoon with my team and take you out for a drive, and then I will tell you the story."

That afternoon my friend drove up to where I was stopping in the country, and off we went. We drove through the vineyards of that region; then we climbed a small hill which overlooked the valley for miles around. There, upon the top, we found the ruins of the foundation of an old home. Then, as the horses rested, he told me that many years ago one of the old Spanish settlers owned this home. He built it there not only for its wonderful view, but also for protection. Like many of those old houses, his home was a fort as well as a domicile. This old settler lived there for many, many years. He grew enormously wealthy, and as there were no banks in those days, like Monte Cristo he gathered most of his gold into a chest and buried it. No one knew where that gold was hidden. The old man was without family, so he talked about his gold to no one. He was taken suddenly sick and died before he could tell this secret. When he felt himself going he gasped, "Gold hidden!" and he was gone.

"No sooner did his breath leave the body than the people began to hunt for his hidden gold. Lawyers, doctors, merchants, as well as common laborers, have been digging for it ever since. You can see how all the land around this foundation is filled with holes. Every tree, every rock, every landmark, as far as the eye can see in this valley, has also been dug about, in order to find this buried treasure. The gold seekers have been hunting everywhere for this gold of the old man. And I suppose men will continue to dig for this treasure in this region for centuries to come." Thus was the story told me as I sat in the wagon by the ruins of that old Mexican home upon the hilltop overlooking the Cucamonga valley.

But on my way back to the city that afternoon I soliloquized thus in the train: Are not most acts of a man hidden away from the eyes of the public at large as that treasure chest of the old California pioneer was secreted and hidden from prying eyes? Are not the recorded actions of a man's career only an infinitesimal part of his life? Can it not be said of us what Saint John wrote about Jesus in the last verse of his Gospel? "And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written."

The biographies on our library shelves are all of that kind. A long story is told, sometimes in three volumes, and we suppose it tells all about the man, but how much there must have been in that life that was never recorded! How much there is in our lives that we never reveal even to our most intimate friends! So it was, as John tells us, with Jesus. We wish we could know all he did and said, even if it had multiplied volumes, as John supposed. We can never know now, but we can imagine from what we do know something of the facts that were never revealed. Let us try to think this morning what those facts may have been.

I was struck, in the first place, with the fact that John's gospel opens with the fully developed physical, mental and spiritual Christ. 'Tis true the first verse of the first chapter begins with the words, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God," but almost immediately after St. John introduces to us John the Baptist and the Jordanic baptism. In other words, the biography of St. John opens with a fully developed Christ. What Christ did during the formative physical period between infancy and young manhood is entirely omitted. Of what he did during the springtime of his childhood, when life was in the blossom, as the little bud changes into the rounded form of fruit, there is not a word said. Of course we read in another gospel about Jesus in the temple with the doctors. But outside of that all the biographies are silent about Christ's childhood days. And yet, my friends, in all a man's life I do not believe there is a time when in his own realm or sphere a person has more influence for good than does the godly child within the four walls of a home.

Oh, the patience and the gentleness of a holy spirit filled little child! There is nothing like unto it this side of heaven. Christ said, "If you want to become the greatest in the kingdom of heaven, then you must become like one of these little children." And most of us know that there is no one who can walk closer with God than do some of our children. Some time ago it was my privilege to call upon one of my Sunday school boys. The lad was about ten years of age. There he lay in bed, bound up with bandages, suffering the most excruciating pain from rheumatism. Yet not one complaint came from his lips. As I left the sickroom the father said to me: "That boy is different from all the other children. He seems to live so close to God that at times I am afraid we cannot raise him. I often say to the older children: 'You must not become jealous of Hiram. Your mother and father love you just the same. But he is different from you. He lives closer to God than any of us.' And that boy is so different from the rest that from the time he was born we have never had to punish him or to say a harsh word to him." My brother, you know just what I mean. You know how children vary. Most of them seem to be made of the same stuff you are made of, but there is one child who is different from all the rest. She is so gentle, so kind, so helpful, so loving, so filled with the Christ life, that she seems to be the gospel leaven which leavens the whole home. Oh, yes, within their own sphere there is no influence greater than the influence of the Christian child. And yet, putting aside the monkish legends and traditions about the Saviour's infancy, of all he did and said during his childhood there is reliably recorded hardly a word.

How precious to us would have been a genuine record showing how Jesus acted when his foster father, Joseph, died. Joseph, the carpenter, stood in the same relationship to Jesus as Ludwig Guyer did to his stepson, Richard Wagner, or as David Swing's stepfather did to him. Joseph, the carpenter, was the divine Boy's breadwinner and human protector. When suddenly this strong carpenter was stricken down, we can see Mary, his wife, and her brood of little ones, with their stained faces, standing about the pale corpse. Now, what do suppose Jesus, the boy, did at that time? Do you suppose he turned to Mary and said: "Mother, I am willing to look after you, but not after the other boys and girls. We have not the same father, and therefore I am not responsible for their daily bread." No; I do not believe that is what Jesus, the young man, did. Neither do I believe he went up to that bier and began to lament, saying: "What am I to do? I wanted to study, to be a great rabbi like Hillel. Now I have no father to pay my way through school." No; I do not believe Jesus did that. It is an unwritten life. All this tragedy of the home is covered up.

From what we know of his manhood we must suppose he was very kind and tender to his mother. We can imagine him, as the eldest of her children, taking Joseph's place in the carpenter shop, of his toiling for the support of Mary and her young family. How that sunny nature would lighten the workshop, and in the evening, when he returned to the maternal abode, how it would lighten the humble cottage! Can you not imagine the little services he would render to the widowed mother and her brood? I wish we knew what he did, that our children might be cheered in their service by thinking that Jesus did just such tasks.

And then the neighbors. What must it have been to be a neighbor of Jesus? To have the sympathy of Jesus in their troubles and his ready help in times of accident and sorrow? As Jesus was always helping his neighbors as a young man, are not you and I to profit by his divine example? Shall we be like Christ, the young man in the home, standing by the bier of his foster father Joseph, and like Christ helping his friends living in the neighborhood who needed his help? Is our unwritten life to be like Christ's unwritten life?

Mr. Beecher thus bewails the loss of the unrevealed words and deeds of Christ's life: "When I see how much has been written of those who have lived, how the Greeks preserved every saying of Plato's, how Boswell followed Johnson, gathering up every leaf that fell from that ragged old oak and pasted it away, I almost regret that one of the disciples had not been a recording angel to preserve the odor and richness of every word of Christ. When John says, 'and there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written,' it affects me more profoundly than [illegible] the Alexandrian library or the perishing of the Grecian art in Athens or Byzantium. The creations of Phidias were cold stones overlaid by warm thought, but Christ described his own creation when he said, 'The words that I speak unto you, they are life.' The leaving out of these things from the New Testament, though divinely wise, seems to my yearning not so much the unaccomplishment of noble things as the destruction of great treasures which had already had oral life, but failed of incarnation in literature." But though these unrevealed deeds and sayings of Jesus Christ did not have their incarnation in literature were their lives purely evanescent? Like the dewdrops tumbling up on the finger of a leaf were they soon to pass away. Nay. The unwritten words and deeds of Jesus found their incarnation in the lives of the men and the women and the children by whom he was surrounded. These people to whom he spoke not only heard, but they also believed, and they lived his teachings.

Take that night which Jesus spent in Jericho, in the house of Zacchaeus, the publican. There is not a word written about his evening conversation. From the gospel of Luke we know that Jesus called Zacchaeus down from the sycamore tree and went to the home of the publican. But not one word is written about what happened when he was at that house. After the multitudes had gone to their homes and Jesus sat down to meat with Zacchaeus and his wife and his children, what do you suppose he did? Do you suppose Christ quickly in silence ate his supper and then turned and said, "Zacchaeus, I am tired and want to go to bed." Then do you suppose he took his lamp and went off and shut his bedroom door and went to sleep, or do you suppose that Jesus acted in that home like a true, warm hearted friend? At first, I think, the family were a little shy. Then the ice of bashful reserve gradually wore away. Then as soon as the supper was ended I think Jesus took a couple of the youngest children upon his knee and stroked their hair and told them some sweet stories. Yes, I think I can hear Jesus telling these children some simple parables like that of the sheep that was lost up in the mountains or a story like the prodigal son. You see the children's eyes grow bigger and bigger! They are so interested that the youngest little girl, who had been sucking her thumb for an hour, has not once wanted to squirm out of his lap. The two boys, leaning on his knee, have not once attempted to pull each other's hair. Then, as Christ talks on, I think he brings the spiritual lessons so near home that tears are rolling down the father's and mother's cheeks. Then the little family knelt for the good night prayer, and the family altar was started. Were all those sentences which he spoke only short lived sentences and ephemeral in their influence? If you think thus then you must say that all the prayers which the visiting pastor utters by the sickbed, all the quiet talks the Christian mother has with her boy after the rest of the family have gone to bed, all the words of advice the Sunday school teacher gives to her scholars are ephemeral words and short lived words. No. The unwritten words and deeds of Jesus live. They never died. They lived and they continue to live in the lives of the men and the women and the children to whom he spake. They found their reincarnation in the redeemed and the purified lives of the immortals whom Christ saved.

Turn to the gospel of John and read there the account of the conversation Jesus had with the woman of Samaria by Jacob's well. Christ was a-wearied. He sat down to rest by this famous well while his disciples went into Sychar to buy bread. This well is about two miles from Sychar, as I remember it aright. Now, while Christ was there a woman of Samaria, a social outcast, came to draw water. While she was there Jesus talked to her. In other words, that whole conversation as recorded in John did not occupy over six minutes. Yet the disciples must have been away from Jesus at least an hour. Do you not believe Jesus talked to that woman for more than five minutes? Do you believe that all the words he spoke to her and she spoke to him were wasted words? No, no! They were not. As they talked I believe she told Jesus the whole history of her life. I believe she told him how when a young girl she was tempted and morally fell. Then she repented and tried to rise again. Then her old friends turned their backs upon her. The doors of purity was slammed shut in her face. And as she talked I think I can see the great tears of sympathy roll down the Saviour's cheeks. Were the words of comfort he spoke to her wasted words? If they were, then all efforts which are being put forth in our Florence Crittenton and Jerry McAuley missions are wasted efforts. All the attempts to lift up the fallen are futile. No. The unwritten words and deeds of Jesus live. They live in the lives of the men whom he redeemed by grace. They live as the unwritten words and deeds with which we try to lift up our fallen brothers and sisters to Christ shall live through all eternity.

Turn to the first two verses of the fourth chapter of St. John. "When, therefore, the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John, though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples." Stop there. I want to ask you why Jesus himself did not baptize his new converts, but left it to his disciples so to do? "Jesus did not baptize his disciples," wrote a great commentator, "because if he had baptized some of them it might have made unhappy divisions among his followers. Those might have considered themselves more worthy or honored who had been baptized by him than those baptized by the disciples." Don't you see the force of this interpretation? Jesus is practically saying to his disciples: "We must do everything in our power to keep down the troubled waters of jealousy. We must do everything in our power so that we, each and all of us, shall work in harmony with each other. Peace, peace! Let us sacrifice everything in order that we should work for the glory of God in peace." Yet we find not one word of this conversation recorded in the Scriptures.

Are our unwritten words pleading for harmony in Christian work among Christ's followers? Are we doing all in our power to have our homes harmonious and our churches harmonious and our different sectarian organizations working hand in hand for the glory of God and not for self? Are we ready to sink ourselves for that peace and for the glory of Christ? During the darkest days of the attempt to amalgamate a lot of petty German principalities into one great German empire Prince Bismarck said to a friend: "Oh, that I could live to see the day when all these German peoples shall be united together in one great purpose to protect and care for each other! I must not think of what my enemies may say or do. To attain this end I must brave all dangers—exile, even the scaffold itself. What matter if they hang me, provided the rope with which I am hanged binds this new Germany firmly to the Prussian throne." Can you speak like that for your divine king? Shall your life be spent not only in bringing social outcasts to the cross, but in binding all Christians closer and closer together with the Christ's love? Peace, peace, peace!

While we dwell on these episodes in the life of Christ that the evangelists have left unrecorded, we feel sure that they were very kind and tender and pure. He could not have acted otherwise. That divine life must have been consistent throughout, and the parts that we do not know have been in harmony with those we do know. So it should be with us. Like Christ, we have an unwritten life, or, rather, an unrecorded life in the public sense. And, thank God, that life can become an infinite power for the saving of souls for Jesus Christ. Shall our unwritten words and deeds be truly consecrated to the divine Master? Shall we consecrate them to Jesus now? Oh, the unwritten lives of every mortal man—their infinite power for good or evil! Will you heed and grasp these opportunities to-day?

Hairbrushes.

The brush trade is full of deceptions. An experienced hand will by touch tell if a broom or brush be all hair or a mixture. But if ever in doubt pull out or cut off a suspicious hair and apply a match. However well doctored, the deception will be shown at once. Hairs will burn, rolling up ball-like, with the well known smell of burned hair, while a vegetable substitute will consume, leaving the charred portion like a burned match.

Hall Trees.

A woman was much astonished to receive a letter from another woman asking for a slip of her hall tree. "I understand," she wrote, "you've got a good variety of hall trees, and as we've just finished us a new house with a real nice hall we'll need a tree, and we'd be ever so much obliged if you'd send us a slip uv your'n. And please will you send along with the slip directions tellin' us whether to water it from the top er bottom?"

Conundrums.

Visitor (to artist's young wife)—Whatever were you two laughing over so just now? Wife—Oh, it was such fun! My husband painted, and I cooked, and then we both guessed what the things were meant for.

Lost Opportunities.

"What a pity it was that baseball was not known in the old Roman gladiatorial time."

"Why so?"

"Because they would have so enjoyed killing the umpire."

HE EXPLAINS.

MR. J. S. McKEOWN TELLS WHAT HE KNOWS.

A REPORTER INVESTIGATES THE MERITS OF VINOL.

A SUBJECT THAT IS AGITATING THE WHOLE COUNTRY.

There has reached us rumors of a new discovery. Something that will revolutionize the practice of medicine. A remedy that has given sufferers from wasting diseases hopes of renewed health and prolonged life.

Of enough importance have these stories appeared that a special interview with Mr. J. S. McKeown, our well known druggist, was thought advisable.

"Why," said Mr. McKeown, "that is no more a new discovery than was the moon when it was first viewed through a microscope. The discovery existed simply in the fact of finding out a means of getting at the truth we were after. Perhaps the method might be considered a discovery, but what we have found has been known for years, and it is nothing more nor less than the valuable medicinal properties that have always existed in the cod's liver, and for which cod liver oil has been prescribed by so many physicians. Cod liver oil is something that is very valuable in all sorts of wasting diseases, and in itself is extremely disagreeable. For those who have a tendency to sore throat, bronchitis, coughs, colds, for every one of an anaemic disposition, it has always been considered as simply invaluable; and yet it has more often been necessary to abandon its use than it has been possible to devise a way of administering it.

Two eminent French chemists started in and got interested in the matter, and after years of study they have succeeded in extracting from the liver of the cod just what is necessary, and have left behind that obnoxious, greasy, vile-tasting, fatty matter, the thought of which even has turned the stomachs of thousands. They found a way of getting the kernel out of the nut.

That is how the so much talked about Vinol is made. It is the concentrated essence of medicine found in the cod's liver that does the good. The grease is like the shell of the nut, absolutely useless, only it is different from the shell of the nut because besides being useless, it is extremely obnoxious and disagreeable to sight, taste and smell.

We have now taken this extract and put a sufficient quantity of it in a delicious-tasting wine. We have also added a small amount of organic iron. This heightens the tonic effect of the wine. The extract of the cod's liver comes in just the right proportion to do the greatest amount of good. "Here, drink this," said Mr. McKeown, as he reached for a bottle, and poured forth a glass full of Vinol.

The reporter, after carefully tasting and drinking the glass of Vinol handed him, found it to be deliciously palatable and in every way exceedingly agreeable.

"You have just taken, condensed, of the curative principles of the cod's liver what you would find in fifty per cent. of its volume of cod liver oil. You can therefore imagine that if it is necessary to take this remedy, how much easier it will be to derive benefit from it than it used to be when cod liver oil was administered. Do you realize that formerly you only obtained a small proportion of these same curative properties in a whole pint of that horrid oil? Doesn't that tell the story to you?"

The reporter thanked Mr. McKeown for his kindness, and left him, wondering to himself whether after all a man had to be born on purpose to be famous, or whether notoriety and good fortune did not sometimes come as a matter of luck.

A CURIOUS CLOCK.

Novel Timepiece Made by a German Horologist.

A globe clock, described in a recent number of a German paper, is very interesting from the point of view of its mechanism. The clock complete on its base measures 18 cm. (about 7 inches) in height, and its sphere has a diameter of about 12 cm. (4¾ inches). This sphere is made of copper, and the oceans and continents are laid on the surface of that metal in enamel. The globe is made in two parts, the northern hemisphere and the southern hemisphere, united by a large circular hand, representing the equator, and is divided to mark the twenty-four hours. It is in equilibrium in a Cardanic suspension.

The movement of the clock has a cylinder escapement and runs eight days. The winding is done at the lower part—that is, at the south pole. In two holes made in that part the two tines of a special key are inserted and the globe is then turned, like the knob of a stem winder. The barrel is in the center of the globe and turns once every twenty-four hours. It drives a pipe whose extremity projects through the north pole of the sphere and carries a hand ornamented with a sun. At the lower end of this tube the weight is attached, which gives the desired inclination to the globe.

This weight is designed to keep the hand constantly in the same place and to compel the sphere, which is free, to turn in its stead in the opposite direction. The tube to which hand and the weight are fastened is provided with an oiled bearing, so that the clock easily gives the correct time. The circle marked with the hours is turned in such a way that the figure 12—that is, noon—is always on the meridian of the place where the clock is. In this way, the hand remaining fixed, the time is indicated by the figures which slowly revolve one after the other. Besides this, the rotation of the sphere brings the different meridians successively under the hand—that is, under the sun. The clock therefore not only gives the time of day where it actually is, but also shows whereabout on the globe it is noon at the same moment.

Most Disastrous Day at Sea.

Sir Henry Hozier, who has just retired from Lloyd's after thirty-two years' service, said that the most disastrous day at sea he could remember was in October, 1881, when 108 vessels were posted as lost in twelve hours. When a vessel is lost it is announced by the tolling of the bell which hangs beside the crier's box. It is tolled once when a vessel is lost, twice when a missing vessel comes to port. The bell belonged to the Lundine, a vessel which went down in the Zuyder Zee over a century ago with a million and a half in coin on board, out of which less than a million was wrenched from the jaws of the sea.

Unique Military Address.

General Kuropatkin's address to the army of Manchuria on laying down the command has been published. In one respect this document is probably unique, in that the superseded generalissimo frankly lays upon his own shoulders the responsibility for Russia's failure to make head against her enemy. "I had not," he said, "the talents for remedying the defects against which the army had to contend or for so using the army as to command victory." The general, having dealt faithfully with himself, then draws a graphic picture of the army's utter unpreparedness and, what was worse, its grossly inefficient training for war.

Edison as a Critic.

Thomas A. Edison's latest discovery happens to be in the realm of aesthetics and criticism. "A few years ago," he said the other day, "when the talking machine business was still a dubious proposition, a list of the new records was often handed me for approval. After hearing them I would mark 'Good,' 'Fair' or 'Rotten' against the compositions, so as to class them for the trade. The 'rotten' records always made a hit with the public. Now all I have to do is to condemn a bit of music and the factory works overtime to supply the demand."

The Cigarette In the Orient.

Says a writer in the Peking and Tientsin Times: "The cigarette has caught the popular favor in the east and far east, being a smoke seemingly peculiarly adaptable to Asiatics. The long stemmed pipe is giving way everywhere to the cigarette. All classes of Chinese take to it, even rickshaw coolies, some brands of the cigarettes being so cheap that the beggars in Peking are seen often indulging in a quiet smoke."

Uncle Sam's Soldiers.

According to George B. Winter, the London military tailor who was engaged by the United States government to reorganize the uniforms of the American army, that army "contains the pick of American manhood. The soldiers are as hard as nails, lean and muscular. They are indeed a magnificent lot of athletes and are capable of standing any amount of hardship."

Everybody Going to Jail.

In 1850 the ratio of prison population was one in 3,443 inhabitants. In 1860 it was one in 1,647, in 1870 one in 1,171, in 1880 one in 853 and in 1890 one in 757. In other words, in the forty years from 1850 to 1890 the prison population increased nearly five times as fast as population.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Dancing.

Gracefulness is of course the highest object of the dance among all peoples, but their conceptions of what constitutes grace differ widely. According to a student of dancing, who has witnessed tens of thousands of dances in all parts of the world, who has penetrated to the interior of Africa and the desolate mountains of western China, there are three dances that, to his way of thinking, are equal in beauty, in grace and in the poetry of motion. These are the dances of the Javanese Mohammedans, especially the "love dance," in which only the younger women participate; the tarantella of Christian Italy and the butterfly dance of Japan. That dancing loses in poetry, in fire, in meaning, as civilization increases is the belief of this student of the art. The modern dances of civilized nations, especially as expounded on the stage, are not only meaningless and lacking in the beauty of the original dance, but actually degenerate and merely physical contortions that, while they may be rhythmic and graceful, are as insipid and as meaningless as the waddle of a duck.

Better Than Song.

A workingman, fond of his pint of beer on Saturday night, got very muddled sometimes. Knowing that his wife on such occasions searched his pockets, he, when not too far gone, used to secrete his money in various places, and it often happened that the next morning he could not remember the hiding place. He had a canary which used to hang in front of the window. One Sunday morning he was sitting looking at the bird when a neighbor looked in and inquired if he would sell it. As the bird was not much use for singing, he reached the cage down for his neighbor to look at, whereupon his wife got very angry and hung up the cage again.

"I will not have that bird sold on any account," she exclaimed. "I don't care naught about it being a poor singer, for it's laid many a sixpence and a shilling, and now it's begun to lay half crowns."

Then its owner realized where some of his hidden treasures had gone.

Wells as Weather Prophets.

A popular idea in Switzerland that some of the wells in that country are reliable weather prophets has been proved by scientists to be well founded. These wells, by some sort of pressure, not clearly understood, have the property of drawing in air at certain times and of blowing out air at other periods. In order to ascertain definitely if there was any truth in the idea of weather prophecy the wells were covered and a small opening was surmounted with a U shaped pressure gauge. It was found that when the barometer rises the air rushes into the wells in a steady current, and when the barometer falls the air rushes out. The currents of air are definite and easy to perceive, even without the gauge. The general tendency of the weather is foretold with considerable certainty.

Animals and Rain.

It seems strange that no animal, unless it be the squirrel, seems to build itself a shelter with the express object of keeping off the rain, which they all so much dislike. Monkeys are miserable in wet and could easily build shelters if they had the sense to do so, but even the orang outang, which builds a small platform in the trees on which to sleep at night, never seems to think of a roof, though the Dyaks say that when there is much rain it covers itself with the leaves of the pandanus, a large fern.

Sponging Woolen Goods.

Few people know how to sponge a piece of woolen goods, and the majority of woolens are better for having been sponged, although some, such as cashmere, henrietta, challis and veiling, do not require it. All goods known as cloths must be sponged, or they will not give satisfactory wear. To do this leave the original crease down the center and lay over the cloth pieces of thoroughly wet muslin. On an old broom handle or a slat from a bed roll the cloth, commencing at one end, and see as you roll that the whole inside surface is covered with the wet muslin. Allow the cloth to remain in this way for twenty-four hours, when it should be unrolled and hung over a line to dry.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"AROUND THE CLOCK."

An attraction that will please every taste has been provided for the patrons of the opera house on Friday, January 11th, when "Around the Clock" will be presented here by those inimitable fun-makers, the Ritchie London Comedy Company, who were last seen in the travesty, "A Night in a London Music Hall." "Around the Clock," ever since its initial performance, has enjoyed a degree of success seldom attained by attractions of like character. Thus far this season the comedy has been greeted by crowded houses at every performance. The universal laudatory criticisms of both press and public wherever is played easily attest its right to rank in the first flight of musical comedies.

No man finds salvation until he finds himself.

DEATH FOLLOWED IN TRAIN OF QUINTE FIRE.

LOUIS BOLYEA, WHO WAS INJURED BY FALLING DEBRIS, DIED IN THE HOSPITAL ON SATURDAY NIGHT.

As a result of the destruction of Hotel Quinte by fire on Friday night last a human life has been lost. As noted in The Intelligencer on Saturday, Mr. Louis Bolyea, whilst viewing the ruins at close proximity, was struck upon the head by falling bricks and other debris. It was not considered at the time, although he was rendered unconscious, that fatal results would follow, but such unfortunately proved to be the case. He passed away at the hospital on Saturday evening shortly after 6 o'clock. The unfortunate man never regained consciousness. The injuries consisted of fracture of the skull. Everything possible suggested by medical skill was done for Bolyea but it was of no avail.

Late in the afternoon, when it was feared that the end was approaching, the rites of the Catholic church were administered by the Rev. Father O'Farrell, assistant priest of St. Michael's.

The accident happened in this way: Mr. Bolyea, in company with Mr. Geo. Perry, was viewing the ruins from beneath the porch on Bridge street, when, without any warning, a considerable quantity of debris fell upon them, with the above result. Mr. Perry was fortunate to escape with slight injuries.

The victim of the accident was well and favorably known in the city and vicinity. He was a market gardener, residing in the township of Thurlow, just north of Albert College. He was 50 years of age and leaves a widow and a family of two sons, Arthur, of Detroit, and Louis, of Manitoba, and two daughters, Marietta and Elsie, at home. The son Arthur was a member of the First Contingent to go to South Africa during the recent trouble. Mr. Bolyea was a member of St. Michael's Church. The family will receive the sincere sympathy of all citizens in their sudden and sad bereavement.

Aftermath Of the Hotel Quinte Fire.

Considerable talk is heard around the city in regard to the pilfering which it is alleged has been going on at the ruins of the Quinte. It is said that boys, and even men, have looted certain parts of the ruins and carried away liquors, cigars, etc. Prosecutions, it is said, may follow.

All day yesterday curious people stood around, gazing in a melancholy way at the smoking ruins. The firemen had streams playing on the ruins continually since the fire started.

Since the accident to Messrs. Bolyea and Perry, people have been more careful, but it is said that certain parties took long chances yesterday and actually went inside the walls. Barricades have now been put up to keep people at a safe distance from the ruins, and the police have warned many people away, but some curious persons seem to have a morbid desire to take risks and tempt providence.

Dozens of snapshotters were out with their little kodaks and cameras on Saturday and even yesterday, all anxious to secure a view of the ruins.

Mr. "Josh" Canning, a popular member of the Fire Brigade, had a bone in his right hand broken on Friday night, during the fire. A board fell on his hand. The hand is now badly swollen, and it will be some time before Mr. Canning can return to work.

Mr. Jenkins is being deluged with telegrams of condolence from all parts of the country. The senders one and all express sympathy over his severe loss, and hope, that, before long, the princely Quinte will once more be in commission.

During the fire on Friday night, a young man took off his overcoat and threw it upon the ground whilst he ascended a ladder to reach one of the boarders' rooms. When he returned the overcoat was gone. Yesterday afternoon the loser recovered the missing article, it being worn by a man named Joe Bolster, who at first alleged he had had the coat for a year, but subsequently admitted where he got it. He was arrested charged with theft. Bolster was brought up before Magistrate Flint this morning and was convicted. He was given a suspended sentence of one month in goal.

The members of the Crescent hockey team, says a Brockville paper, will have cause to remember their trip to Belleville yesterday. They stopped at the Hotel Quinte, and while the game at the rink was in progress, the fire broke out which resulted in the total destruction of the hostelry. The fire started about ten minutes before the close of the game and when noticed by the spectators coming out of the rink, was making good headway. The clothing of the Brockville lads had been left in one of the sample rooms, and they lost little time in getting to the building to save their belongings, which they did, although by this time it was very wet. Some of the boys missed stockings and others boots, and the majority of the team returned home on the early morning train in their uniforms.

Brockville Recorder: Brockville commercial men will regret to learn of the burning of the Quinte Hotel at Belleville last night.

Twenty years ago, and long before that the Dafoe House was the leading hostelry in Belleville, and when it went up in smoke, Belleville was without a first-class hotel until a syndicate headed by Harry Corby, ex-M.P., erected the Quinte, acknowledged to be the best hotel building between Montreal and Toronto.

After a time the management was assumed by James Jenkins and its popularity with travelling men grew. A couple of years ago Mr. Jenkins bought the hotel and continued to take such good care of travelling men that it became the rendezvous of that ilk and famous for its good meals.

Why not get a better clerk—if the present one don't "make good?" Want-advertise for one.

Died Suddenly While Attending Sick Husband

Death came suddenly last night to Mrs. Albert Pitman, who resided on Catherine street. It appears that a few minutes after 11 o'clock Mrs. Pitman was waiting upon her husband who is ill in bed, when she fell at the bottom of the stairs and immediately expired. Heart trouble was the cause of death. The deceased was an estimable Christian lady, esteemed by a large circle of relatives and friends. She was a member of Holloway St. Methodist Church. In addition to the husband, one daughter, a little child survives.

Brockville Papers on the Game.

Times: The Crescents lost their junior match in Belleville to the team of that place by 4 goals to 2 after a close and exciting contest. The ice was in poor condition, being slushy and full of holes while the rink was poorly lighted, conditions the Brockville lads were not accustomed to. The Crescents led by 2-1 in the first half until almost the sound of the gong when Belleville evened matters. In the second half Belleville scored twice while Brockville was shut out. The visitors had decidedly the best of the argument in the early stages but towards the end Belleville roughed it and Brockville could not stand the pace.

Recorder: The Crescents, Brockville's junior O.H.A. team, played their first game of the series in Belleville last night, and although defeated by 4 goals to 2, have nothing to be ashamed of, for it was the boys first trip away from home, and from all accounts there was little to choose between them and the home team. The score at half time was two all, and less than a minute before time was called Belleville scored their fourth. The first game awarded them, so the Crescents claim, was from an offside.

SPORTING NOTES.

Picton ice races will be held on Jan. 22 and 23. Seven hundred dollars will be hung out in purses.

One day's good hard frost will make good ice for the Belleville-Picton match. With good ice the match should be a corker.

Marty Walsh's ankle was not broken, only sprained.

Reddy McMillan played with the Montreal Shamrocks on Saturday, and his team was beaten 5-3 by the M.A.A.A.

George Lowden, the famous Cumberland heavyweight wrestler, died at Workington from pneumonia. Lowden, who was 57 years old, was born at Keswick. In the heydey of his career as a wrestler he weighed 301 1-2 pounds, had a chest measurement of 51 1-2 inches, and was over six feet in height. He began wrestling when fifteen years old, and for many years shared with George Steadman the honors in the Cumberland and Westmoreland style.

The Elections.

This was a quiet election day, though both sides were working like beavers, and it was said that a very good vote was being brought out. The polls close at five o'clock, but it will probably be two hours later before the results of either elections are known. The returns will be read from the City Hall stage at 8.30.

Four Generations.

An interesting event took place just before the service in Bridge Street Methodist Church yesterday morning, when the infant son of Ald. L. W. Marsh was baptized by his great-grand-uncle, the Rev. D. McCallum, of Kingston. Seldom are the representatives of four generations present at a function of this nature.

Men's judgments often make a blunder, but their conscience never does.

FUNERAL OF THE BARONESS.

Cortege Simple, Though State and People Paid Highest Tribute.

London, Jan. 7.—In the presence of a congregation representative of all classes, the body of Baroness Burdett-Coutts was interred in Westminster Abbey Saturday. The Abbey was crowded.

King Edward and Queen Alexandra and the Prince and Princess of Wales sent representatives, as did the workers in the slums of London, whose societies have been beneficiaries of the late baroness' charity. The American charge d'affaires, Mr. Carter, represented the American embassy, and the lord mayor and corporation attended in state.

The streets along the route of the procession and about the Abbey were lined with spectators, who included many of the poorest inhabitants of the east end. There were numerous signs of mourning in the streets, the flags over public buildings were half-masted, and the window shades along the route were drawn.

The funeral cortege itself was simple, the coffin being undraped, except for a little bunch of sweet-scented herbs, which were greatly favored by the baroness.

There were no plumes on the hearse, which was an open one, and it was only followed by half a dozen carriages containing relatives and close personal friends.

WAR ON HILL RAILWAYS.

Shippers Decide to Go to Roosevelt For Special Legislation.

Chicago, Jan. 7.—Gigantic shipping interests, through representatives in session in Chicago, took radical action Saturday, aiming to relieve the traffic congestion and car shortage which prevails throughout the western country.

After hearing a bitter and specific arraignment of James J. Hill and his railroads, the national reciprocal demurrage convention appointed a committee to go to Washington and appeal to President Roosevelt to send a special message to Congress at once, asking demurrage legislation.

The committee, of which Victor F. Beckman, secretary of the Pacific Coast Lumber Dealers' Association, is chairman, met at the Auditorium Annex, and decided to start for the national capital at once.

Mr. Beckman, in his speech, denounced the Hill railroads for failure to provide adequate facilities for handling their traffic, and said the association which he represents intends to bring suit to have the Great Northern and the Northern Pacific thrown into the hands of receivers. His association will also start 1,000 suits against these two railroads for damages aggregating $15,000,000.

THROWS BOMB IN BANK

Cashier Blown to Death and Thrower Torn to Pieces.

After Demanding $5,000 From President of Philadelphia Bank Shabbily Dressed Man Wrecks His Insane Will on the Institution—Keys Marked Steele, Garner, Ia., May Disclose His Identity.

Philadelphia, Jan. 7.—Demanding a loan of $5,000 and failing to get it, a man who has not yet been identified dropped a bomb in the Fourth Street National Bank Saturday, blowing himself to pieces, instantly killing Cashier W. Z. McLear and injuring ten others, one or two of which may die. The only clew to the identity of the bomb-thrower was a bunch of keys found in a portion of his clothing, attached to which was a plate inscribed "R. Steele, Garner, Iowa." It is believed he was a crank.

Explosion Terrific.

The Fourth National Bank is the largest financial institution in the city and occupies the greater portion of the first floor of the Bullitt Building, in Fourth street between Chestnut and Walnut streets, in the heart of the financial district. The explosion was terrific and it caused tremendous excitement in the crowded building and the street.

The explosion occurred a few minutes before 12 o'clock, at a time when the bank is usually well filled with persons in a hurry to transact business before the bank closes. No one saw the man enter the bank except E. F. Shanbacher, the vice-president, who was passing out of the building on his way to luncheon. He noticed the man was poorly dressed, looked like a Russian and carried a small parcel. The man walked straight back to the rear of the bank and asked a clerk to direct him to the office of the president, Richard H. Rushton.

Was Poorly Dressed.

President Rushton said after the explosion: "I was very busy when the man entered my office, and I asked him to be seated for a moment. He was poorly dressed. I asked him his business, and he gave me his name as G. E. Williams, and said he wanted a loan of $5,000. He did not look like a man who we could make a loan of that amount, and I asked him for collateral. He said something about an insurance policy, and that it would mature in from one to five years. I was then convinced the man was a crank.

"I told him he would have to see the cashier, and directed him out into the banking department. At the same moment I called my colored messenger, William Crump, to see that the man was quickly taken out of the building. As I turned to continue my work at the desk there was a terrific explosion and I thought the building was coming down. The man had not time to reach the cashier, the explosion came so soon."

Cashier McLear was sitting at his desk at the time, and his body was badly mangled. The bomb-thrower's body was torn to pieces.

Vaults Were Open.

At the time the explosion occurred all the vaults were open, books were piled on desks and papers of all sorts of value were lying on desks preparatory for being put away for the day. The explosion devastated the interior of the banking room. Glass and wooden partitions were wrecked and levelled to the ground as though a cyclone had swept through the place. Desks were ruined and iron bars were twisted, in fact there was hardly an object left intact in the room. Of all the persons in the room, at least ten, all of them clerks were hurt, two of them probably fatally. Three of the injured were sent to the hospital.

The explosion threw every one in the banking room to the floor and for a moment they were dazed. Many of them, not knowing what had happened and fearing that the building, which is an eight storey structure, was falling, made a rush for the door, Mr. Rushton among them.

President's Escape.

After President Rushton had recovered himself he told what had happened and a search for the bomb-thrower was made. At the moment it was supposed he had not been killed, but in taking out the body of Cashier McLear and looking for other dead portions of a body were found that plainly indicated that the man had been blown to pieces.

The escape of President Rushton was almost marvellous, for the damage is great in his office. The ceiling over his desk is bespattered, and under a pile of wreckage in one corner of the office was found the head and shoulders of the bomb-thrower as well as his overcoat. Mr. Rushton does not know how he escaped.

Key Ring May Be Clew.

It probably will take days before the bank officials are able to tell how much of the valuable documents in the bank's custody were destroyed, as the whole place was strewn with torn bits of paper.

The Detective Bureau is at work in an effort to identify the man who was the cause of the tragedy. The only thing found that probably belonged to him was a bunch of 25 keys, on the ring of which was the name "R. Steele, Garner, Iowa." President Rushton described him as a tall, dark man, apparently a foreigner.

W. Z. McLear, the dead cashier, was about 45 years old. He was regarded in financial circles as one of the ablest bank officials in the state.

William Crump, the messenger, was terribly injured. Both his eyes were blown out, his scalp torn off and his face so mangled that he was unrecognizable. He was taken to the Pennsylvania Hospital.

Identified.

With the finding of the personal effects of the man who threw the bomb, there is little doubt left in the minds of the police that he was Rollo Steele of Garner, Iowa. The bomb-thrower, is found to have slept Friday night at the Grant House, a hostelry on the outskirts of the tenderloin, frequented mostly by respectable working people. He registered as J. R. Steele of New York. Early on Friday night he engaged a 50-cent room. He carried a grip, which he refused to allow the colored porter to carry to the room.

When detectives searched the room yesterday they found several yards of slow fuse, a number of detonating caps, a revolver, a box of cartridges, a number of tools and some clothing.

Steele was well-built and something of an athlete. He was not a foreigner, and was the son of an old soldier. His father, now dead, was an active Socialist, but he had never acted strangely.

Steele Patent Medicine Peddler.

Garner, Iowa, Jan. 7.—Robert Steele, formerly a resident of Garner, left here six years ago for the East, and is supposed to have been living in Philadelphia or Boston. When here he was engaged in peddling patent medicines. He was about 35 years old.

BOMB THROWN IN NEW YORK.

Dropped From Elevated Railway Station to Kill Italian Fruiter.

New York, Jan. 7.—A bomb of giant powder and shot was dropped from the elevated railroad station into a crowd of people at the corner of Second avenue and 42nd street, Saturday night. In the explosion that followed, three persons were injured seriously, and of these, two will probably die. The outrage was seemingly directed against the proprietor of a fruit store on the corner, and this man, Salvatore Ciniluca, aged 39 years, was one of the two dangerously injured. The other was Mary Bailey, 40 years of age, who was making a purchase at the stand. The 15-year-old son of Ciniluca was less dangerously injured. The bomb-throwers escaped in the excitement.

The bomb fell on the sidewalk directly in front of the fruit store, and almost at the feet of Ciniluca, his son, and Miss Bailey.

Ciniluca's body was filled with shot. He had a broken right arm, a fracture of the left foot; his face was cut and both hands and arms were torn as though by nails. He had been summoned as an important witness in a recent Mulberry Park murder.

DAM FOR LAKE ERIE.

International Waterways Commission to Take It Up Soon.

Buffalo, Jan. 7.—Having disposed of the Chicago drainage canal question, and the international boundary line on Lake Erie, the international waterways commission will next take up the old question of damming the lower end of Lake Erie, so as to raise the level of the lake.

Lake marine interests have been urging the matter for a long time, and it is understood that the commission at its last session decided to take up the problem next month.

While no definite plan has been submitted to the commission, the general scheme in view is to build a great dam, or regulating work at the lower end of Lake Erie, or somewhere in the Niagara River.

A New Stomach

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets Restore Lifeless Organs to Normal Condition.

A TRIAL PACKAGE FREE.

Many a sufferer from dyspepsia, indigestion and kindred ailments of the digestive organs carries around an absolutely useless stomach — a dead load, and a cess-pool for ever-increasing disorders. The muscles are seemingly worn-out, the mucous lining has lost its secretive power, and food taken into the stomach lies there and ferments, causing sour eructations, belchings, heartburn, dizziness and other distressing conditions. Many sufferers have given up in despair until they have been induced by some interested friend to try a box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are the dyspeptic's sure and only hope. They are a natural restorative of healthy action to the stomach and small intestines, because they supply just the elements that the weak stomach lacks—pepsin, diastase, golden seal and other digestives.

If you are afflicted with any of the symptoms above described, be assured that your digestive organs are losing power—they need help and there is no more sensible help to be given them than to supply elements which will do the work of digestion for them.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have been found by the test of reputable physicians in the United States and Great Britain to have remarkable digestive powers, one grain of the active principle of these tablets being sufficient to digest 3,000 grains of ordinary food. It is plain that no matter what the condition of your stomach, or how far your disease has progressed, one only of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets taken at meal time will do the work — give your stomach an opportunity to regain its lost powers, the muscles will be strengthened, the glands invigorated, and you will be a new man.

It costs nothing to prove the effectiveness of this cure. Send for a free sample package to-day. F. A. Stuart Co., 78 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

Ontario Is All In Favor.

Power By-law Carried by the Municipalities Voting.

Whitney Government Power Policy Endorsed by the People of Province—Local Option is Making Gains—Of Half a Hundred Returns Reported Measure is Supported in Almost One-Half.

Toronto, Jan. 8.—Beck's power policy made a clean sweep of Ontario yesterday. The doubtful City of Brantford, which was at first reported adverse, at midnight was declared to have carried the bylaw by a two to one vote.

Hamilton and Stratford voted two to one. Elsewhere the majorities ran 6, 8 and 10 to 1.

After the splendid verdict given by Toronto, nothing less was expected, but the rural constituencies have shown even a keener appreciation of the benefits of Niagara power than did Toronto.

Mr. Beck "Feeling Fine."

Hon. Adam Beck was "feeling fine" last night over the result, which was naturally one to delight him. He was especially pleased over the victory of the bylaw in Ottawa by a majority of 5,530.

"This is a good thing," he said, "for the impression had been abroad that the work of the Power Commission served only one district convenient to Niagara. Ottawa shows that appreciation of the work of the Commission is equally strong there.

"Our estimates," he continued, "were based on only half of the municipalities declaring for the bylaw. With this general demand we will be able to supply power at the minimum cost instead of the maximum figured upon.

"The Commission must now submit a contract to the municipalities, including terms, quantities and everything else. Before accepting the contract the councils would submit it to the people for a vote.

"Those who have no distributing plant will have to go to the people to get money for that, while those who (like Guelph) have their own plant already, will be able to go ahead at once."

LOCAL OPTION VOTING.

Gain of Nearly 50 Per Cent. For the "Dry" Municipalities.

The returns from places voting on local option indicate a gain for "dry" municipalities of practically 50 per cent. The three-fifths vote requirement in the new License Act prevented a great many more places going dry. For instance, in Collingwood, where the temperance people polled a majority of 233 the bylaw fell short of the required 60 per cent. by only 14 votes. Many other places had close calls. Adelaide, with a big majority, was 14 shy of the percentage. Embro was only 18 short, Kingsville 15 and Tottenham 19.

Teeswater, however, carried the bylaw by one vote over the three-fifths, with three disputed ballots.

The greatest overthrow recorded against the opposers of the measure was at Toronto Junction, where an effort was made to repeal the present bylaw. The temperance people, in defence of their last year's measure, only required to poll a bare majority, but a count of the ballots showed a tremendous sentiment against the liquor men's interest.

Fort William Elections.

Fort William, Jan. 8.—James Murphy elected mayor by over 400 of a majority over L. L. Pelletier. Bylaws were carried to guarantee $40,000 bonds for public hospital, $82,000 for electric street railway, $15,000 for completing payment of city hall; also lease for seven years of electric railway to Mount McKay and Kakabeka Railway Co.

Against Federal District.

Ottawa, Jan. 8.—The plebiscite of the proposal to form a federal district got an adverse vote, but the affirmative vote was surprisingly large, as it was strenuously opposed.

EXPERIMENTAL STATIONS.

Annual Meeting of Those in Charge—What Reports Show.

Toronto, Jan. 8.—Fourteen stations reported yesterday at the annual meeting in the Parliament buildings of the board of control of the fruit experimental stations of the province. The stations are scattered over Ontario from Essex to Maitland on the St. Lawrence, east, and the work is in a flourishing condition. A new vegetable station has been established at Leamington.

The board decides the work for the year, what varieties of fruit are to be tested, and other matters.

In Essex County the peaches have been frost-killed twice in five years, and an attempt will be made to develop hardy stocks there. In Massachusetts peaches have been budded on plum roots on heavy soil, and this plan will be adopted to see whether it will develop a stock proof against frost.

Those present were: President G. C. Creelman, Guelph; Secretary L. Wolverton, Grimsby; E. Lick, Oshawa; W. T. Macoun, Ottawa; H. L. Hutt, Guelph; A. M. Smith, St. Catharines; A. W. Hodgetts, Toronto.

WENT OVER THE ROUTE.

Mr. Emmerson and Grand Trunk's Proposed Entrance Into Toronto.

Ottawa, Jan. 8.—(Globe Special.)—The Minister of Railways will not grant ay postponement of the hearing of the Grand Trunk application for approval of the route map of their proposed new entrance into Toronto. The case will therefore be heard on the 16th inst.

Mr. Emmerson spent Sunday in Toronto, and went carefully over the ground which the Grand Trunk proposes to cover. He recognizes that injury will be done to the property of summer cottagers, but states that if no other route is available the good of the many must prevail as against the interests of the few. If the lake front route is to be sanctioned, there must be the most ample safeguards for the protection of life.

Without any desire to prejudice the case, in Mr. Emmerson's opinion, the question is an engineering one, involving compensation.

An ounce of contentment is more beneficial to a woman's complexion than a pound of cosmetics.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Some men run for glory,
Some men run for fame,
But Sulman runs for the city's good,
And he gets there, just the same.

The way the dog owners did NOT plump for Ald. Knox was touching, wasn't it?

The majority for Sulman was not quite so large as Coatsworth's, but it will do,

A good winner and a good loser. Fine combination, that.

Who said Murney ward was going back on Sulman?

They say the successful School Trustee candidate in Murney ward measures 41 round the chest to-day.

The idea of assistance to the Quinte caught on with the crowd last night.

We move that, next Monday, the Council appoint Ald.-Elect Butler a special committee in regard to drill shed construction. Perhaps he may be able to give us some information.

Well, take it all around, it looks like a pretty good Council. The members are not perfect, perhaps, but if they were they'd be dreadfully lonesome.

Out of a total of eleven, counting the Mayor and aldermen-elect, there are eight Conservatives. Oh! yes, it's a fairly good Council.

There are three grocers, one butcher, one G.T.R. employee, one lawyer, one manufacturer, one insurance agent, one bookkeeping manager, one merchant and one gentleman.

• • •

In religious affairs the Council shows up with six Methodists, two Presbyterians, two Church of England and one Roman Catholic.

One lesson of yesterday's voting is the fact that electors do not always "forget little things by the time next election day comes round."

The defeat of Ald. Paterson is to be regretted. He was a thoroughly honest man, always in his place at meetings and deserved to be returned.

• • •

Of course we will have Green again
And likewise Marsh and Panter;
But this year in the Council we'll sadly miss
That dear old Tam o' Shanter.

Good luck to our friend, the late Chairman of Gas. He put up a good fight and took his defeat like a man. Everybody has a warm spot in his heart for a good loser.

With a singer like Mr. Burrows in the Council, City Clerk Mikel will surely have to take lessons on the piano. It is up to him to play the accompaniments.

Now let that ob-KNOX-ious dog by law be repealed; which one of the aldermen will make himself popular by getting busy along the above lines?

13 was a very unpopular number for four candidates yesterday.

This great family journal, we take it, is still of some service as a circulating medium, and moulder of public opinion, even around election times.

Did any one say Mayor Sulman was not entitled to a third term?

• • •

D. V. you are not mayor, but in these strenuous days of active business life one's personal affairs need close attention, may you (D.V.) have every success.

• • •

"Head the poll!" said Ald. Green, "why it is just as easy as hewing a porter-house steak off the neck!" But he didn't.

• • •

Mr. Albert Thompson made a splendid run, considering he was not very well known. But then "Ab" is popular wherever he is known.

Thurlow Conservatives are jubilant, and with good reason, for yesterday they rolled up a splendid victory in the township for Mr. H. K. Denyes, who was defeated strictly by a non-resident and non-taxpaying vote. The question may well be asked, how long is that kind of thing going to be allowed to continue? Yesterday's election shows plainly that, in Thurlow proper, the would-be senator has met his match in Mr. Denyes, and is much weaker than formerly. Truly, 'how are the mighty fallen,' when the great and only "Than." is in a minority in his own township, which he used to boast he held in the hollow of his hand!

In the Chown-Sulman election, two years ago, Mr. Sulman's majority was 63. There were, yesterday, 91 more votes polled than in the former election.

They didn't do a thing to the Grits in Sidney. Not one of 'em got his head above water.

Six members of the present Council attend Bridge St. Church, and the Mayor and first six members of the aldermanic slate are either from England or of English descent. With the departure of Ald. Sinclair and Paterson, there is not a Scotsman left on the aldermanic board now.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

BURNS AND O'BRIEN.

A contest of especial interest to the lovers of manly sport is the coming of the Burns and O'Brien contest-exhibition to-night at the opera house. This reproduction of the great heavy-weight battle as fought at Los Angeles, Cal., last Thanksgiving, for the world's championship honors, comes direct from New York City Madison Square Gardens, where it played to thousands of ladies and gentlemen for twenty-four performances, and is now on a four weeks' tour of the principal cities of Canada, Belleville being only the second city played on this side. The pictures are absolutely correct in every detail and so realistic spectators almost live for the time being at the ring side in far-away California, as they watch these modern gladiators struggle for supremacy for very nearly two hours, a truly marvellous presentation of life. Nothing is omitted, even to showing the men while in training at their respective quarters previous to the contest. The minutest details are explained by a lecturer and famous patrons of the sport are pointed out as they appear, and the management especially advises ladies that nothing is said or seen that could offend the most sensitive nature.

"AROUND THE CLOCK."

"Around the Clock," which will be the attraction at the Opera House on Friday, Jan. 11th, contains a plot of absorbing interest. It is from the pen of Frank and Sebastian Hiller. All of the musical numbers offer plenty of opportunity for original and captivating stage business and effects. "Oskaloo Lou," a cowboy song, is recommended; this song is said to possess all the ingredients that serve to make it popular. There is a fund of genuine, rollicking humor, surprises and features in the comedy, and to dwell at length on the good things in store for the patrons of the Carman would be depriving them of a great treat.

A Society Funeral.

The funeral this morning of the late Mr. Thos. L. Brown, a G. T. R. fireman, was largely attended. It was under the auspices of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, and many members were out. Services were held at St. Michael's church, conducted by Rev. Father Twomey. The bearers were members of the Brotherhood, namely J. Davis, J. Meagher, H. Smith, T. Gorman, jr., R. Acton and W. Young.

Coming Session Of the Legislature.

The session of the Ontario Legislature, which opens on January 29, promises to be one of the most important in years. Its importance lies principally in the legislation that is to be introduced—legislation that is so closely allied with the best interests of the province that its passing is really a public necessity. Probably the most important piece will be the Niagara Power bill. By the time the Legislature meets the interested municipalities will have passed upon the by-law, and as there is little doubt but what it will be carried in every instance, the Government will then proceed to close the final details of the contracts by which they will receive cheap power for the municipalities.

Then Mr. Hanna's bill amending the Companies' Act will be taken up, and this legislation will render a great public service, providing as it will greater safeguards for the people against corporations.

Legislation affecting the Cobalt interests, together with many other matters will also be considered, along with a large number of private bills; and taken all in all the session will be one to which we might all look forward with great interest and anticipations that some further good is to be accomplished by the Whitney regime.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

SPORTING NOTES.

Good ice for the match on Thursday night is now assured, and the game should be a fast one.

The Kingston Frontenacs must be able to go some. They beat the Pot Canners 8-3 last night.

One of the Ottawa men, in discussing the Kenora Thistles, said that he expected they would beat the Wanderers. "Don't think because we beat the Kenoras," said he "that the Wanderers can, for we will surely put it over that Montreal bunch this year. They only beat us on a fluke last season, and we are going right after them the first chance." The same player reiterated the opinion that has often been expressed that Kenora has the material for the greatest team that ever stepped on ice if it was only properly coached and trained. With the speed they possess, and a systematic style of play developed no team in the country could touch them.

Magnus Flett, the big cover-point of the Winnipeg Strathcona hockey team, and one of the best players who ever put on a skate, was so badly injured in a game at Brandon Friday evening that his hockey days are probably over. His elbow was broken by a blow from the stick of Joe Hall, and that player's conduct on the ice is already before the League Executive, with a recommendation for his expulsion. The injury was inflicted five minutes after the game started, yet Flett pluckily played it out with one arm.

Telegram:—Toronto's senior hockey teams seem to be three of a kind, but they're not a very good kind to draw to.

NEGLECT TO SUPPORT.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When the tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

"THE OLD SCRATCH."

How the Evil One Came to be Popularly Known as "The Old Scratch."

One of the many familiar names of his satanic majesty is "The Old Scratch." It is undoubtedly due to the fact that scratching is so disagreeable that people thought it no worse than the evil one. A scalp full of dandruff keeps one scratching all the time, not only disagreeable but considered very inelegant in polite society—as it should be — because one ought to keep the scalp so clean that it would not itch. To cure the scalp of dandruff effectively, use Newbro's Herpicide. It kills the germ that creates the dandruff, which is preliminary to falling hair, and, finally, baldness. No other hair preparation kills the dandruff germ. Herpicide also is a very delightful and effective hair-dressing. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

AMELIASBURG.

The contest for the Reeveship in the Township of Ameliasburg yesterday was between W. E. Anderson and Harry Dempsey. Considerable excitement and interest was taken in the contest. The feeling was strongly in Mr. Dempsey's favor from the start. Throughout the township a strong opposition was set up against Mr. Anderson for the stand he had taken in the good roads movement, the assessment of the bay bridge, and his action in pushing the township's claim in the smallpox case, which the courts had unanimously endorsed. While at the same time it was generally admitted his many years of experience would be of greater advantage to the county and township than Mr. Dempsey's, the result of the voting did not apparently bear out this feeling. While Mr. Dempsey is very popular in the municipality, it is to be regretted the services of Mr. Anderson have been so lightly valued by those who recognize his When the result became known Mr. Anderson at once telephoned his congratulations to Mr. Dempsey.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

A MIRROR TRICK.

Example of the Odd Illusions That Can Be Produced.

A good deal of amusement may be had out of a little experiment with a long mirror if you have one in the door of a bookcase or a wardrobe. Let a boy stand by the side of the wardrobe in such a way that only one-half of his body may be seen, the other half being concealed by the wardrobe.

To persons standing at the other side at a certain distance it will seem that they see his whole body, for the half that is visible will be reflected from the glass so as to produce that illusion.

A MIRROR ILLUSION.

If he raises the arm that is in sight, another arm will appear to rise in the glass, and thus it will seem that both his arms are raised.

That is not at all extraordinary, for anybody can lift both arms at once. Let him raise the leg that is in sight, however, and the illusion becomes somewhat remarkable, for it represents a person with both feet in the air at the same time. Even that feat may ordinarily be accomplished at quick intervals, but this illusion gives the spectators the image of a person who remains in that suspended condition for a long time.

You see now how easy it is for the boy to imitate the acrobatic performance of a jumping jack, for if he moves his visible leg up and down the reflection of it from the glass makes it appear that his act includes both legs.

SHOES IN JAPAN.

They Are Queer Ones and Only Cost About a Cent a Pair.

I wonder what the poor bootblacks, if there are any, do in far away Japan, where all the people wear bamboo shoes and wooden sandals, footwear which never needs blacking?

In fact, the Japanese are a great deal of the time without shoes, as they never wear them in their houses.

One of the queerest sights in the streets of Japan is the collection of old and new, the large and the small shoes, which are seen outside the doors of the houses where they are left. These shoes have a separate place in them for the big toe, but the wearer is so used to them that he steps in and out of them so quickly that they hardly stop to do it. In the house the Japanese sit or lie on the floor when they rest and never walk unless with very clean feet.

When they travel they take several pairs of shoes in case the old ones give out. This sounds extravagant to us, but it is not, for their shoes cost only a cent and a half a pair. Of course, there are more expensive ones in the shops, but the middle class wear the cheap kind.—Exchange.

The Lost Family.

A great crowd had gathered to witness the closing exercises of the village school. It was 10 o'clock at night when they finished, and everybody started for home. Then suddenly some one shouted aloud, "Little Paul Chilton is lost!" Now, Paul was only four and a half years old.

The minister hurried alone down the path to the spring, hoping the little one might have taken that familiar walk. Ah, sure enough, a tiny figure was coming with brave little steps up the sloping path!

"Oh, Paul," cried the minister, running toward him, "how did you come to be lost?"

"I don't fink I's losted," answered the little fellow, a quaver of relief in his voice as the big man gathered him in his arms. Then he went on in a tired little tone, "But the rest of the family must be losted, for I can't find 'em anywhere."

Royal Mechanics.

Perhaps you may be surprised to hear that many members of the royal families of Europe have learned ordinary trades. King Edward of England learned in his youth how to make stockings; his son, the Prince of Wales, can make ropes; the late czar of Russia was a practical farmer; the German emperor is a typesetter; King Humbert of Italy was a shoemaker and Queen Victoria was quite expert with knitting needles.

Beware of "By and By."

If you have hard work to do,
Do it now.
Today the skies are clear and blue;
Tomorrow clouds may come in view;
Yesterday is not for you;
Do it now.

If you have a song to sing,
Sing it now.
Let the notes of gladness ring
Clear as song of bird in spring;
Let every day some music bring;
Sing it now.

If you have kind words to say,
Say them now.
Tomorrow may not come your way;
Do a kindness while you may;
Loved ones will not always stay;
Say them now.

HOW LINCOLN WON.

A Bad Looking Legal Case That Was Saved by Frankness.

The lawyer whose honesty is proved has the confidence of the judge and jury. A story of Abraham Lincoln is an illustration. He was appointed to defend one charged with murder. The crime was a brutal one, the evidence entirely circumstantial, the accused a stranger. Feeling was high and against the friendless defendant. On the trial Lincoln drew from the witnesses full statements of what they saw and knew. There was no effort to confuse, no attempt to place before the jury the facts other than they were. In the argument, after calling attention to the fact that there was no direct testimony, Lincoln reviewed the circumstances and, after conceding that this and that seemed to point to defendant's guilt, closed by saying that he had reflected much on the case, and, while it seemed probable that defendant was guilty, he was not sure and, looking the jury straight in the face, said, "Are you?" The defendant was acquitted, and afterward the real criminal was detected and punished. How different would have been the conduct of many lawyers! Some would have striven to lead the judge into technical errors with a view to an appeal to a higher court. Others would have become hoarse in denunciation of witnesses, decrying the lack of positive testimony and the marvelous virtue of a reasonable doubt. The simple, straightforward way of Lincoln, backed by the confidence of the jury, won. —D. J. Brewer in Atlantic.

A MONKEY'S ROLES.

Defined by Customs Men as a Bird, a Package and a Dog.

On the travels of a monkey from Genoa to Heidelberg an amusing farce might be written. A German gentleman brought from southwest Africa a tiny monkey weighing barely a couple of pounds. From Tanga to Genoa all went well with the lilliputian animal. It was a favorite with every one and traveled free until Genoa was reached, when its troubles began.

Brought under the notice of the Genoese custom house authorities, it was promptly deprived of its identity. It was no longer an animal; it became a bird, and as a bird, on which 28 cents was charged, it was conveyed to the Swiss frontier, where at a stroke of the custom house officer's wand it was transformed into a cat at the increased assessment of $1.56 and borne by train to Zurich.

On its arrival there it ceased as a cat to exist and became a mere package, an item of luggage that was conveyed to Constance for the nominal sum of 16 cents.

Still as luggage, though metamorphosed from a package into a hand bag, it went on its way to Stuttgart, where a great honor awaited it. It was on payment of $2.04 exalted into a dog, and it was as a dog that it ended its journey at the university town of Heidelberg.—Stray Stories.

Caution.

"Sister Henderson," said Deacon Hypers, "you should avoid even the appearance of evil."

"Why, deacon, what do you mean?" asked Sister Henderson.

"I observe that on your sideboard you have several cut glass decanters and that each of them is half filled with what appears to be ardent spirits."

"Well, now, deacon, it isn't anything of the kind. The bottles look so pretty on the sideboard that I just filled them halfway with some floor stain and furniture polish just for appearances."

"That's why I'm cautioning you, sister," replied the deacon. "Feeling a trifle weak and faint, I helped myself to a dose from the big bottle in the middle."—Life.

Wedding Gifts of Long Ago.

In the list of presents received at the wedding of the daughter of Mr. Moor of Losely, in 1567, from M. Balam, Esq., out of Marshland, in Norfolk, appear the following: "Cranes 9, Hernshawes 5, Curlewes 1, Ducks Mallards 44, Teeles 26, Plovers 9 dozen, swannes 9, larks 38 dozen, Bytters 16, Knotts 4 dozen and 4, Styntes 7 dozen, Godwytts 22." It is a formidable list, including some 850 birds, of which 456 are larks, and must, one would imagine, have been something of an embarrassment to Mr. Moor's daughter.—Country Life.

A Hearty Laugh.

Never lose an opportunity for relaxation from the stress and strain of your business or profession. Every draft of laughter, like an air cushion, eases you over the jolts and the hard places on life's highway. Laughter is always healthy. It tends to bring every abnormal condition back to the normal. It is a panacea for heartaches, for life's bruises. It is a life prolonger. People who laugh heartily keep themselves in physical and mental harmony and are likely to live longer than those who take life too seriously.

Getting a Fit.

"What's the matter across the way?" asked the tailor of a bystander as the ambulance backed up to the door of his rival.

"A customer fell in a fit, and they are taking him to the hospital," was the reply.

"That's strange," said the tailor. "I never knew a customer to get a fit in that establishment before."

Man.

These are the real facts about the standing of the noblest work of God—man. He is first known as the son of his mother, then the husband of his wife and ends by being known as the father of his children.—Atchison Globe.

TIMELY TOPICS.

THE DIFFERENCE.

(Boston Globe.)

Two women stand at a cradle side,
And gaze on a picture fair,
A nestling child, with dark fringed eyes
Where lurks the deep-toned blue of the skies,
And shining, sun-touched hair.

One of them sees but a sleeping child
Clasping a battered doll.
She notes the beauty of form and face,
And the rich effect of the priceless lace
On the craven cradle—that's all.

She kisses the babe as she tarries a while;
Then turns away with a careless smile,
The other gazes with misty eyes,
And the cradle fades away—
Before her stretches the path of life,
With all the peril and toil and strife,
And the dangers of every day.

She sees the tiny form grow strong,
And the tender heart grown cold
In the race for pleasure that ends in pain,
The eager struggle 'twixt loss and gain,
The madd'ning quest for gold.
And she sobs a prayer, "O God, that Thou
Would'st keep him ever as pure as now!"

These women stand in the self-same place,
They are not unlike in form and face;
They see the same child in a wee white cot;
But one is a mother—and one is not.

Butchers.

Choice picked lots, which were scarce, sold at $4.65 to $4.85; fair to medium, $4.10 to $4.35; common, mixed with cows, $3.65 to $3.75; cows, $3.25 to $4.55; canners at $1.25 to $2.

Veal Calves.

Export sheep (ewes) sold at $4.50 to $5; culls and rams, $3.50 to $4 per cwt.; lambs, $6 to $6.00 per cwt.

Hogs.

Few hogs were offered to-day, only a few lots brought in by farmers, and these met a ready market at an advance of 25c per cwt. over last week's prices. Selects are quoted by H. P. Kennedy at $6.65, and lights at $6.40; sows, $4.50 to $5.50; stags, $3 to $4 per cwt.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

Montreal, Jan. 7.—(Special.)—Cable advices on our Canadian cattle from Liverpool and London were firmer, at 11½c, and ranchers at 10½c, but Glasgow cables were weaker, and one cent lower than a week ago, at 11c to 12c. Exports last week from St. John were 1706 cattle, 220 sheep, and from Portland 1427 cattle, 1290 sheep. Receipts were 1000 cattle, 50 milch cows, 300 sheep and lambs, 1200 hogs, 100 calves.

The market for hogs continues very strong, owing to the small supplies coming forward, and prices scored a further advance. The demand was keen from packers, and sales of selected lots were made at $0.00 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars, but even at this figure buyers found it impossible to fill their requirements, and the prospects are calves will go still higher. Cableadvices on Canadian bacon were strong, and noted an advance of 3s to 4s, compared with a week ago, but packers say they will have to go 5s to 6s higher to be on a par with the present cost of hogs.

The butchers were out strong, and, as good cattle were rather scarce, prime beeves sold at 4½c to 5¼c per lb.; pretty good, 3½c to 4¼c, and the common stock 2½c to 3½c. Milch cows sold at from $30 to $55 each. Grass, hay and straw fed calves sold at 2½c to 3½c, and young veals at 4c per lb. Sheep sold at 4c to 4½c, and lambs at 5½c to 6c per lb.

BOY OF 16 A FORGER.

James Wright of Lindsay, Collared In Buffalo, Admits Extensive Operations In Ontario.

Buffalo, Jan. 8.—Charged with forgery for the passing of worthless cheques on numerous hotels in both Canada and the United States, all of which the police say he admitted in a signed statement, James J. Wright, 16 years old, was arrested here Sunday night.

When he was searched at police headquarters a number of cheques on the National Bank of Rochester and the Traders' Bank of Toronto were found, all filled out and signed with the name of A. D. MacLeod and John Wakely. In a statement, which the police say he signed after his arrest, he said that his home was in Lindsay, Ont., and that Miss L. A. Wakely of that place was his guardian.

His career of crime, according to the statement, started on Nov. 24, 1906, when he stole $123 from the Dominion Bank of Uxbridge, Ont., while he was employed there collecting drafts. He then went to Toronto. He went from Toronto to several other towns, and then to Cornwall, Ont. At Cornwall he cashed a cheque for $15 on the Dominion Bank. From Cornwall he went to Montreal, and later returned to Cornwall, and, from there, went to Brockville, Ont.

The youth never paid his hotel bills and defrauded many hotels out of payment. While in Cornwall he is said to have passed a worthless cheque on the Dominion Bank of Uxbridge to the hotel for his bill. He then traveled to Kingston, Ont., where he failed to pay his bill, and from there he went to Preston. He ran a bill at the Queen Elizabeth Hotel, which he failed to pay, and went to Ogdensburg, where he cashed a worthless cheque at the Hotel Norman on the Traders' Bank of Toronto, payable to himself, and signed by A. D. McLeod.

He will be held at police headquarters until the police, hotels and banks from other cities have been heard from.

LORD STRATHCONA WINKED.

Closeted With Premier and Hon. L. P. Brodeur For Half An Hour.

Ottawa, Jan. 8.—(Globe Special.)—Lord Strathcona arrived from Montreal at 12.30 yesterday and immediately proceeded to Sir Wilfrid Laurier's office in the eastern block, where he found the Premier and Hon. L. P. Brodeur. The High Commissioner carried a package of documents, which had been transferred to Mr. Brodeur's care when the latter emerged from the interview a little later. Sir Wilfrid and Lord Strathcona left the Premier's office together shortly after 1 o'clock to go to luncheon at the Rideau Club. Immediately the two gentlemen were surrounded by reporters.

"Can was announce your resignation?" Lord Strathcona was asked.

"Why do you want to know that?"

"The public want to know."

"The public are altogether too kind. It's very kind of you, too," his Lordship remarked.

"Don't praise the newspapers too much," interrupted Sir Wilfrid as he came to the aid of his guest and stopped any further questions.

"Did you say there ain't nothing to it?" queried Lord Strathcona of the reporters as he retired through the doorway with the Premier, and the newspaper men fancied they saw the faintest suggestion of a wink from the High Commissioner.

Almost a Tragedy At Guelph.

Guelph, Jan. 8.—Ald. J. A. McCrea and four out of six of the household were prostrated with gas from a furnace yesterday morning. The servant girl, who arose about 6.30, was almost overcome. Mr. S. Duggan, residing with the family, who had his door shut and his window opened, felt no effects. He opened the doors, raised all the windows and called in a physician. The members of the family were very sick for a time, but are about all right now.

Magic Photography.

It is said that a photograph may be quite effectively developed by means of tobacco smoke. Nothing is seen on the paper, which is previously prepared, until it is held in the smoke, when the picture gradually comes out in strong black and white. The preparation consists in the treatment of a small photograph on chloride of silver paper, which is dipped into a solution of bichloride of mercury so as to bleach it and make it disappear. It is necessary to prepare the photograph without gold. The bichloride of mercury changes the photograph partly into protochloride of mercury, which is also white, and thus renders it invisible on the white paper, but if it be exposed to ammoniacal vapor, of which tobacco smoke partly consists, the image will appear. Our young folks who are interested in amateur photography should make the experiment.—Chicago News.

Pronunciation.

How does your teacher instruct you to pronounce the word humor? Does he or she say that the "h" should be sounded or that yumor is the right way? It is strange how the authorities differ about this word. Webster's International, the Standard and the Century dictionaries all say that the "h" should be sounded, by preference, but they give yu-mor as a secondary pronunciation. Worcester prefers yu-mor, but allows the "h" sound. Of fifteen authorities quoted by Worcester ten prefer yu-mor. It is worthy of note that Webster's Dictionary, in the edition of 1856, calls yu-mor a grossly inelegant pronunciation, and yet the later editions allow it. This shows that the yu-mor pronunciation has been growing all the time, which may reasonably be attributed to its euphony and ease of utterance.—Exchange.

Head Office - Waterloo, Ont

Many a man means his desires when he talks of his duty.

The Manager Of the B. & A.

By VAUGHAN KESTER

Copyright, 1901, by Harper & Brothers

He was keenly alive to his own shortcomings. "I'd never get any sort of prices for my work if she didn't take a hand in the bargaining."

"Some one has to be mercenary," said Ruth apologetically. "It's all very well to go around with your head in the clouds, but it doesn't pay."

"No, it doesn't pay," agreed Dan.

There was a long pause, which a cricket improved to make itself heard above the sweep of the night wind through the treetops. Then Ruth said: "I saw Miss Emory today. She asked about you."

"I would like to ask what earthly interest you have in Antioch?"

Mrs. Joyce and her husband had taken a passionate interest in Oakley's love affair and divined the utter wreck of his hopes.

"Did she? I saw her at the rink, too, but of course not to speak with."

Turner Joyce trod gently but encouragingly on his wife's foot. He felt that Oakley would be none the worse for a little cheer, and he had unbounded faith in his wife's delicacy and tact. She was just the person for such a message.

"She seemed—that is, I gathered from what she said, and it wasn't so much what she said as what she didn't say"—

Dan laughed outright, and Joyce joined in with a panic stricken chuckle. Ruth was making as bad a botch of the business as he could have made.

"I am not at all sensitive," said Dan, with sudden candor. "I have admired her immensely; I do still, for the matter of that."

"Then why don't you go there?"

"I can't, Mrs. Joyce. You know why."

"But I think she looks at it differently now."

Oakley shook his head.

"No, she doesn't. There's just one way she can look at it."

"Women are always changing their minds," persisted Ruth. It occurred to her that Constance had been at her worst in her relation with Oakley. If she cared a scrap for him, why hadn't she stood by him when he needed it most? The little artist blinked tenderly at his wife. He was lost in admiration at her courage. He would not have dared to give their friend this comfort.

The conversation languished. They heard the strains of the band when the meeting at the rink broke up and the voices of the people on the street, and then there was silence again.

CHAPTER XVI.

THE hot days dragged on. Dan and his father moved down to the shops. Two cots were placed in the pattern room, where they slept and where Roger Oakley spent most of his time reading his Bible or in brooding over the situation. Their meals were brought to them from the hotel. It was not that Dan suspected the men of any sinister intentions, but he felt it was just as well that they should understand the utter futility of any lawlessness, and, besides, his father was much happier in the solitude of the empty shops than he could have been elsewhere in Antioch. All day long he followed McClintock about, helping with such odd jobs as were necessary to keep the machinery in perfect order. He was completely crushed and broken in spirit. He had aged too.

At the office Dan saw only Holt and McClintock. Sick of Kerr's presence and exasperated at his evident sympathy for the strikers—a sympathy he was at no pains to conceal—he had laid him off, a step that was tantamount to dismissal. Miss Walton was absent on her vacation, which he extended from week to week. It was maddening to him to have her around with nothing to do, for he and Holt found it difficult to keep decently busy themselves now the shops had closed.

Holloway, the vice president of the road, visited Antioch just once during the early days of the strike. He approved—being of an approving disposition—of all Oakley had done and then went back home to Chicago, after telling him not to yield a single point in the fight.

"We've got to starve 'em into submission," said this genial soul. "There's nothing like an empty stomach to sap a man's courage, especially when he's got a houseful of hungry, squalling brats. I don't know but what you'd better arrange to get in foreigners. Americans are too independent."

But Oakley was opposed to this. "The men will be glad enough to accept the new scale of wages a little later, and the lesson won't be wasted on them."

"Yes, I know, but the question is, do we want 'em? I wish Cornish was here. I think he'd advise some radical move. He's all fight."

Oakley, however, was devoutly thankful that the general was in England, where he hoped he would stay. He had no wish to see the men ruined. A wholesome lesson would suffice. He was much relieved when the time arrived to escort Holloway to his train.

All this while the Herald continued its attacks, but Dan no longer minded them. Nothing Ryder could say could augment his unpopularity. It had reached its finality. He never guessed that, indirectly at least, Constance Emory was responsible for by far the greater part of Ryder's present bitterness. She objected to his partisanship of the men, and this only served to increase his verbal intemperance; but, in spite of the antagonism of their views, they remained friends. Constance was willing to endure much from Ryder that she would have resented from any one else. She liked him, and she was sorry for him; he seemed unhappy, and she imagined he suffered as she herself suffered and from the same cause. There was still another motive for her forbearance which, perhaps, she did not realize. The strike and Oakley had become a mania with the editor, and from him she was able to learn what Dan was doing.

The unpopularity of his son was a source of infinite grief to Roger Oakley, the more so as he took the burden of it on his own shoulders. He brooded over it until presently he decided that he would have a talk with Ryder and explain matters to him and ask him to discontinue his abuse of Dan. There was a streak in the old convict's mind which was hardly sane, for no man spends the best years of his life in prison and comes out as clear headed as he goes in.

As he pottered about the shops with McClintock he meditated on his project. He was sure if he could show Ryder where he was wrong and unfair he would hasten to make amends. It never occurred to him that Ryder had merely followed in the wake of public opinion, giving it definite expression.

One evening—and he chose the hour when he knew Antioch would be at supper and the streets deserted—he stole from the shops without telling Dan where he was going, as he had a shrewd idea that he would put a veto on his scheme did he know of it.

With all his courage his pace slackened as he approached the Herald office. He possessed unbounded respect for print and still greater respect for the man who spoke in print.

The door stood open, and he looked in over the top of his steel bowed spectacles. The office was dark and shadowy, but from an inner room, where the presses stood, a light shone. While he hesitated the half grown boy who was Griff's chief assistant came from the office. Roger Oakley placed a hand on his shoulder.

"Is Mr. Ryder in, sonny?" he asked.

"Yes, he's in the back room, where you see the light."

"Thank you."

He found Ryder busy making up by the light of a single dingy lamp, for the Herald went to press in the morning. Griff gave a start of surprise when he saw who his visitor was. Then he said sharply, "Well, sir, what can I do for you?"

It was the first time the old convict and the editor had met, and Roger Oakley, peering over his spectacles, studied Ryder's face in his usual slow fashion. At last he said, "I hope I am not intruding, Mr. Ryder, for I'd like to speak with you."

"Then be quick about it," snapped Griff. "Don't you see I'm busy?"

With the utmost deliberation the old convict took from his pocket a large red and yellow bandanna handkerchief. Then he removed his hat and wiped his face and neck with elaborate thoroughness. When he finally spoke he dropped his voice to an impressive whisper. "I don't think you understand Dannie, Mr. Ryder, or the reasons for the trouble down at the shops."

"Don't I? Well, I'll be charmed to hear your explanation." And he put down the rule with which he had been measuring one of the printed columns on the table before him.

Without being asked Roger Oakley seated himself in a chair by the door. He placed his hat and handkerchief on a corner of the table and took off his spectacles, which he put into their case. Ryder watched him with curious interest.

"I knew we could settle this, Mr. Ryder," said he, with friendly simplicity. "You've been unfair to my son. That was because you did not understand. When you do I am certain you will do what you can to make right the wrong you have done him."

A vicious, sinister smile wreathed Ryder's lips. He nodded. "Go on."

"Dannie's done nothing to you to make you wish to hurt him, for you are hurting him. He doesn't admit it, but I know."

"I hope so," said Ryder tersely. "I should hate to think my energy had been entirely wasted."

A look of pained surprise crossed Roger Oakley's face. He was quite shocked at the un-Christian feeling Griff was displaying. "No, you don't mean that!" he made haste to say. "You can't mean it."

"Can't I?" cynically.

Roger Oakley stole a glance from under his thick, bushy eyebrows at the editor. He wondered if an apt quotation from the Scriptures would be of any assistance. The moral logic with which he had intended to overwhelm him had somehow gone astray. He presented the singular spectacle of a man who was in the wrong and who knew he was in the wrong and was yet determined to persist in it.

Ryder staggered back.

"There's something I'll tell you that I haven't told any one else." He glanced again at Ryder to see the effect of the proposed confidence, and again the latter nodded for him to go on.

"I am going away. I haven't told my son yet, but I've got it all planned, and when I am gone you won't have any reason to hate Dannie, will you?"

"That's an admirable idea, Mr. Oakley, and if Dannie, as you call him, has half your good sense he'll follow your example."

"No; he can't leave. He must stay. He's the manager of the road," with evident pride. "He's got to stay, but I'll go. Won't that do just as well?" a little anxiously, for he could not fathom the look on Ryder's dark face. Ryder only gave him a smile in answer, and he continued hurriedly:

"You see, the trouble's been about me and my working in the shops. If I hadn't come here there'd have been no strike. As for Dannie, he's made a man of himself. You don't know and I don't know how hard he's worked and how faithful he's been. What I've done mustn't reflect on him. It all happened when he was a little boy—so high," extending his hand.

"Mr. Oakley," said Ryder coldly and insultingly, "I propose, if I can, to make this town too hot to hold your son, and I am grateful to you for the unconscious compliment you have paid me by this visit."

"Dannie don't know I came," quickly.

"No, I don't suppose he does. I take it it was an inspiration of your own."

Roger Oakley had risen from his seat.

"What's Dannie ever done to you?" he asked, with just the least perceptible tremor in his tones.

Ryder shrugged his shoulders. "We don't need him in Antioch."

The old man mastered his wrath and said gently:

"You can't afford to be unfair, Mr. Ryder. No one can afford to be unfair. You are too young a man to persevere in what you know to be wrong."

To maintain his composure required a great effort. In the riotous days of his youth he had concluded most arguments in which he had become involved with his fists. Aged and broken, his religion overlay his still vigorous physical strength but thinly, as a veneer. He squared his massive shoulders and stood erect, like a man in his prime, and glowered heavily on the editor.

"I trust you have always been able to make right your guiding star," retorted Ryder jeeringly. The anger instantly faded from the old convict's face. He was recalled to himself.

Ordinarily—that is, in the presence of others—Ryder would have felt bound to treat Roger Oakley with the deference due to his years. Alone, as they were, he was restrained by no such obligation. He was in an ugly mood, and he proceeded to give it rein.

"I wish you'd mind your own business," he said suddenly. "What do you mean by coming here to tell me what I ought to do? If you want to know, I'll tell you what I'm going to do. I am going to hound you and that precious son of yours out of this part of the country."

The old man straightened up again as Ryder spoke. The restraint of years dropped from him in a twinkling. He told him he was a scoundrel, and he prefaced it with an oath, a slip he did not notice in his excitement.

"Hey! What's that?"

"You're a scoundrel!" repeated Roger Oakley, white with rage. He took a step around the table and came nearer the editor. "I don't know but what I ought to break every bone in your body! You are trying to ruin my son!" He hit the table a mighty blow with his clinched fist and, thrusting his head forward, glared into Ryder's face.

"You have turned his friends against him. Why, he ain't got none left any more. They have all gone over to the other side. And you done it, you done it, and it's got to stop!"

Ryder had been taken aback for the moment by Roger Oakley's fierce anger, which vibrated in his voice and flashed in his dark, sunken eyes.

"Get out of here!" he shouted, losing control of himself. "Get out or I'll kick you out!"

"When I'm ready to go I'll leave," retorted the old man calmly, "and that will be when I've said my say."

"You'll go now." And he shoved him in the direction of the door. The shove was almost a blow, and as it fell on his broad chest Roger Oakley gave a hoarse, inarticulate cry and struck out with his heavy hand. Ryder staggered back, caught at the end of the table as he plunged past it and fell his length upon the floor. The breath whistled sharply from the old man's lips. "There," he muttered, "you'll keep your hands off!"

Ryder did not speak or move. All was hushed and still in the room. Suddenly a nervous chill seized the old convict. He shook from head to heel.

"I didn't mean to hit you," he said, speaking to the prostrate figure at his feet. "Here, let me help you."

He stooped and felt around on the floor until he found Ryder's hand. He released it instantly to take the lamp from the table. Then he knelt beside the editor. In the corner where the latter lay stood a rusty wood stove. In his fall Griff's head had struck against it.

The lamp shook in Roger Oakley's hand like a leaf in a gale. Ryder's eyes were open and seemed to look into his own with a mute reproach. For the rest he lay quite limp, his head twisted to one side. The old man felt of his heart. One or two minutes elapsed. His bearing was one of feverish intensity. He heard three men loiter by on the street and the sound of their footfalls die off in the distance, but Ryder's heart had ceased to beat. Fully convinced of this, he returned the lamp to the table and, sitting down in the chair by the door, covered his face with his hands and sobbed aloud.

Over and over he murmured: "I've killed him, I've killed him! Poor boy, poor boy! I didn't go to do it!"

Presently he got up and made a second examination. The man was dead past every doubt. His first impulse was to surrender himself to the town marshal, as he had done once before under similar circumstances.

Then he thought of Dan.

No; he must escape, and perhaps it would never be known who had killed Ryder. His death might even be attributed to an accident. In his excitement he forgot the boy he had met at the door. That incident had passed entirely from his mind, and he did not remember the meeting until days afterward.

He had been utterly indifferent to his own danger, but now he extinguished the lamp and made his way cautiously into the outer room and peered into the street. As he crouched in the darkness by the door he heard the town bell strike the hour. He counted the strokes. It was 8 o'clock. An instant later and he was hurrying down the street, fleeing from the ghastly horror of the white, upturned face and the eyes, with their look of mute reproach.

When he reached the railroad track at the foot of Main street he paused irresolutely.

"If I could see Dannie once more, just once more!" he muttered under his breath, but he crossed the tracks with a single longing look turned toward the shops, a black blur in the night a thousand yards distant.

Main street became a dusty country road south of the tracks. He left it at this point and skirted a cornfield, going in the direction of the creek.

At the shops Dan had waited supper for his father until half past 7, when he decided he must have gone uptown, probably to the Joyces'. So he had eaten his supper alone. Then he drew his chair in front of an open window and lighted his pipe. It was very hot in the office, and by and by he carried his lamp into the pattern room, where he and his father slept. He arranged their two cots, blew out the light, which seemed to add to the heat, partly undressed and lay down. He heard the town bell strike 8 and then the half hour. Shortly after this he must have fallen asleep, for all at once he awoke with a start. From off in the night a confusion of sounds reached him. The town bell was ringing the alarm. At first he thought it was a fire, but there was no light in the sky, and the bell rang on and on.

He got up and put on his coat and hat and started out.

PROMINENT CANADIAN ARTIST RESTORED BY BILEANS

Below is given the testimony of a famous artist whose health has been restored by Bileans. If you are ailing to-day, scores of preparations claim your attention. Why should you prefer Bileans? There are several reasons. First, because they are specially compounded from rare vegetable essences. Then because they act directly on the most important organs of the body—the liver and stomach. Because they are mild in operation. Because medical practitioners, artists, nurses, housewives and men and women of wide experience have proved over and over again that Bileans permanently cure all liver and stomach disorders. Because Headache, Indigestion, Biliousness, Female Ailments, Constipation, Piles, etc., all originate from a certain morbid condition of the liver, digestive system and blood. Bileans cure these and other ailments by getting right back at the root cause and correcting matters there. Now note Mr. Hand's experience below:—

Mr. Arthur R. Hand, of Woodgreen Place, Toronto, the well known artist and teacher of painting on glass, china, etc., says:—I was very ill some months ago with acute Indigestion and Liver Disorder. Attacks of pain followed food. There was a constant feeling of uncomfortable fullness in the stomach, pains in the chest and under the shoulder blades and rifting and belching of gas.

I had constipation so badly that no medicines seemed to have any effect on the bowels. I dieted a great deal, but the slightest food brought the same distress. You can well imagine that as I did not digest my food properly my strength rapidly left me. I was very weak and emaciated when Bileans were brought to my attention but I determined to give them a trial. From the first few doses I got a little relief and I persevered with the remedy, giving it a fair trial. I left off everything else and in a short time found a wonderful difference. Each day I got better and better, and in the end Bileans cured me completely. Now my food digests very nicely and my bowels act quite naturally.

"Before I took Bileans my food did me no good, and I was losing weight rapidly. In a few months, through the use of this valuable remedy, my weight increased from 125 to 165 lbs. This increase, too, is not useless fat, but sound, healthy flesh."

Kidney Disease and Sick Headache Completely Cured

Just as the foregoing case shows how effective Bileans are in case of Indigestion, Constipation and allied ailments, the following experience of a British Columbia man and his wife shows their value in cases of kidney disease. When the kidneys are diseased, impurities are forced into the blood which should be expelled from the system, and being carried to the head by the circulation cause sick headache, nausea, dizziness, etc.

W. B. Haines, of Shortreed, B. C., says:—"My wife and I have been taking Bileans for some time. They have cured me of Kidney trouble and my wife of sick headache. I had had kidney trouble for 20 years, but now believe that I am entirely cured. Please find enclosed $2.50, for which send me six boxes of Bileans. I believe they are a splendid family medicine."

Bileans Cure

Talks on Orange Meat

(THE PURE FOOD)

Oven Perfection.

If you are a woman, you would revel in the huge ovens that cook Orange Meat. Much of the crisp deliciousness of Orange Meat is due to their matchless baking.

After the wheat has been cleared, steam cooked, malted and flaked—the moist flakes are conveyed by automatic carriers to the ovens.

Endless steel screens carry the flakes back and forth, toasting each flake to a rich, golden brown—the final stage in our peerless process of converting a grain of wheat into the most perfect food known to science.

As the major part of every meal for thin people—dyspeptics—"bloodless" folk—those whose systems are "all run down"—and especially for children—Orange Meat has a place that nothing else can satisfy.

A lady in Walkerton says:—"Orange Meat is very wholesome. My brother at 81 years old, has taken a great liking to it, and I am glad, as it seems such a light wholesome food. I would recommend to those afflicted with stomach trouble."

At all grocers in 15c. and 25c. packages. Every 15c. package contains a coupon, good for premiums. 25c. or "Jumbo" package contains 2½ times the quantity of 15c. size. Write "Orange Meat, Kingston," for new premium catalogue.

WINTER MANAGEMENT.

This winter the demand for fresh-laid eggs for market is more urgent than ever before, and prices are so enticing that every one would like to have the full egg basket to carry to market as many times a week as possible. It costs about one dollar a year on the average to feed a hen. When this hen produces but five eggs a month, she is kept at a loss. When she produces 12 eggs per month, she is kept at a profit. The difference in egg production comes from two distinct causes—the natural ability of the hen, and the proper care and management.

Hens past the second year should never be kept in hope of receiving much of an egg yield. In keeping poultry for exhibition or for production, exhibition fowls, we have known hens six or seven years old to be most valuable. When, however, the egg question is considered, it is only profitable to keep those that lay more than enough to pay their own keep. In selecting the hens, choose the pullets and the yearling hens; keep nothing older than these. Do not keep and feed an unnecessary number of males. Outside of this, clean up and sell to market all not needed for home consumption. Some people keep a lot of poultry around their place growing older and older every year that are utterly worthless. Often these same people sell to the hucksters all the best and finest-grown young stock of the year. In other words, they are selling all the golden ears of grain from their poultry crop, and keeping the husks and shucks.

The natural surroundings of spring and summer life induce the largest egg yield. Cold weather reduces it. Means must be applied partially, at least, to overcome the effects of the cold weather. This is best accomplished through a comfortable interior to the poultry houses, sanded floors covered with plenty of litter, southern exposure and a comfortable place for the hens to scratch and hunt for all their grain food, which should be strewn in the litter for the purpose of giving them natural exercise. This litter should not be less than eight inches deep on the floor; if 12 or 14 inches deep, so much the better, provided it is perfectly dry. Whenever litter becomes damp or moist, it should be replaced with dry litter at once.

The surprising statement has been made lately that compulsory exercise during the winter does not increase the egg yield. This is in opposition to the results obtained by those who have perfectly dry floors strewn with dry litter for the hens to scratch in one apartment, fed their grain on an earth floor without the exercise of scratching, have not produced one-third as many eggs as a lot of hens in the next apartment, under the other conditions. Where the hens are fed their food on the ground, they quickly eat it, sit down in idleness and grow fat, while the hens that hunt and scratch for their grain gain increased vigor from the exercise, which is conducive to a larger egg yield.

Feed the hens in winter a plentiful ration of wheat and oats (mostly wheat) a small percentage of cracked corn, millet seed, buckwheat and other small grain. Add meat in some form, either the granulated beef scrap or cut green bone. What you want is less fat and more blood and egg-forming food. Nothing adds so much to the egg yield as cut green bone or meat of some kind.

Egg-eating by poultry and the plucking and eating of their feathers are said to be alarmingly on the increase. If so, it is entirely the fault of the management and care bestowed on the poultry. Egg-eating is the result of idleness and lack of proper appliances in the poultry houses. Nests for laying hens should always be so constructed that when the hen goes up on the nest to lay (as she should do, nests never being allowed to rest on the ground or floor), she should be hidden away out of sight of the other fowls. The nest should be in the dark and concealed and not in the bright, open light. After the hen has laid her egg, she will naturally come out of the nest into the house. The habit of eating eggs comes from one of several conditions: Eggs frozen in the nest and bursting open, or knocked out of the nest on the floor and broken; hens confined in the poultry house, becoming reckless, pick at everything they see. When the hens learn the habit, it is hard indeed to break them of it.

The plucking and eating of feathers is another bad habit which comes from neglecting to feed the poultry properly and keeping fowls in close confinement in idleness. Often poultry shut up in coops to be fattened, both males and females, will pluck at each other's feathers. This begins in picking idly at one another. Perchance a feather full of blood is picked at, and the habit is started. The way to prevent this is to keep them plentifully supplied with grit, shell-forming food and meat, and to make them work. A little salt in their food supplies the want of soda in their system. Plenty of egg shell or lime of some kind is better.

THE BRONZE TURKEY

Is the handsomest as well as the largest of turkeys. They are characterized by size and beautiful plumage. They have a long, graceful neck, a broad and full breast, a deep, well-rounded body, drooping wings, and a large fan-like tail, the color being a dark lustrous bronze on the back, neck and tail, with deep, black breast and body, which is penciled with white. The cock turkey is very much larger than the hen, and the sexes usually weigh about 27 pounds for the males and 16 pounds for the females, but as high as 50 pounds have been reached. The object in using this variety has been to attain size, for a specimen weighing 30 pounds will realize per pound more than one-half that weight. This is merely a question of fancy, for many prefer one which is 12 to 15 pounds rather than bigger birds. Still, this demand is one which pays producers.

Turkeys have the right of way in the holiday markets, and special attention should be given to preparing them for the occasion. Let them run and feed liberally on corn and wheat. Market only such as are now in prime condition, the rest will be ready in time for shipment. Fat, heavy stock is always preferred and should be dry plucked for shipping. Poultry should be thoroughly dry and cold, but not frozen; the animal heat should be entirely out of the body before packing.

MACHINE FEEDING FOR MARKET.

The machine feeding of chickens has been only recently introduced, but is already carried on extensively on a scope and method never attempted in Europe, where the artificial fattening plan has been in operation for many years. Most of the machine feeding is carried on by large packing and provision concerns in Western cities.

One of the largest and most up-to-date of these is at East St. Louis, where the chicken feeding establishment has a capacity for 12,000 birds at a time. These are known as specially milk-fed chickens, and bring in wholesale lots 25 cents a pound. These establishments are continually receiving large shipments of poultry from the farms in an unfinished condition, or at best, only partly fattened. From these are selected a certain number considered best fit for the artificial feeding purposes. The others are killed, dressed and packed in the ordinary manner for the regular trade. Those which are young, vigorous and healthy, yellow-legged, and which "stand up" well are sorted out for the milk-feeding station. Their food is described as the combination of skimmilk or buttermilk, fine ground grain and ground parched meat. The food is prepared and mixed in large lots so as to ensure uniformity.

The chickens are given two meals daily, the feeder using a give-gallon food holder, with a rubber tube which is thrust down the chicken's throat and by use of valves just enough food forced down for a meal. Two feeds are given the chickens daily, and after each feeding the house is darkened so that the chickens remain quiet while the food is being digested. The chickens are weighed and inspected daily and those which seem not to be doing well are sorted out and rejected. Some of the birds cannot stand the artificial feeding until fully finished, which is at the end of 21 days. The heavy feed without exercise makes the meat very soft, tender and juicy and of a very high table quality.

When fattened the chickens are sorted into broilers and roasters, according to size, and taken to the killing department. After killing, packing and dressing, they are rolled separately in parchment paper and packed in boxes containing a dozen birds each, after which they are put in boxes until wanted for sale.

THE VETERINARIAN.

Bovine Tuberculosis.

At the meeting of the State Dairymen's Association at Elmira last week Dr. Veranus A. Moore of Cornell University read an interesting and thoroughgoing address on "The Control of Bovine Tuberculosis," which we summarize briefly, as giving the latest professional conclusions on the best method of treating and diminishing the spread of the dread disease.

The situation, as Dr. Moore pointed out, has entirely changed since the old days of the campaign of slaughter, because it has been found that the disease can't be stamped out in that way—"it was so widespread that appropriations to carry out the method could not be secured from legislatures," and it called for an unwarranted waste of property in many cases. It is generally admitted now that the best way to be rid of it in one's herd is to get a herd into which it has not entered. The chief problem concerns prevention, and the first step toward prevention is the recognition that tuberculosis is a specific infectious disease. Without the tubercle bacterium there is no tuberculosis. Poor sanitary conditions do not cause it, or the best of care cure it when once established. The dirt gives the bacilli a better chance, and its absence does the same for the cattle; but we should remember that the disease is caused by the bacterium and not by the dirt. This bacterium works through the destruction of organs by its multiplication; it therefore works slowly, and disastrously in proportion as the organ attacked is vital. If the tuberculous process starts in a vital organ, as the liver, kidneys or lungs, it takes very much less development to kill the animal than where the growth starts on the pleura, peritoneum or some remote lymphatic gland. Hence animals that are in good flesh and appear in good condition may be found on post-mortem examination to be literally filled with tubercular nodules, while those that seem to be suffering severely may have few lesions, restricted to a small area in some vital organ. Hence the tuberculin test is the only way in which the disease can be diagnosed, excepting in advanced stages or where the lesions are located in organs where they can be discovered, as in the udder.

Consumption is less deadly than it used to be. Certain relief and usually complete recovery will result from the following treatment:

Hope, rest, fresh air, and—Scott's Emulsion.

ALL DRUGGISTS; 50c. AND $1.00.

The disease is spread by the escape of the bacteria from diseased animals. This occurs from the lungs or glands in the throat, and are spread by the saliva or droolings from the mouth. They may be discharged into the intestinal tract, from which they are expelled with the intestinal contents. It often happens that they escape with the urine and milk. One of the most prolific means of disseminating the disease in a dairy herd is the infection of calves with unsterilized milk of tuberculous cows. Other species, especially swine, are frequently infected in this manner. The meat of diseased animals may be eaten with safety, provided the lesions are slight, calcified or encapsulated and restricted in their distribution to certain organs.

Admitting the terrible prevalence of the disease, the problem before each cattle owner is to stop up the channels through which it may enter his herd. Two of these channels deserve special mention. First, the feeding of calves with the separated milk from tuberculous cows taken from creameries which receive milk from such animals, either consciously or otherwise. There are many illustrations of this means of dissemination of the disease. To illustrate, a dairyman in this state was feeding separated milk from a herd that was subsequently found to be heavily infected with tuberculosis. As a result, 62 of his 74 calves were tuberculous. The second and perhaps more common means of introducing the disease is the buying of tuberculous cattle. Sterilize the milk fed to calves, unless it is known that the animals from which it came are free from this disease. Never buy a cow without having her tuberculin tested by a person competent to interpret the results of the test and to see that all of the conditions necessary for it are complied with. Do not bring in an animal, whether she reacts or not, from a herd in which tuberculosis is known to exist.

But suppose that tuberculosis has already entered the herd. What shall the dairyman do? He cannot afford to go on selling the milk from tuberculosis cows, and yet to kill all his diseased animals would too often literally put him out of business. Yet he must either do this, or resort to what is known as the Bang method, the object of which is to replenish a tuberculous herd with as little loss as possible. It requires that all animals that show physical symptoms of the disease shall be destroyed. Those which give a tuberculin reaction, but which exhibit no evidence on physical examination of their being tuberculous, are isolated and kept for breeding purposes. The reacting animals are carefully watched, and if any of them ddevelop obnoxious symptoms of the disease, they are slaughtered. The stables from which the diseased animals are removed should be thoroughly disinfected. The offspring from the reacting cows are promptly removed from their dams, and fed milk from non-reacting cows, or the pasteurized (heated to a temperature of 185 degrees) milk from the reacting ones. The milk of the isolated cows after pasteurization is also used for human food. If any of the isolated cattle give evidence of the disease advancing, such as enlarged glands or emaciation, they are slaughtered. The non-reacting animals are tested from time to time, and if any individuals react, they are placed with the isolated ones. The calves that are raised from the reacting cows and which fail to react to tuberculin are placed in the sound herd.

This Band method has been employed with great success in Hungary, Norway and Sweden, at our Wisconsin Experiment Station, by the Hon. W. C. Edwards, of Rockland, Ont., and in other instances. In the country of its original application, Denmark, Prof. Bang encountered as bad a condition as would be found anywhere, over 35 per cent. of the dairy cows having reacted to the test; yet the disease has been so far controlled by this system of elimination that it is about to disappear. It is adapted to the natural tendencies of the disease, and its recommendation to our dairymen is warranted.—In the Country Gentleman.

NOTES.

Milk growers seldom get very rich with good cows and cheap milk, but such a combination is better than poor cows and dear milk.

No, one cannot get rich through the dairy business, and yet when that mortgage is raised at last, probably it will have been the cow that did most of it.

Veterinary doctors all seem to be doing a good business, whether located in the country or city. That is, the trained ones, in whom stock owners can place confidence. It is likely that no profession offers better chances for young men of scientific taste than veterinary science.

The milk pail affords the best test of pedigree for the farmer who buys his cattle and raises no young stock. But when it is decided to raise the calf it is important to know about the granddam and great granddam. If they were scrubs on both sides, the chances are against the calf, no matter how good the mother may be.

Some farmers still will have nothing to do with a silo, and sometimes they are right. Farmers who have raised nothing but hay all their lives, and whose land is wet, heavy, natural grass land and rocky pastures, will do well to hold on to their hay crop and let the boys experiment with ensilage. But in general those who oppose silos either have not tended them at all, or have tried them in a very blundering way.

DOMESTIC HINTS.

Orange Jelly.

Grate the rind of one orange into a basin, squeeze on to it the juice of five oranges and one lemon; put this into a pan with six ounces of loaf sugar, the whites and shells of two eggs, and whisk it all lightly together; add 1 1-2 pints hot water and one ounce gelatine; let it boil up, then pass it through the jelly bag; pour into a mould that has been soaked in cold water.

Brown Bread.

One cup Indian meal, one cup rye meal, one cup flour, mixed together. Add one-half cup of sour milk, one-fourth cup molasses, pinch of salt, heaping teaspoonful soda, dissolved in warm water; mix thoroughly. Our grandmothers used their hands to mix brown bread. Add warm water to make a thin batter and bake one hour in tin cans. Be sure to bake in small cans; the little round slices look appetizing and taste like the brown bread of brick oven fame.

Chapped Hands

Wash your hands with warm water, dry with a towel and apply Chamberlain's Salve just before going to bed and a speedy cure is certain. This salve is always invaluable for sore nipples, itching piles and skin diseases. To be had at R. Templeton & Co.'s drug Store.

HALLIDAY'S BRIDE

By Louise Merrifield

Copyright, 1906, by M. M. Cunningham

O'Donnell hailed the bus at Twenty-sixth street. It would take him to the door of the bank and give him time to read the letter over again.

He did not know how long he had stood on the corner, her letter crushed in one hand, his eyes staring at the passing vehicles and people. The letter had been delayed. She had mailed it over two weeks before in Brittany, and less than a week ago he had read of her marriage to Halliday—merely a brief four or five lines in the cable dispatches concerning noted Americans abroad. But she had written him that letter a week before the marriage.

The bus stopped in front of him to let a passenger alight. Half unconsciously he accepted the invitation of its open swinging door and slipped into the corner seat as it swung on leisurely up the avenue. There were three other occupants of the bus, all women. He did not look at them. Just at that particular moment he did not feel kindly toward the sex.

Smoothing out the double sheet of pale gray note paper, he reread the letter from Penelope Graham.

> You dear old boy, aren't you ashamed to be so selfish? We sail on the 20th. Is not that early enough? You have begrudged me every day of this last chance of mine to take a fling at the world as a lone old maid. In every letter you beg me to take the next boat back. And, really, Jack, I know it will make you feel worse, but we are having a splendid time! Uncle Rex and the girls met us in Paris and will go up to Holland with Aunt Nan as soon as Bess and I start for home. It has been a glorious trip, and when I think that next year it will be you and I drifting together through all these dear little old world corners seeing the things we both love, why, do you know, I have even kept a notebook that will serve as our guide, so as not to miss one single place or picture that I want you to see! Next year, Jack! Won't we be old married people then, though! Uncle Rex says I don't act a bit like a young person about to be married in three weeks, but it doesn't seem like a coming shock at all—just part of the drifting and glorious happiness of life these days.
> Bess and I are to sail on the 20th. Will you meet us? I know you will, of course, but I can hardly wait to catch the first glimpse of you. Oh, dear boy, sometimes I am half afraid of my own joy and the perfect peace of it! Love is tempestuous, Bess says, and uncertain and full of wavers and quavers and troubles and bubbles, and I am only happy. But Bess has never been in love, so she cannot know. Three weeks! Mamma thinks white chrysanthemums will make the prettiest decoration for the chapel and ferns instead of palms—

O'Donnell read no further. Something blinded his sight; something seemed to grip his throat and choke him. She had written that letter to him and then married Halliday a week later.

The bus halted and one of the women stepped by him. He held the door open mechanically. She was old and dressed in a white embroidered Eton suit, with a fine white mesh veil, spotted daintily in black, drawn over her wrinkles. To O'Donnell she looked like the incarnation of feminine inconsistency.

Halliday, Stephen Halliday! Pen had mentioned him in her steamer letter when they had crossed in June, merely mentioned that he was on board also and that her uncle was glad to see him. He must be about thirty-seven, a mighty decent sort of fellow, of course, but not for Pen, his Pen, with her sensitive ways and dear, precious, unspoiled illusions and ideals of life in general and men in particular.

Yesterday had been the 20th, when he was to have met her. He had seen by the papers that the Sirius was in, and among the list of passengers were Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Halliday. They must have caught the first boat out of Cherbourg.

O'Donnell opened the door a second time to let another woman out at Forty-second street. He did not notice what she was like. His head whirled dizzily, as though he were on the end of a long rope circling through space. It was foolish to lose his grip just because a girl had thrown him over—idiotic. He would get through with the bank and take a run out of town to freshen up, to forget.

At the next corner the last woman alighted. She wore a white chiffon veil and appeared to be in a hurry. O'Donnell sighed in relief to know he was alone and looked about him. And then he started, every nerve tense and taut, for on the floor of the bus, almost at his feet, lay the little gold mesh coin purse that he had given Penelope before she left for Europe.

Before he had lifted it in his hand he was positive, even before he saw her initials on the top band. It had a curious little ring on the chain to slip over the finger, a dull gold circle set in diamonds. For a moment he held the purse stupidly, staring at it with hungry, eager eyes. It was hers; she had held it in her hand a moment ago.

Suddenly reason began to lighten and he remembered the woman with the chiffon veil. It was she, of course. He had not noticed. She had been in a hurry, naturally. Probably she had recognized him and dreaded their meeting. Without signaling for the bus to stop he swung down the steps to the street and started headlong back to Forty-third street, looking for a woman with a white chiffon veil.

She was nowhere in sight, but he kept on. If it were Penelope he would find her somehow. And suddenly as he passed the postal station one of the swinging doors opened and she came out, tall, slender, dressed in gray, with the white chiffon veil over her face.

"Pen!" he exclaimed. "Pen, darling"—

And then the white veil was raised and he found himself looking into Bess' dancing, laughing blue eyes and holding her extended hands in his.

"Don't shout on the street, Jack," she said merrily. "Walk decently and orderly with me to the depot. Mamma's waiting for me there. We thought you were dead or something. Why didn't you show up at the boat yesterday? Didn't you get Pen's letter?"

"Pen—yes, I got the letter." O'Donnell stumbled at the curb and righted himself with an effort. "I also saw the press dispatches. That's why I thought perhaps my appearance at the boat wasn't necessary. Rather sudden, wasn't it?"

"Sudden? Was it in the papers here?" Bess stopped and gasped. "But it couldn't be. We never told a soul, and we caught the night train out of Paris and the early steamer from Cherbourg. And no one knew, not even Pen. Why, mamma didn't know until she met Steve and me yesterday."

O'Donnell stared at her. The long rope was beginning to swing him perilously around again. He took Bess by the arm and led her under an awning at the corner in the shade.

"Where's Pen?" he asked quietly, very quietly.

"Why, at home, of course. Where would she be, goose? How white and odd you look, Jack! Pen came with us. Of course she didn't approve. Pen never could see anything interesting in love mania, you know, and it was perfectly useless trying to make her understand an elopement. But why on earth didn't you meet us yesterday? Pen thinks you're dead or lost. She phoned the office, and they said you hadn't been there since Saturday."

"I had not. I only went back today," answered O'Donnell slowly. "Somebody must have got hold of the elopement and cabled it here, but they made a little mistake in the names. They said that Miss Penelope Graham was married to Stephen Halliday."

"Oh, how perfectly killing, Jack!" Bess gave one of her crazy little girlish cries. "And you thought, you poor old boy—why, of course you must have thought—but, then, how could you ever think that Steve would want to marry Pen instead of me?"

"Wasn't it absurd?" murmured O'Donnell abstractedly, looking at the depot clock. "And Pen is out home at Glenwood"—

"No. Did I say she was? You know I'm half crazy these days. Steve says it's permissible. Pen's right here in the depot with mamma waiting for me. I wanted to see Steve before we left town, and they went on ahead. Steve's coming out on the 5:35 with papa. Oh, Jack, just think, you and Steve will be brothers now!"

"Yes?" muttered O'Donnell under his breath, and they entered the depot, where Penelope was waiting.

Oysters Scarce

Owing to a strike among the shuckers at Christmas, oysters have been very scarce. Since that time we were not able to get our supply. Now that they have gone back to work again, our supply is coming more regularly and we will be in a position to fill our orders with the finest oysters obtainable.

Our trade is large and you run no risk of getting stale goods.

Second Sight and Mirage.

Has "second sight" any relation to the phenomena of mirage? The following anecdote suggests that second sight may be the result of "refraction of events" in a normal way. The Rev. ——, a celebrated scholar, who tells the tale, was fishing Loch Leven with Lord ——. They were out of sight of the little wooden pier whence the boats start. Mr. —— remarked that Lord —— was gazing with a strange and startled expression across the loch. "What is the matter?" he asked. "We are out of sight of the pier, are we not?" answered Lord ——. "Certainly we are," said Mr. ——. "Well, I saw the pier and a boat coming in, with a very tall, heavy man lying in it. The boatman lifted him on to the pier with difficulty. He seemed to be dead." Returning at sunset, the angler found that a heavy fisher had died suddenly in his boat and been lifted to the pier at the moment when Lord —— saw the thing happen.

Could this be a case of natural refraction, as when a friend of mine, walking down Market street, St. Andrews, with his back to the cathedral, saw the cathedral facing him? Much amazed, he asked a passerby if he saw anything unusual. "Man, I see the cathedral!" said the other. The vision was shared, but Mr. —— did not share the vision of Lord ——.
—Andrew Lang in London Illustrated News.

The Value of Literary Criticism.

Has literary criticism any value? A contemplation of its blunders almost makes one hesitate to say "Yes." The history of literature, ancient and modern, shows that if Homer sometimes nods Aristarchus is still oftener found napping. The oracles of criticism, like all others, have erred in all ages and never more egregiously than when they have been most confident and most dogmatic in their judgments. To a reader who lacks imagination and taste the most exquisite poetical conceptions and expressions are like cuneiform writing or a roll from Pompeii.

J. Blanco White, speaking of a woman carrying primroses by his window, says, "They were new primroses, so blooming and so tender that it might be said that their perfume was received by the eye." This is a novel and striking thought, which only the fondest love could have suggested. But think of the scorn which the "nonsense" would elicit from a cold blooded, matter of fact reader! He would class it with the "not light, but darkness visible" of Milton or the lines in Keats' "Pot of Basil:

So the two brothers and their murdered man
Rode toward fair Florence.

—William Mathews in Success Magazine.

Old Medicines.

It is a wise thing to throw out old medicine. Keeping it is rash economy, as many drugs lose their strength, while others deteriorate and become dangerous to take. Then the same physical conditions do not often occur, and it is always safer to get a new prescription or at least have the old one freshly put up. Besides, if old bottles accumulate one is apt to forget what they contain and in an emergency seize on the wrong one, with serious results.

The Peaked Chin.

The girl with a wedge shaped face must not wear her hair spread out over her ears. This only accentuates the triangular lines. With a peaked chin it is necessary to avoid broad effects above the brows. Wave the hair at the temples and draw it up to the top of the head in soft rolls. This gives the face a delicate oval outline.

called with her young daughter to have her eyes examined. She was pale, thin, nervous, occasional vomiting, could not attend school regularly. Had taken a good deal of medicine and tried to wear THREE PAIRS OF GLASSES, the first fitted by a jeweller, the second by an ITINERANT PEDDLER, and the third by an OCULIST, all different and none giving any permanent relief. After a careful examination, an entirely different finding was the result. After verifying this by SCIENTIFIC PROOFS these glasses were given for constant wear. After four weeks her appearance and color were greatly improved, a gain in weight, stomach trouble all gone, easy, distinct vision, eyes did not tire at close work, slept well; as her mother expressed it, "acted like her other children." SULMAN AGAIN WILL WEAR GOLD CHAIN.

Spirited Contest Results In His Election by 185 Majority--Mr. Burrows Led the Aldermanic Poll--Paterson, Knox and Robinson Are Numbered With the Slain--Enthusiastic Meeting of Electors in the City Hall Last Night--Candidates Make Speeches--Ald. Sinclair Took Defeat in Manly Way--Incidents of the Meeting and Figures of Election Returns.

Another municipal election day is past and gone, and our citizens can congratulate themselves that they have elected an excellent Mayor and Council to look after their interests in 1907.

Only a fair-sized vote was polled yesterday, but the inclement weather in the afternoon had much to do with that

The Mayoralty election, as most people expected, resulted in the return of Mayor Sulman, though his opponent, Ald. Sinclair, put up the hardest kind of a fight, and did not acknowledge defeat till the last gun was fired.

Five members of last year's Council are re-elected, and five new faces will appear. A new man, Mr. S. Burrows, led the poll. The three defeated candidates are Ald. Paterson, Ald. Knox and ex-Ald. Robinson.

There were two contests for School Trustees, in Murney and Coleman wards. In Murney ward Mr. P. Harrison was elected by a handsome majority, as was Mr. Anderson in Coleman ward.

The Public Meeting.

It had been announced that the election returns would be read out in the City Hall last night, and a great crowd gathered to hear them, and incidentally hear a few speeches from the successful candidates. The City Hall was packed to the doors with one of the biggest crowds it ever held. It was a good-natured crowd, too, which sat with more or less patience till the returns were ready, in the meantime cracking jokes, singing songs and smoking all kinds of tobacco, some good, some bad, and some a little worse.

THE RETURNS READ.

It was 8.35 when City Clerk Mikel and the candidates came in from the City Clerk's office and mounted the platform. Then the Clerk read the returns, which were greeted with tremendous cheering. The returns will be found below:

The Speeches.

After giving out the figures Mr. Mikel announced that they would hear some speeches from the candidates. The crowd was quite ready.

MAYOR SULMAN.

A mighty cheer went up as the successful mayoralty candidate stepped forward. He was evidently in excellent humor. This was, he said, the proudest moment of his life. As he stood before that enthusiastic meeting, and reflected on the loyal support that had been given him; there was nothing in his heart but joy and pride after that hard-fought contest. The Mayor said he was glad the citizens had approved of his policy during the past two years. He had endeavored to do his best, and would continue to do so. Two months ago, when he decided to run for a third term, some of his friends were a little bit dubious about the result, but I felt it was all right, said the Mayor, amid laughter, "I am a lightweight, you know, and they can't keep me down." In conclusion he said he had done all he could to have the contest conducted in a fair and honorable way. (Cheers.)

ALD. SINCLAIR.

At the conclusion of the Mayor's little effort, Ald. Sinclair mounted the platform, and a perfect storm of cheers went up as he and Mayor Sulman shook hands warmly in the centre of the stage. Many a heart warmed towards the defeated candidate as he frankly and fairly congratulated his opponent on his success. There can be no denying the fact that the Chairman of Gas is a good loser. Turning to the audience he said he had not so nice a song to sing as the Mayor had sung them. For some time past he had wondered just how he would feel if he had to address the audience as a defeated candidate. Now he knew. However, he had the satisfaction of knowing that, during the six years he had served the citizens he had done his duty. (Cheers.) Ald. Sinclair then heartily congratulated Mayor Sulman and those elected with him, and hoped they would succeed in making this the best year in the city's history. In conclusion the speaker heartily and warmly thanked all those who had supported him through the contest just closed. For six years, he reiterated, he had served the citizens faithfully, and had then asked them for the Mayoralty, which they had not seen fit to give to him. Now he was done with municipal life. He stepped down and out, and would in future stay at home and attend to his business. Renewed cheers followed Ald. Sinclair as he stepped down off the platform.

ALD.-ELECT BURROWS.

The Mayor announced that they would then hear from the successful aldermanic candidates, and called on Mr. S. Burrows, who headed the poll. There were loud calls for a song, and Mr. Burrows responded with "Rule Britannia," the audience joining heartily in the chorus. Then Mr. Burrows made a few remarks—characteristic remarks, one might say. He was proud to think they had placed him at the head of the poll, and believed the citizens had an excellent Council this year. They must not expect too much of the new men. Mr. Burrows was glad to see so much interest taken in municipal affairs, and thought public meetings should be called now and then to discuss public questions. In a glowing peroration Mr. Burrows sang the praises of Belleville. We are living in no mean city, he said, and it is our duty to speak a good word for her wherever we go. "Wherever I go, gentlemen, I always try to boom Burrows of Belleville—to boom Belleville, I mean." He was a little too late, and the audience greeted Mr. Burrows' little slip with a mighty roar.

ALD. GREEN.

Ald Green claimed the Council had done the best it could since he had been an alderman, and promised that in future he would give all questions his best consideration and vote in the way he thought was right. All questions of importance, he said, should be submitted to the people. Referring to the loss of the Quinte the speaker said it was a calamity. He was in favor, if the hotel were rebuilt, of exempting it from taxation for ten years and giving it water at the actual cost of pumping.

ALD. PANTER.

Ald. Panter, when called on, arose and removed his overcoat. He liked a fight, he said, and was glad there had been no elections by acclamation. He did not like that. He wanted to hear the voice of the people. Other speakers had told of what they wanted to see done, but his hobby was the permanent paving of Front St. (Cheers.) There was talk of this being done last summer, but the property-owners on Front St. objected to a frontage tax. Perhaps they were right, but the majority of the Council did not think so. However, this was a matter which must soon be dealt with, and he hoped the citizens would continue to take the interest in public affairs they were now showing.

ALD. MARSH.

Ald. Marsh said he had tried honestly to do his best in the Council. He believed the citizens had a good Council this year, five old and five new men. He would continue to do his best in the city's interests.

ALD.-ELECT THOMPSON.

Mr. Thompson said he was a new man, and would not say much at present. He thanked the electors for putting him in fifth place, and promised that the confidence they had reposed in him would not be misplaced.

ALD.-ELECT STARLING.

Mr. Starling said this was the proudest moment of his life. He had been elected alderman 12 times before, but this election was of peculiar interest to him because it vindicated his character. He had been accused, while Tax Collector, of taking $600 of the city's money. He had been exonerated by auditors, but claimed the Council had not given him fair play, as they did not make that fact public. Therefore this election meant much to him, as it had vindicated his character. He was proud to see the citizens had confidence in him, and promised it should not be misplaced.

ALD.-ELECT ACKERMAN.

Mr. Ackerman, in a few quiet words, thanked the friends who had assisted him, practically an unknown man. He would do his best in the Council.

ALD. VERMILYEA.

Ald Vermilyea said we were all proud of Belleville and delighted at her prosperity. He believed the present prosperity would continue, and would, as an alderman and citizen, do his best to further it.

ALD.-ELECT BUTLER.

Mr. Butler said he was glad the citizens could tolerate at least one lawyer in the Council. He was not going to be a silent member, but meant to take his fair share of the talk and work. He heartily thanked those who had supported him.

THE SCHOOL TRUSTEES.

Mr. P. Harrison, school trustee-elect for Murney ward, thanked those who had so well supported him, and promised to do his best to advance the interests of education in this city.

Mr. J. H. Anderson, school trustee for Coleman ward, thanked his friends and would continue to do all he could for the city schools.

All the speakers were most warmly received by the audience.

"God Save the King" brought a memorable meeting to a close.

REVOLUTION'S PIONEER

Stephen Annikin, Former Member of the Douma, Is Dead.

Self-Made Man Who Wielded His Powers of Intellect Among the Peasants of Russia—Pioneer In Revolutionary Propaganda He Suffered Long Terms of Imprisonment and Exile—Terrorists' Sharp Trick.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 8.—The death is reported in the Province of Kiev after a long illness of Stephen Vassilievich Annikin, the foremost leader of the peasants, founder of the Group of Toil and former member of the Lower House of Parliament.

The Novoe Vremya voices its sorrow at the loss of this self-made man, who wielded the powers of his intellect among the peasants. Annikin was born a peasant, in 1864. He became a school teacher and was one of the pioneers in the revolutionary propaganda among the peasants. For this he suffered long terms of imprisonment and exile, which undermined his health.

Saved Life by a Ruse.

Odessa, Jan. 8.—Six terrorists have been saved from the gallows by resourceful revolutionists here, who conceived the bold plan of utilizing the official cipher to hoodwink the Governor-General. The terrorists were awaiting execution when the Governor-General received a cipher telegram from St. Petersburg, apparently bearing the signature of Gen. Pavloff, the military procurator, conveying the Emperor's order to commute the death sentences to hard labor for life. According to Russian law, prisoners cannot be executed once their sentences have been officially commuted.

ON SERIOUS CHARGE.

Elizabeth Jackson Alleged to Be a Destroyer of Girls.

Toronto, Jan. 8.—The arrest of Grace Cameron, the bogus cheques operator, gave the police a chance to swoop down on a house at 11 Charles street, kept by Mrs. Elizabeth Jackson, when several men and women were arrested Saturday, and a large quantity of liquor confiscated. It is alleged that the keeper of the house gave Grace her start in the path of crime, and also that she procures young women for criminal purposes by offering them large wages as domestic servants.

In the police court yesterday Mrs. Jackson pleaded guilty to keeping a house of ill-fame, and of keeping liquor for sale without a license. She was fined $33 and costs on the latter charge and remanded until Jan. 11 on the conviction of keeping a house of ill-fame. The other charge will then be gone into.

Orillia Girl Arrested.

St. Louis, Mo., Jan. 8.—Grace Gaudaer, the beautiful daughter of Jacob G. Gaudaur, of Orillia, ex-champion oarsman of the world, was arrested here yesterday afternoon, charged with theft of jewelry and trinkets.

CAPT. M'MASTER IS DEAD

Deceased Was One of Toronto's Most Honored Pioneers.

Kindly and Cheery Figure About the Parliament Buildings Passes Away In 85th Year—History of Queen City Almost Entirely Linked In Association With His Career—Active in Military and Official Circles.

Toronto, Jan. 8.—Capt. William Fenton McMaster died at 10.30 last night in his 85th year. He was one of Toronto's most honored pioneers, and the history of the city was almost entirely linked in association with his career.

A kindly and cheery figure about the Parliament Buildings, he pursued with assiduous industry until ten days ago his duties in the supervision of reports in the Department of Agriculture, and, though somewhat stooped, continued very active and walked to and fro with amazing vigor. On Dec. 28 he began to feel the weight of years, and having sank slowly since, passed quietly away last night at "Restholm."

Capt. McMaster was born on Sept. 1, 1822, near Omagh, Tyrone, Ireland, and landed in Toronto May 17, 1839. The place was then a country town, with two or three wooden wharves. He lay sick of ship fever for several weeks after his arrival in the room in Leader lane lighted by the fifth upstairs window from King street on the east side. Employed at first in Cathcart & Co.'s, where his uncle, subsequently Senator McMaster, afterwards became a partner, he went to Beamsville and was in business there with his father. At Beamsville also he married Jane, daughter of Dr. Summer. She survives him with their children, Robert S. F., secretary of the Toronto General Burying Grounds Trust; Charles A., in business in New York; Helen, married to A. L. Hertberg, assistant chief engineer of the C.P.R., and Miss Flora, who remained with her father. Seven grandchildren also survive him.

Capt. McMaster was in business also in Keen. Upon the death of his father he came to Toronto, when his uncle, his brothers and he established the firm of William McMaster & Nephews, the wholesale dry goods house. In 1865 Senator McMaster withdrew and the firm became A. R. McMaster & Brother, and so continued till 1885, when the captain gave up business and in the following year entered the civil service as assistant secretary to the bureau of industries, which expanded with the Department of Agriculture, where for ten years past he has filled the position he held at his death.

In addition to these duties he was one of the first directors of the Toronto, Grey & Bruce, and Toronto & Nipissing Railways. He was one of the founders of the Freehold Loan & Savings Co. When the Toronto Industrial Exhibition was founded he was elected first vice-president at the first meeting and held the office until 1893. He became an honorary director and held this position until the last.

Shortly after his arrival in Toronto he became attached to Brabant's Horse, and not only in military but in naval matters he proved himself capable and devoted. He was one of the very few men who passed with honors, both the military and naval examinations. In 1862 he founded the Toronto Naval Brigade for the defence of the lakes. He equipped the corps and maintained the men at his own cost, and in 1866, at the time of the Fenian Raid, the brigade was utilized in manning a gunboat, converted from a twin-screw tug. He supplied the equipment in this instance also, and the boat was despatched to patrol Lake Erie, where it remained till the arrival of troops and vessels of war. He retired from this service with the rank of major, and the brigade was broken up about 1868. Capt. McMaster was also an honorary officer in the Q. O. R.

Cured Of Piles by Pyramid Pile Cure.

IF YOU SUFFER, YOU CAN BE CURED. COSTS NOTHING TO TRY.

If you think that you must be operated upon to be cured of piles, you are wrong. Thousands of cases of piles of excruciating severity—worse no doubt than yours, have been cured painlessly, quickly and permanently, while the patient has been at his work without the loss of time necessitated by an operation. In fact, many a sufferer has not been able to reach his work or even move across the room until after using the home remedy prepared by the Pyramid Drug Co.

No More Piles! One Box Cured—Only 50 Cts!

Such was the condition of an Indiana business man, as shown in a recent letter:

"Received your sample of Pile Cure and have given it a fair trial and it has proven the best I ever tried. I can recommend you highly in this vicinity. Have used your sample and one box and it has effected a complete cure. It has been worth $100 to me.

Thanking you for the sample and the cure, I will recommend you to everybody. Yours respectfully, Julius Mayer, Dealer in Feathers, Ginseng and Hides, Bedford, Ind."

The Pyramid Pile Cure can be used at home in the privacy of your own room. There is enough strength in each little suppository to drive out infection, while at the same time it melts away into the deadened tissues of the rectum, heals up the fissures, relieves the inflammation, starts the circulation of the hemorrhoidal veins, diminishes the congestion and brings the organs back to their normal condition.

We want to prove to every sufferer from piles that the Pyramid Pile Cure will cure. This treatment is prepared exclusively by the Pyramid Drug Co., which is sufficient evidence of its genuineness. However, we do not ask you to depend upon the reliability of our name or the bona fide testimonials of the hundreds of cured piles sufferers. Send us your name and address for a free trial package. Use it according to directions. The relief you will get will justify your going at once to the druggists for a 50 cent box. All druggists sell the Pyramid Pile Cure, just like the sample. Accept no substitute. Pyramid Drug Co., 76 Pyramid Bldg., Marshall Mich.

Senator Cox Has Resigned

From the Presidency Of the Canadian Bank of Commerce

In the Next Few Months He Will Retire From Several Other Positions to Give Younger Associates An Opportunity to Rise--Remains on Directorate, However, Of 28 Boards -- Byron E. Walker Is President.

Toronto, Jan. 9.—"Having completed my 51st year of active business, I think the time has come when I owe it to myself to carry out the promises made to my family and friends, that I would to a large extent discontinue what has been perhaps the too strenuous life I have been living for a good many years past.

"I owe it to myself to carry out these promises and consult my own inclination by retiring during the next few months from a number of positions which I feel can now be better filled by younger and more energetic men. I do this not only out of regard to my family and myself, but also in justice to those who are so much entitled and so well qualified to succeed me in the several positions which I propose to vacate in the different corporations with which I have been identified for so many years."

SENATOR COX.

Byron E. Walker Succeeds.

Such was the announcement made by Hon. George A. Cox in retiring yesterday from the presidency of the Canadian Bank of Commerce. He is succeeded by Byron E. Walker, the general manager, since 1886, who, in turn, is succeeded by Alex. Laird, for four years assistant general manager.

Mr. Laird's successor is not yet determined.

The step Senator Cox is now taking is after half a century of active business, for 21 years of which he has been a director of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, occupying the vice-president's chair for two years and the president's for 17 years. At the time of his becoming a director, in 1881, the total assets were but slightly more than the increase in assets reported for the year just closed.

Continues With Canada Life.

Senator Cox will still continue as president of the Canada Life and of the Central Canada Loan & Savings Co. For the former company he has labored for 47 years. The Central Canada he organized 23 years ago. He will also continue, perhaps in deference to his Peterboro' friends, as president of the Toronto Loan & Savings Co., the head office of which is in that city.

"In these three companies I will find scope enough in the future, I am sure, for any ability and all the strength I possess. Toward these companies there is, in my mind, something of a sentimental attachment by reason of the nature of my relations to them, and to their interests I expect to be able to give increased attention," declared the Senator yesterday.

His Career In Brief.

Senator Cox began business life as a telegraph operator, at the age of 16. In 1858 he was sent to Peterboro' ad lived there for 30 years, during which period he was seven times mayor. In 1862 he became local agent at Peterboro' for the Canada Life; in 1900 he was President. He contested for Parliament in 1871 and 1886. In 1896 he was appointed to the Senate.

His retirement from the presidency of the Western and British America Fire Insurance companies will be announced at the annual meetings of these companies.

Senator Cox will, however, continue on the various directorates. At present he is on the directorate of 28 companies, leading all Canadians in the number of boards on which he is represented.

Mr. Walker's Career.

Than Byron E. Walker there is no better known Canadian banker. Since he was 13 years of age has he engaged in the banking business. Born Oct. 14, 1848, in Seneca Township, Haldimand County. Just entering on his teens he became associated with his uncle's private bank at Hamilton. This was 1861. In July, 1868, Mr. Walker entered the Bank of Commerce as discount clerk, at Hamilton. Two years later he became accountant. In 1872 he was made accountant at the head office. When only 25 years of age he became third agent at New York. In 1875 he went to Windsor as manager, was manager at London three years later, and inspector in 1879. In 1880 he had the satisfaction of going back to Hamilton as manager. After spending some time as New York agent, he assumed the general managership in 1886. He is a fellow of the Geological Society of London, Eng., and has held various offices in the Banking Association.

Mr. Laird's Career.

Alexander Laird, who becomes general manager of the Bank of Commerce, is a native of Aberdeenshire, but came to this country with his parents when a child. After spending some years at school in Sarnia, he returned, when 15, to the old land, where he entered the North of Scotland Bank. An uncle was his commercial tutor. This gentleman was agent at the Village of Ballater, and Mr. Laird was 17 years old when he commenced his banking career there. After a year in a private bank, he joined the Canadian Bank of Commerce in 1878 as a junior. His earlier experience was chiefly in Chicago and New York. He was assistant agent at the former place, then inspector, going to New York as second agent to succeed Mr. Walker. He succeeded J. H. Goodby as senior agent, which position he held for 15 years. Nearly four years ago he assumed the assistant general managership, succeeding J. H. Plummer.

WAS IT "CONSCIENCE" MONEY.

Dominion Pays Ontario $3.44 Owed the Province For 40 Years.

Toronto, June 9.—The Provincial Treasurer has received an addition to the revenue, in the shape of a remittance from the Dominion Government. Whether it should be considered conscience money or not, Hon. Mr. Matheson would not state, but it will be credited to the same account, to which amounts under that head are usually placed. The amount is $8.44, being, according to the letter of remittance, "Ontario's proportion of the amount at credit of the late province of Canada, received on account of marriage licenses served in 1861."

The total amount to the credit of the Province of Canada was $16, but it is not stated whether the balance is to go, nor why 40 odd years were permitted to elapse before a new deputy minister disbursed the liability.

The question of interest is not raised. At 5 per cent. the amount would have doubled itself three times over since 1861, and in 1903 would have amounted to $67.52.

It is impossible to say whether the Dominion conscience is sufficiently tender to acknowledge this.

WILLIAM GEARON KILLED.

Runaway Toronto Boy Shot and Dies In New York.

New York, Jan. 9.—William Gearon, aged 17, son of Policeman Edward Gearon, 137 Amelia street, Toronto, was shot and killed Monday afternoon at his room, 464 Eighth avenue, this city.

Herbert Coburn, aged 15, of this city, was arrested on a charge of killing Gearon.

The dead boy and Charles Ferran, also of Toronto, ran away from home about four months ago and made a living here by selling newspapers. They and young Coburn planned to go to Texas to become ranchers. Gearon bought a revolver, and Monday afternoon Coburn showed him another weapon.

The police believe that the boys had an argument about their weapons. Gearon's revolver was found fully loaded, but Coburn's had one discharged cartridge.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Who do you think will be Mayor next year?

Here's something we forgot to say yesterday: "We told you so."

• • •

The excitement is all over, and the odor of the campaign cigar is no more heard in the land. So for small mercies let us be thankful.

The man on the next block is lying awake nights now, wondering who will be Chairman of Gas after next Monday. So far he has not been able to think of anybody better than Ald.-elect Ackerman.

Ald Marsh is (or should be) a fixture for the Executive, Ald. Panter for Public Works, Ald. Vermilyea for Water, Ald. Green for Market—the rest of the chairmanships seem to keep us guessing.

• • •

The next event of startling importance will be the delivery of the Mayor's message, in the preparation of which, no doubt, His Worship is already burning up his grey matter. Let us hope some of his excellent suggestions will receive more attention than those of some of his predecessors in the past.

Taste WINDSOR TABLE SALT. Does not "bite"—is not bitter. It is pure salt and all salt. Will not cake.

One recommendation the Mayor might well embody in his inaugural address next Monday is the necessity for better polling places at elections in this city. Take the case of one polling booth in Murney ward on Monday. All day long, nearly, the little room was crowded, voters who wished to vote had to wait outside until there was room for them to enter. We are told of two lady voters who had to stand outside ten minutes in the rain, waiting their turn. Other voters, in a hurry, could not wait and went off about their business. Thus votes were lost. One candidate told us of six he knew he lost in that way. And when voters did get into some of the booths they found the conditions anything but ideal. This state of affairs, we are told, is not confined to any one ward, and it certainly reflects little credit on a progressive city the size of Belleville. It may not be possible for the civic authorities to provide luxury for voters, but they, at least, should be able to provide booths large enough so that lady voters could obtain shelter from rain and snow while waiting their turn to vote.

There is a plan on foot to check divorce in Canada. That with a compulsory voting law should make a Canadian quick-step.

The girl of 1907 may be tall and slim, but the young man of 1907, especially early in the year, will be, as usual, a bit short.

Cable despatches assure us that Emperor William passed a successful Christmas, barring a few treasonable carols he had to listen to ascribing "glory" to the new-born King."

The new Provincial Health Act is likely to be ready for the 15th inst The water supply of the province will be made the subject of special legislation to ensure purity and to prohibit the emptying of sewage into sources of water supply. The bill may be wide enough in its scope to cover the conditions in some cities, and prevent the contamination of lake water by city sewage by demanding the building of the trunk sewer.

A good deal of nonsense is constantly being written and published, by overwise and theoretical thinkers, upon the destiny of Canada, no doubt inspired by the Independence utterances of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The last Monthly Review contains an article written by one who signs himself "C," probably some Yankee filibuster, with the catching heading of "Canada: Under What Flag?" all because some few thousand settlers from the United States have selected the Northwest for their home. And this erudite production is thought of sufficient importance, by our Government subsidized cable agency, to cable to Canadian papers, which give it publicity, instead of consigning such rubbish to the waste basket.

It is said that China will refuse aid from the United States to assist in relieving the famine sufferers. Native newspapers report that the Chinese Foreign Office is considering the question of declining to accept American contributions to famine relief as a measure of retaliation for the American rejection of Chinese subscriptions to the relief of the San Francisco earthquake sufferers. The authorities at Pekin might be expected to do that. What do they care for a few thousand starving coolies, anyhow.

Whoever gets the chairmanship in the Council of 1907 that covers the Fire department of this city, will find plenty to do. The Fire department needs thorough readjustment, that was positively proven at the Hotel Quinte fire. There is but one old extension ladder; the hook and ladder truck was built some 30 or 40 years ago, and has no modern equipment such as is used by up-to-date fire departments; in fact a new hook and ladder truck is needed, with all modern appliances, and that speedily, too. Let there be no dilly-dallying in this matter, or our insurance rates will go higher, sure as you're born. It was simply a Godsend that the Quinte did not burn during the middle of the night, when all the guests were asleep, or something extremely serious might have taken place,—namely, the loss of several lives.

Words That Cost $1,000 Each.

(Philadelphia Bulletin.)

At the Franklin Inn, a literary club of Philadelphia, a young poet, licking his lips, said that Conan Doyle was paid $1 a word.

"That is nothing," said a railroad advertising man, "I know of a case where a man was paid $1,000 a word. Our line used to have at its grade crossings a very long and complicated sign that began: 'Beware of the engines and cars,' and then this sign went on with a lot of injunctions and warnings that would have taken five minutes to read. In a number of accident cases the complainants for damages declared that our long signs were not clear warnings. Therefore, the line decided at last to get a new grade crossing sign, and Judge Paxon was engaged to write one. The sign that Judge Paxon wrote cost $1,000 a word, but it was a classic. It is as well known among us as 'Father, I cannot tell a lie,' or 'England expects every man to do his duty.' The sign that cost $1,000 a word or $6,000 in all, was the famous 'Railroad Crossing — Stop, Look and Listen.'"

A New Year's Wedding.

A very pretty wedding took place on New Year's day at Hillcrest, Wellington, at the home of Mr. G. J. Osborne, when his eldest daughter, Florence Grace, was united in marriage to Clark B. Clapp, only son of Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Clapp, Hillier.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. G. W. McColl, beneath an arch and evergreens. The bride prettily gowned in white silk and carrying a shower bouquet of cream roses, looked very charming as she entered the room, leaning on her father's arm.

Miss C. E. Bowerman, of Toronto, playing the Mendelsohn wedding march, Mrs. Wesley Trimble, of Toronto, acted as matron of honor, while little Francis Osborne, sister of the bride, made a sweet little flower girl.

Among the many pretty and useful presents was a beautiful silver tea-service, presented by the choir and members of the Ross Hall church, as a token of the high esteem in which the bride is held, she having officiated as organist there for some time. Some of the guests present were: Mr. Wm. Trimble, grandfather of the bride: Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Trimble, Mr. H. Trimble, Mrs. Wesley Trimble, all of Toronto; Mrs. Finley Osborne, Belleville; Mr. Jos. Osborne, Grimsby; Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Spencer, Picton; Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Bowerman Miss Geraldine Bowerman, of Bloomfield; Mrs. Phila. A. Philp, Wellington and others. After a sumptuous dinner, provided by the hostess, the happy couple left on the 4 p.m. train for Montreal.

New Light In London Scandal.

New light has been thrown on the London scandal by recent revelations at Ottawa. It will be remembered that one of the witnesses in the investigation was Mr. James A. Corry, who was described as a contractor from Ottawa. Mr. Corry swore that while the bye-election campaign was in progress, he had a contract to build a wharf at St. Joseph's, on Lake Huron. It is the same wharf which has been discussed on several occasions, and which is admittedly a useless structure, denounced even by the Liberal member for the county in which it is situated. However, Mr. Corry had the contract to build it and the cost as completed is about double the estimate given in Parliament when the work was undertaken.

Now, while Mr. Corry was building this wharf for the Public Works Department, Mr. Hyman, Minister of Public Works, was contesting London, and Mr. Corry testified that he went to that city and handed $300 to Mr. Reid, one of the active electioneers, and later one of the accused in the London election prosecution. Mr. Corry had intended going on to St. Joseph's to pay his men their wages, but having parted with this money on the way he returned to Ottawa without visiting the works. He told the court that it was common for contractors to contribute to campaign funds. This contractor seemed to take it as a matter of policy, seeing that the candidate in the bye-election was the Minister under whom his contracts were performed.

But Mr. Corry has other relations with the Government and with Mr. Hyman's Department than those of Government contractor. He has built and owns certain edifices in Ottawa, including an office building in which the Government is a profitable tenant. The Auditor-General's report contains the following items of rents paid by the Public Works Department:

Georgian Bay Ship Canal to J. A. Corry, for rent of part of fourth flat for twelve months, $1,880.04; new addition, fourth flat, six months, $500; part of sixth flat, six months, $1,207, total, $3,589.19.

Marine and Fisheries Department—J. A. Corry, rent of fifth flat for twelve months, $2,500; part of the basement, six months, $300; total $2,800.

International Waterways Commission—J. A. Corry, rent of three rooms, rent of offices, twelve months, $720.

National Trancontinental Railway—J. A. Corry, Ottawa, rents paid during the twelve months for first, second, third and sixth flats, $12,012.07.

SKIN COVERED WITH SORES

DEFIED ALL REMEDIES FOR YEARS, AND DOCTORS SAID, "NO CURE."

Yet Zam-Buk Has Completely Cured.

So powerful are the healing essences in Zam-Buk that in some cases which have been pronounced beyond relief they have worked complete cure: Such an instance is just reported from Invermay, Sask. Mrs. J. M. McCormick, of that place, says: —"About seven years ago my face broke out in rough red blotches, which burned and itched and smarted in turn almost beyond endurance. I commenced to try every known remedy I could get for face and skin troubles. Some of them gave a little relief, some none, but no matter how much I used them, as soon as I went out the trouble started all over again. I consulted doctors, and they told me there was absolutely no cure for me, but that I should have to wait until I outgrew the disease.

"Finally my husband sent for a supply of Zam-Buk. We applied a small sample to a small patch of the disease To our delight the portion treated with Zam-Buk very quickly healed. We then obtained a proper supply, and began the Zam-Buk treatment. I am now delighted to state that after having used a few boxes, I am free from the old trouble and completely cured. I will never be without Zam-Buk in the house as long as I live, and to all who are troubled with skin diseases in any form I would say, waste no time in obtaining a supply of Zam-Buk. Since proving it in my own case, I have obtained a supply for an old lady who had an ulcer on her leg for 30 years. Three boxes were sufficient to close the wound."

Zam-Buk cures cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all skin injuries, as well as skin diseases. Applied to eczema, scalp sores, pimples, poisoned wounds children's rashes, ulcers, boils, abscesses, itch, sore back, festering and discharging wounds, etc., it acts like a charm. Its antiseptic ingredients kill all germs and prevent inflammation and festering. Then its healing powers come into operation and build up new, healthy tissue. All druggists sell Zam-Buk at 50c per box, or obtainable from the Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. 6 boxes for $2.50.

GROWING IN POPULARITY.

The More People Know Newbro's Herpicide the Better They Like It.

The more it becomes known the better it is liked. One bottle sells two, and those two sell four. Newbro's Herpicide is what we are talking about. It cleans the scalp of all dandruff, and destroying the cause, a little germ or parasite, prevents the return of dandruff. As a hair dressing it is delightful, it ought to be found on every toilet table. It stops falling hair, and prevents baldness. It should be used occasionally, as a preventive to protect the scalp from a new invasion of the dandruff microbe. Sold by leading druggists. Golden Wedding.

On New Year's day Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Kelly, of Holloway, celebrated 50 years of happy and prosperous wedded life. At Napanee on Jan. 1, 1857, Mr. T. J. Kelly and Miss Rebecca McMurray were united in holy wedlock according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England, by the Rev. Wm. Lawder. At the same time Miss McMurray's sister was married to Mr. John Robinson Both couples settled at first in Tyendinaga but fourteen years later Mr. and Mrs. Kelly moved to Thurlow, and Mr. and Mrs. Robinson to Rawdon, where they still live, being in good health. The outstanding feature of the day was that it was a double celebration of the wedding day fifty years ago, Mr. and Mrs. Robinson dining with Mr. and Mrs. Kelly at noon, and Mr. and Mrs. Kelly returning with them for the evening.

For thirty-five years Mr. and Mrs. Kelly have lived happily and prosperously at Holloway. That success which comes not by chance, but out of the brave head and heart that dares to be faithful in the common work of daily life, out of that means independence that dares to faithfully do the drudgery of the day, has been theirs. Their home has always been open for the furtherance of the good of Christ, and the social and religious advancement of the community, services being held there regularly by the Church of England clergyman.

Two sons and six daughters are still living, the happy issue of the union The sons and five daughters are happily married and live nearby, all prospering. One daughter, Miss Annie, still resides with her parents.

Sixty-six guests gathered together, including two sons and six daughters, and twenty-one grandchildren, to celebrate the event. Many beautiful tokens of respect were given to Mr. and Mrs. Kelly.

The pleasure of the occasion was marred by the sad and fatal accident which happened to two of the visitors, which has already been recorded in our columns.

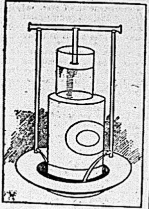
WATER POWER.

A Simple Little Engine That Any Smart Boy Can Make.

The principle illustrated in the accompanying cut might readily serve to generate power without the use of machinery. We give it, however, merely as an interesting and easily made experiment.

Pour water into a good sized glass tumbler until it is two-thirds full and stand it upon a canister to give it the necessary elevation. Through the flat cork on the surface of the water is a stout straw, which transversely supports one of the same diameter. To the latter are attached two other straws of smaller diameter, each of these having a bit of straw about an inch in length attached to the end at an obtuse angle, with the outlets cut on the slant to facilitate the exit of the water.



REVOLVING SIPHON.

All the joints are hollow and are made water tight with sealing wax. The ends of the transverse straw are likewise closed with the wax, but the ends of the depending straws are left open.

Now, to start this unique homemade apparatus in action, let two persons suck the open ends of the depending straws until the water begins to flow and when they take their mouths away the device will begin to revolve, while the water pours steadily from the open ends.

This revolving siphon will soon empty the tumbler, but you may keep the action up as long as you please by pouring water in as fast as the straws let it pour out.

COMPUTING INTEREST.

The Six Per Cent Rule and the Principle on Which It Is Based.

Every schoolboy and schoolgirl knows that much used rule for computing interest at 6 per cent—multiply by the number of days and divide the product by 6—but many of them could not, perhaps, explain the principle on which the rule is based. Here it is in a few words: In reckoning interest 360 days make a year. Now, to find the interest on any amount for one year—360 days—at 6 per cent we multiply the amount by 6 and divide by 100. Having found the interest for 360 days, we can get it for one day by dividing that interest by 360. But multiplying by 6 and dividing by 100 and then dividing by 360 is the same as multiplying by 6 and dividing by 36,000. Then, again, multiplying by 6 and dividing by 36,000 is the same as dividing at once by 6,000. It follows that we may find the interest on any amount for one day by dividing by 6,000, and we have only to multiply the interest for one day by the given number of days to get the interest for the desired time. In practice it is customary to multiply first by the number of days and then to divide by 6,000, or, what is the same thing, to divide by 6, cutting off three figures for the three ciphers.

A Smoke Box.

This means considerable fun for the boys and girls who try it.

Make a box out of cardboard or thick paper as nearly a perfect cube in shape as possible, say three inches in measurement.

Next lay a dime or quarter on one side of it and trace the outline with lead pencil. Then cut out a hole along the line.

Then light a wax taper or candle and hold it under the hole so that the smoke will fill the box.

Now, if you hold the box in one hand, hole uppermost, and tap the bottom, you can cause tiny but perfect and beautiful rings of smoke to shoot out into the air.

Some boys have succeeded in making a hundred rings from one boxful of smoke.

See how many you can produce.

What Does the Goose Weigh?

There is an old catch question that never fails to mystify half the people who hear it. Perhaps it may be known to many of our boys and girls. To others it may give some amusement. Here is the form in which it is usually put: If a goose weighs ten pounds and half its own weight, how much does it weigh? The unwary are likely to answer, "fifteen pounds;" whereas the right answer is twenty pounds, for if it weighs ten pounds plus half its own weight, ten pounds must be the other half of its weight.

Conundrums.

Why does a dressmaker never lose her hooks? Because she has an eye on each of them.

What is the difference between an old dime and a new penny? Nine cents.

After Treatment.

He was surprised at how the sores healed—"I took your New Method Treatment for a serious blood disease with which I had been afflicted for twelve years. I had consulted a score of physicians, taken all kinds of blood medicine, visited Hot Springs and other mineral water resorts, but only got temporary relief. They would help me for a time, but after discontinuing the medicines the symptoms would break out again—running sores, blotches, rheumatic pains, looseness of the hair, swellings of the glands, palms of the hands scaling, itchiness of the skin, dyspeptic stomach, etc. I had given up in despair when a friend advised me to consult you, as you had cured him of a similar disease 8 years ago. I had no hope, but took his advice. In three weeks' time the sores commenced to heal up and I became encouraged. I continued the New Method Treatment for four months and at the end of that time every symptom had disappeared. I was cured 7 years ago and no signs of any disease since. My boy, three years old, is sound and healthy. I certainly can recommend your treatment with all my heart. You can refer any person to me privately, but you can use this testimonial as you wish." W. TIMELY TOPICS.

A DREAM OF FLIGHT.

Soon shall the frequent bicycles
And roaring motor car
Be quite as rare as icicles
In summer solstice are.
Yes! They'll be dead as Pharaoh—plain
It seems to be indeed—
When all prefer the aeroplane
For comfort, rest and speed.

You nervous folk will, cavilling
At this mode, find full soon
The safest way of travelling
By steerable balloon,
For ecstasy then singing out
To learn at last she can,
Will Mary Jane go winging out
With her discreet young man.

Then quite intent on gaining it,
And one in heart and mind,
When we go aeroplaning it,
'Tis Heaven, my own, we'll find,
While well agreed between us is
This plan we cherish still—
We'll honeymoon where Venus is—
By Jupiter, we will!

The New York Insurance men are receiving just what they deserve. Men who betray their trust deserve punishment. The Grand Jury in New York have had two of these worthies before them, charged with making false entries in the New York Life's books in an endeavor to conceal the true import of certain stock transactions in which the company was interested. The maximum penalty for forgery in the third degree (under which head the alleged offences come) is five years imprisonment. It is curious that, although of the former heads of the three companies one is dead, one is in an asylum and one is self-exiled, the revelations of crooked and dishonest financing, of enormous sums diverted from the policyholders to individual officers have not been followed by conviction and punishment. Legal quibbles and technicalities and all the influences which organisation and money can bring to bear are invoked to prevent the real leaders in the raids on the treasuries from being placed in the dock and in the felon's cell. Many civil suits for the recovery of funds are pending against the former officers of the companies, but they do not appear to dread the civil suits so much as proceedings under the criminal code. The criminal code is perhaps the best weapon in the arsenal of the public in its unceasing fight for protection against individual graft and corporation greed.

Shoplifting, it is feared, is too common in all towns and cities. In Toronto merchants have begun prosecuting instead of recovering stolen goods, and then letting the thieves go free. The Judge in Toronto has sent a number of these lifters, who are females, to prison. He told them that "It was intended in future to make examples of prisoners brought before him for stealing articles from the counters of stores." We have heard of a number of cases in this city. The sooner the merchants follow the example set them by the Toronto merchants the better it will be for the morality of such petty thieves.

The Toronto News does not like the attitude of the Church in England towards the Education Bill of that country, any more than it admires the Church and Laurier upon the same question in Canada. It declares Archbishop Langevin to be a Bourbon, as "he cannot get rid of the notion that his Church has some divine right to dictate public policy in this country. Nor does he fail to find support for this reactionary opinion at Ottawa. Mgr. Sbarretti and his bishops dictated the educational clauses of the North-west School Acts, and, what was worse, arranged the compact on the eve of a general election and behind the backs of the Canadian people. Even the most influential of the Prime Minister's colleagues were not consulted until the measure was laid before Parliament and the whole party committed to its support or forced to inflict an intolerable humiliation upon the Leader. We are told sometimes that the Manitoba school system is more favorable to the Church than that of Alberta and Saskatchewan." We respectfully suggest to the editor of the News, that he write an addenda to his life of Laurier, repudiating his first impressions of the man. It would be interesting reading.

The London Globe says it seems there are rumors in various quarters that France is likely to give up St. Pierre-Miquelon. Another report is the people of the Island are agitating for annexation to the United States. There is no doubt but that the deprivation of the privileges formerly enjoyed by French fishermen on the Newfoundland shores, the result of the settlement by England and France, has created dissatisfaction. If any truth exists in these rumors, immediate steps should be taken by the Canadian Government to secure these Islands which lie directly in the mouth to the entrance to the St. Lawrence. No country should own them except Great Britain.

The difference. In England the Education Bill still agitates the public mind. The Lords have scored a point, they have amended "the bill in a manner that meets with a large degree of support in Britain. Under the Commons' bill religion was to be excluded from the schools unless the local boards decided otherwise. Under the bill as it came from the Lords undenominational religious exercises were made imperative, and it was left to the parent to determine whether or not his child should attend. The Lords have somewhat skilfully made the issue a question between parental or school board control of the religious question." Are they right?

On Trial For Life.

Toronto, Jan. 9.—True bills were returned by the grand jury at the assizes yesterday, indicting Edmond Bridant of murdering his wife, and also of securing and giving means of procuring a criminal operation. The murder charge against Mrs. Lillian Miller, the alleged accomplice, was thrown out, but she was indicted on a charge of supplying means of procuring a criminal operation.

You have No Reason for Not Using

Zutoo

Some people think that all headache cures are alike—that they all undermine the health, even if not perceived at the time of taking them.

Well, we'll admit that the drug cures do this, but that is no reason why you should not take Zutoo.

Zutoo is a harmless vegetable remedy. One ingredient is soda—just old-fashioned soda that our grandmothers used to take to settle the stomach, when they had sick headache. And there is nothing better.

The principal ingredient—the one that stops the headache, is a vegetable ingredient, imported for us from Japan. It won't hurt you any more than will the soda.

There is absolutely no reason why you should not use Zutoo.

If you suffer from headache there is every reason why you should.

Taken in time, two tablets will ward off a headache. Taken later, they will stop it in twenty minutes, and leave you feeling good every time.

If you are using a drug remedy, why not discard it?

Zutoo will cure just as quickly and will save you the penalty, that all must sometime pay, who take the drugs which these cures contain.

If you will give Zutoo one trial, you will never take any other headache remedy again.

Head Office - Waterloo, Ont

Many a man means his desires when he talks of his duty.

The Manager Of the B. & A.

By VAUGHAN KESTER

Copyright, 1901, by Harper & Brothers

It was six blocks to the Herald office, and as he neared it he could distinguish a group of excited, half dressed men and women where they clustered on the sidewalk before the building. A carriage was standing in the street.

He elbowed into the crowd unnoticed and unrecognized. A small boy who had climbed into the low boughs of a maple tree now shouted in a perfect frenzy of excitement: "Hi, they're bringing him out! Jimmy Smith's got him by the legs!"

At the same moment Chris Berry appeared in the doorway. The crowd stood on tiptoe, breathless, tense and waiting.

"Drive up a little closer, Tom," Berry called to the man in the carriage. Then he stepped to one side, and two men pushed past him carrying the body of Ryder between them. The crowd gave a groan.

CHAPTER XVII.

RYDER'S murder furnished Antioch with a sensation the like of which it had not known in many a day. It was one long, breathless shudder, ramified with contingent horrors.

Dippy Ellsworth remembered that when he drove up in his cart on the night of the tragedy to light the street lamp which stood on the corner by the Herald office his horse had balked and refused to go near the curb. It was generally conceded that the sagacious brute smelled blood. Dippy himself said he would not sell that horse for $1,000, and it was admitted on all sides that such an animal possessed a value hard to reckon in mere dollars and cents.

Three men recalled that they had passed the Herald office and noticed that the door stood open. Within twenty-four hours they were hearing groans and within a week cries for help, but they were not encouraged.

Of course the real hero was Bob Bennett, Ryder's assistant, who had discovered the body when he went back to the office at half past 8 to close the forms. His account of the finding of Ryder dead on the floor was an exceedingly grizzly narrative, delightfully conducive of the shivers. He had been the quietest of youths, but two weeks after the murder he left for Chicago. He said there might be those who could stand it, but Antioch was too slow for him.

Two men pushed past him carrying the body of Ryder between them.

Not less remarkable was Ryder's posthumous fame. Men who had never known him in life now spoke of him with trembling voices and every outward evidence of the sincerest sorrow. It was as if they had sustained a personal loss, for his championship of the strike had given him a great popularity, and his murder, growing out of this championship, as all preferred to believe, made his death seem a species of martyrdom.

Indeed, the mere fact that he had been murdered would have been sufficient to make him popular at any time. He had supplied Antioch with a glorious sensation. It was something to talk over and discuss and shudder at, and the town was grateful and happy with the deep, calm joy of a perfect emotion.

It determined to give him a funeral which should be creditable alike to the cause for which he had died and to the manner of his death.

Meanwhile Dan had been arrested, examined and set at liberty again in the face of the prevailing sentiment that he should be held. No one doubted—he himself least of all—that Roger Oakley had killed Ryder. Bob Bennett recalled their meeting as he left the office to go home for supper on the night of the murder, and a red and yellow bandanna handkerchief was found under the table, which Dan identified as having belonged to his father.

Kenyon came to Antioch and made his re-election almost certain by the offer of a reward of $500 for the arrest and conviction of the murderer. This stimulated a wonderful measure of activity. Parties of men and boys were soon scouring the woods and fields in quest of the old convict.

The day preceding that of the funeral a dusty countryman on a hard ridden plow horse dashed into town with the news that a man who answered perfectly to the description of Roger Oakley had been seen the night before twenty-six miles north of Antioch, at a place called Barrow's Sawmills, where he had stopped at a store and made a number of purchases. Then he had struck off through the woods. It was also learned that he had eaten his breakfast the morning after the murder at a farmhouse midway between Antioch and Barrow's Sawmills. The farmer's wife had at his request put up a lunch for him. Later in the day a man at work in a field had seen and spoken with him.

There was neither railroad, telegraph nor telephone at Barrow's Sawmills, and the fugitive had evidently considered it safe to venture into the place, trusting that he was ahead of the news of his crime. It was on the edge of a sparsely settled district, and to the north of it was the unbroken wilderness stretching away to the lakes and the Wisconsin line.

The morning of the funeral an extra edition of the Herald was issued, which contained a glowing account of Ryder's life and achievements. It was an open secret that it was from the gifted pen of Kenyon. This notable enterprise was one of the wonders of the day. Everybody wanted a Herald as a souvenir of the occasion, and nearly 500 copies were sold.

All that morning the country people in unheard of numbers flocked into town. As Clarence remarked to Spide, it was just like a circus day. The noon train from Buckhorn Junction arrived crowded to the doors, as did the 1 o'clock train from Harrison. Antioch had never known anything like it.

The funeral was at 2 o'clock from the little white frame Methodist church, but long before the appointed hour it was crowded to the verge of suffocation, and the anxious, waiting throng overflowed into the yard and street with never a hope of wedging into the building, much less securing seats.

A delegation of the strikers, the Young Men's Kenyon club, of which Ryder was a member, and a representative body of citizens escorted the remains to the church. These were the people he had jeered at, whose simple joys he had ridiculed and whose griefs he had made light of, but they would gladly have forgiven him his sarcasms even had they known of them. He had become a hero and a martyr.

Chris Berry and Cap Roberts were in charge of the arrangements. On the night of the murder the former had beaten his rival to the Herald office by exactly three minutes and had never left Ryder until he lay in the most costly casket in his shop.

It was admitted afterward by thoughtful men who were accustomed to weigh their opinions carefully that Mr. Williamson, the minister, had never delivered so moving an address or one that contained so obvious a moral. The drift of his remarks was that the death of their brilliant and distinguished fellow townsman should serve as a warning to all that there was no time like the present in which to prepare for the life everlasting. He assured his audience that each hour of existence should be devoted to consecration and silent testimony; otherwise, what did it avail? It was not enough that Ryder had thrown the weight of his personal influence and exceptional talents on the side of sound morality and civic usefulness. And as he soared on from point to point his hearers soared with him, and when he rounded in on each well tried climax they rounded in with him. He never failed them once. They always knew what he was going to say before it was said and were ready for the thrill when the thrill was due. It might have seemed that Mr. Williamson was paid a salary merely to make an uncertain hereafter yet more uncomfortable and uncertain, but Antioch took its religion hot, with a shiver and a threat of blue flame.

When Mr. Williamson sat down Mr. Kenyon rose. As a layman he could be entirely eulogistic. He was sure of the faith which through life had been the guiding star of the departed. He had seen it instanced by numerous acts of eminently Christian benevolence, and on those rare occasions when he had spoken of his hopes and fears he had, in spite of his shrinking modesty, shown that his standards of Christian duty were both lofty and consistent.

Here the Hon. Jeb Barrows, who had been dozing peacefully, awoke with a start and gazed with wide, bulging eyes at the speaker. He followed Mr. Kenyon, and, though he tried hard, he couldn't recall any expression of Ryder's, at the Red Star bar or elsewhere, which indicated that there was any spiritual uplift to his nature which he fed at secret altars; so he pictured the friend and citizen, and the dead fared well at his hands, perhaps better than he was conscious of, for he said no more than he believed.

Then came the prayer and hymn, to be succeeded by a heavy, solemn pause, and Mr. Williamson stepped to the front of the platform.

"All those who care to view the remains—and I presume there are many here who will wish to look upon the face of our dead friend before it is conveyed to its final resting place—will please form in line at the rear of the edifice and advance quietly up the right aisle, passing across the church as quickly as possible and thence down the left aisle and on out through the door. This will prevent confusion and make it much pleasanter for all."

There was a rustle of skirts and the awkward shuffling of many feet as the congregation formed in line; then it filed slowly up the aisle to where Chris Berry stood, weazened and dry, with a vulture look on his face and a vulture touch to his hands that now and again picked at the flowers which were banked about the coffin.

The Emorys, partly out of regard for public sentiment, had attended the funeral, for, as the doctor said, they were the only real friends Griff had in the town. They had known and liked him when the rest of Antioch was dubiously critical of the newcomer, whose ways were not its ways.

When the congregation thronged up the aisle Constance, who had endured the long service, which to her was unspeakably grotesque and horrible, in shocked if silent rebellion slipped her hand into her mother's. "Take me away," she whispered brokenly, "or I shall cry out! Take me away!"

Mrs. Emory hesitated. It seemed a desertion of a trust to go and leave Griff to these strangers, who had been brought there by morbid curiosity. Constance guessed what was passing in her mind.

"Papa will remain if it is necessary."

Mrs. Emory touched the doctor on the shoulder. "We're going home, John; Constance doesn't feel well; but you stay."

When they reached the street the last vestige of Constance's self control vanished utterly. "Wasn't it awful!" she sobbed. "And his life had only just begun! And to be snuffed out like this, when there was everything to live for!"

Mrs. Emory, surprised at the sudden show of feeling, looked into her daughter's face. Constance understood the look.

"No, no! He was only a friend! He could never have been more than that. Poor, poor Griff!"

"I am glad for your sake, dearie," said Mrs. Emory gently.

"I wasn't very kind to him at the last, but I couldn't know—I couldn't know," she moaned.

She was not much given to these confidences even with her mother. Usually she never questioned the wisdom or righteousness of her own acts, and it was not her habit to put them to the test of a less generous judgment, but she was remembering her last meeting with Ryder. It had been the day before his death. He had told her that he loved her, and she had flared up, furious and resentful, with the dull, accusing ache of many days in her heart and a cruel readiness to make him suffer. She had tried to convince herself afterward that it was only his vanity that was hurt.

Then she thought of Oakley. She had been thinking of him all day, wondering where he was, if he had left Antioch, and not daring to ask. They were going up the path now toward the house, and she turned to her mother again.

"What do they say of Mr. Oakley—I mean Mr. Dan Oakley? I don't know why, but I'm more sorry for him than I am for Griff. He has so much to bear!"

"I heard your father say he was still here. I suppose he has to remain. He can't choose."

"What will be done with his father if he is captured? Will they"— She could not bring herself to finish the sentence.

"Goodness knows! I wouldn't worry about him," said Mrs. Emory in a tone of considerable asperity. "He made all the trouble, and I haven't a particle of patience with him!"

CHAPTER XVIII.

BY 3 o'clock the saloons and stores, which had closed at noon, opened their doors, and Antioch emerged from the shadow of its funeral gloom.

By 4 o'clock a long procession of carriages and wagons was rumbling out of town. Those who had come from a distance were going home, but many lingered in the hope that the excitement was not all past.

An hour later a rumor reached Antioch that Roger Oakley had been captured. It spread about the streets like wildfire and penetrated to the stores and saloons. At first it was not believed.

Just who was responsible for the rumor no one knew, and no one cared, but soon the additional facts were being vouched for by a score of excited men that a search party from Barrow's Sawmills, which had been trailing the fugitive for two days, had effected his capture after a desperate fight in the northern woods and were bringing him to Antioch for identification. It was generally understood that if the prisoner proved to be Roger Oakley he would be spared the uncertainty of a trial. The threat was made openly that he would be strung up to the first convenient lamp post. As Mr. Britt remarked to a customer from Harrison for whom he was mixing a cocktail:

"It'd be a pity to keep a man of his years waiting; and what's the use of spending thousands of dollars for a conviction anyhow when everybody knows he done it?"

At this juncture Jim Brown, the sheriff, and Joe Weaver, the town marshal, were seen to cross the square with an air of importance and preoccupation. It was noted casually that the right hand coat pocket of each sagged suggestively. They disappeared into McElroy's livery stable. Fifty men and boys rushed precipitately in pursuit and were just in time to see the two officers pass out at the back of the stable and jump into a light road cart that stood in the alley. A moment later and they were whirling off uptown.

All previous doubt vanished instantly. It was agreed on all sides that they were probably acting on private information and had gone to bring in the prisoner. So strong was this conviction that a number of young men whose teams were hitched about the square promptly followed, and soon an anxious cavalcade emptied itself into the dusty country road.

Just beyond the corporation line the North street, as it was called, forked. Mr. Brown and his companion had taken the road which bore to the west and led straight to Barrow's Sawmills. Those who were first to reach the forks could still see the road cart a black dot in the distance.

The afternoon passed, and the dusk of evening came. Those of the townspeople who were still hanging about the square went home to supper. Unless a man could hire or borrow a horse there was not much temptation to start off on a wild goose chase, which, after all, might end only at Barrow's Sawmills.

Fortunately for him, Dan Oakley had gone to Chicago that morning, intending to see Holloway and resign. In view of what had happened it was impossible for him to remain in Antioch, nor could General Cornish expect him to.

Milton McClintock was at supper with his family when Mrs. Stapleton, who lived next door, broke in upon them without ceremony, crying excitedly.

"They've got him, and they're going to lynch him!"

Then she as suddenly disappeared. McClintock from where he sat, holding a piece of bread within an inch of his lips and his mouth wide open to receive it, could see her through the window, her gray hair disheveled and tossed about her face, running from house to house, a gaunt rumor in flapping calico skirts.

He sprang to his feet when he saw her vanish around the corner of Lou Bentick's house across the way. "You keep the children in, Mary," he said sharply. "Don't let them into the street." And, snatching up his hat and coat, he made for the door, but his wife was there ahead of him and threw her arms about his neck.

"For God's sake, Milt, stay with the boys and me!" she ejaculated. "You don't know what may happen!"

Outside they heard the trampling of many feet coming nearer and nearer. They listened breathlessly.

"You don't know what may happen!" she repeated.

"Yes, I do, and they mustn't do it!" unclasping her hands. "Jim will be needing help." The sheriff was his wife's brother. "He's promised me he'd hang the old man himself or no one else should."

There was silence now in the street. The crowd had swept past the house.

"But the town's full of strangers. You can't do anything, and Jim can't!"

"We can try. Look out for the children!"

And he was gone.

Mrs. McClintock turned to the boys, who were still at the table. "Go upstairs to your room and stay there until I tell you to come down," she commanded peremptorily. "There, don't bother me with questions!" For Joe, the youngest boy, was already whimpering. The other two, with white, scared faces, sat bolt upright in their chairs. Some danger threatened. They didn't know what this danger was, and their very ignorance added to their terror.

"Do what I say!" she cried. At this they left the table and marched toward the stairs. Joe found courage to say:

"Ain't you coming too? George's afraid." But his mother did not hear him. She was at the window closing the shutters. In the next yard she saw old Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Stapleton's mother, carrying her potted plants into the house and scolding in a shrill, querulous voice.

McClintock, pulling on his coat as he ran, hurried up the street past the little white frame Methodist church. The crowd had the start of him, and the town seemed deserted except for the women and children who were everywhere, at open doors and windows, some pallid and pitying, some ugly with the brutal excitement they had caught from brothers or husbands.

As he passed the Emorys' he heard his name called. He glanced around and saw the doctor standing on the porch with Mrs. Emory and Constance.

"Will you go with me, McClintock?" the physician cried. At the same moment the boy drove his team to the door. McClintock took the fence at a bound and ran up the drive.

"There's no time to lose," he panted. "But," with a sudden, sickening sense of helplessness, "I don't know that we can stop them."

"At least he will not be alone."

It was Constance who spoke. She was thinking of Oakley as struggling single handed to save his father from the howling, cursing rabble which had rushed up the street ten minutes before.

"No, he won't be alone," said McClintock, not understanding whom it was she meant. He climbed in beside the doctor.

"You haven't seen him?" the latter asked as he took the reins from the boy.

"Seen who?"

"Dan Oakley."

"He's on his way to Chicago. Went this morning."

"Thank God for that!" And he pulled in his horses to call back to Constance that Oakley had left Antioch. A look of instant relief came into her face. He turned again to McClintock.

"This is a bad business."

"Yes, we don't want no lynching, but it's lucky Oakley isn't here. I hadn't thought of what he'd do if he was."

"What a pity he ever sent for his father! But who could have foreseen this?" said the doctor sadly. McClintock shook his head.

"I can't believe the old man killed Ryder in cold blood. Why, he's as gentle as a lamb."

As they left the town off to the right in a field they saw a bareheaded woman racing after her two runaway sons, and then the distant shouts of men, mingled with the shrill cries of boys, reached their ears. The doctor shook out his reins and plied his whip.

"What if we are too late?" he said.

For answer McClintock swore. He was fearing that himself.

Two minutes later and they were up with the rear of the mob, where it straggled along on foot, sweating and dusty and hoarsely articulate. A little farther on and it was lost to sight in a thicketed dip of the road. Out of this black shadow buggy after buggy flashed to show in the red dusk that lay on the treeless hillside beyond. On the mob's either flank, but keeping well out of the reach of their elders, slunk and skulked the village urchins.

"Looks as if all Antioch was here tonight," commented McClintock grimly.

"So much the better for us. Surely they are not all gone mad," answered the doctor.

"I wouldn't give a button for his chances."

The doctor drove recklessly into the crowd, which scattered to the right and left.

McClintock, bending low, scanned the faces which were raised toward them.

"The whole township's here. I don't know one in ten," he said, straightening up.

"I wish I could manage to run over a few," muttered the doctor savagely.

As they neared the forks of the road Dr. Emory pulled in his horses. A heavy farm wagon blocked the way, and the driver was stolidly indifferent alike to his entreaties and to McClintock's threat to break his head for him if he didn't move on. They were still shouting at him when a savage cry swelled up from the throats of those in advance. The murderer was being brought in from the east road.

"The brutes!" muttered the doctor, and he turned helplessly to McClintock. "What are we going to do? What can we do?"

By way of answer McClintock stood up.

"I wish I could see Jim."

But Jim had taken the west road three hours before and was driving toward Barrow's Sawmills as fast as McElroy's best team could take him. When he reached there it was enough to make one's blood run cold to hear the good man curse.

"You wait here, doctor," cried McClintock. "You can't get past, and they seem to be coming this way now."

"Look out for yourself, Milt."

"Never fear for me."

He jumped down into the dusty, trampled road and foot by foot fought his way forward.

As he had said, those in front were turning back. The result was a horrible jam, for those behind were still struggling to get within sight of the murderer. A drunken man at McClintock's elbow was shouting, "Lynch him!" at the top of his lungs.

The master mechanic wrenched an arm free and struck at him with the flat of his hand. The man appeared surprised, but not at all angry. He merely wiped the blood from his lips and asked in an injured tone, which conveyed a mild reproof: "What did you want to do that for? I don't know you." And as he sought to maintain his place at McClintock's side he kept repeating: "Say, neighbor, I don't know you. You certainly got the advantage of me."

Soon McClintock was in the very thick of the mob, and then he saw the captive. His hands were bound, and he was tied with ropes to the front seat of a buckboard drawn by two jaded horses. His captors were three iron jawed, hard faced countrymen. They were armed with shotguns and were enjoying their splendid triumph to the full.

McClintock gave only one look at the prisoner. An agony of fear was on him. The collar of his shirt was stiff with blood from a wounded face. His hat was gone, and his coat was torn. Scared and wondering, his eyes shifted uneasily over the crowd.

But the one look sufficed McClintock, and he lost all interest in the scene.

There would be no lynching that night, for the man was not Roger Oakley. Further than that, he was gray haired and burly. He was as unlike the old convict as one man could well be unlike another.

Suddenly the cry was raised: "It ain't him! You fellows got the wrong man!"

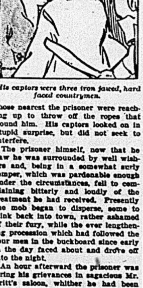
The cry was taken up and bandied back down the road. The mob drew a great, free breath of rejoicing. It became good natured with a noisy hilarity. The iron jawed countrymen glanced around sheepishly.

"You are sure about that?" one inquired. "He answers the description all right."

It was hard to have to abandon the idea of the rewards. "What have you been doing to him?" asked half a dozen voices in chorus. They felt a friendly interest in the poor bound wretch in the buckboard. Perhaps, too, they were grateful to him because he was the wrong man.

"Oh, nothing much," uneasily, "only he put up a good fight."

"Of course he did. He didn't want to be hanged!" And there was a good natured roar from the crowd. Already those nearest the prisoner were reaching up to throw off the ropes that bound him. His captors looked on in stupid surprise, but did not seek to interfere.



His captors were three iron jawed, hard faced countrymen.

The prisoner himself, now that he saw he was surrounded by well wishers and, being in a somewhat surly temper, which was pardonable enough under the circumstances, fell to complaining bitterly and loudly of the treatment he had received. Presently the mob began to disperse, some to slink back into town, rather ashamed of their fury, while the ever lengthening procession which had followed the four men in the buckboard since early in the day faced about and drove off into the night.

An hour afterward the prisoner was airing his grievances in sagacious Mr. Britt's saloon, whither he had been conveyed by the latter gentleman, who had been quick to recognize that, temporarily at least, he possessed great drawing powers. He was only a battered vagabond on his way east from the harvests in the Dakota wheatfields, and he knew that he had looked into the very eyes of death.

CHAPTER XIX.

WHEN Roger Oakley fled from Antioch on the night of the murder he was resolved that, happen what might, he would not be taken.

For half an hour he traversed back alleys and grass grown "side streets," seeing no one and unseen, and presently found himself to the north of the town.

Then he sat down to rest and consider the situation.

He was on the smooth, round top of a hillside. At his back were woods and fields, while down in the hollow below him, beyond a middle space that was neither town nor country, he saw the lights of Antioch twinkling among the trees. Dannie was there somewhere, wondering why he did not return. Nearer at hand, across a narrow lane, where the ragweed and jimson and pokeberry flourished rankly, was the cemetery.

The night was profoundly still, until suddenly the town bell rang the alarm. The old convict's face blanched at the sound, and he came slowly to his feet. The bell rang on. The lights among the trees grew in number, dogs barked, there was the murmur of voices. He clapped his hands to his ears and plunged into the woods.

He had no clear idea of where he was going, but all night long he plodded steadily forward, his one thought to be as far from Antioch as possible by morning. When at last morning came, with its song of half awakened birds and its level streaks of light piercing the gray dawn, he remembered that he was hungry and that he had eaten nothing since noon the day before. He stopped at the first farmhouse he came to for breakfast, and at his request the farmer's wife put up a lunch for him to carry away.

It was night again when he reached Barrow's Sawmills. He ventured boldly into the one general store and made a number of purchases. The storekeeper was frankly curious to learn what he was doing and where he was going, but the old convict met his questions with surly reserve.

When he left the store he took the one road out of the place, and half a mile farther on forsook the road for the woods.

It was nearly midnight when he went into camp. He built a fire and toasted some thin strips of bacon. He made his supper of these and a few crackers. He realized that he must harbor his slender stock of provisions.

He had told himself over and over that he was not fit to live among men. He would have to dwell alone like a dangerous animal, shunning his fellows. The solitude and the loneliness suited him. He would make a permanent camp somewhere close to the lakes, in the wildest spot he could find, and end his days there.

He carried in his pocket a small railroad map of the state, and in the morning, after a careful study of it, marked out his course. That day, and for several days following, he plodded on and on in a tireless, patient fashion, and with but the briefest stops at noon for his meager lunch. Each morning he was up and on his way with the first glimmer of light, and he kept his even pace until the glow faded from the sky in the west.

Beyond Barrow's Sawmills the pine woods stretched away to the north in one unbroken wilderness. At long intervals he passed loggers' camps and more rarely a farm in the forest, but he avoided these. Instinct told him that the news of Ryder's murder had traveled far and wide. In all that range of country there was no inhabited spot where he dare show his face.

Now that he had evolved a definite purpose he was quite cheerful and happy save for occasional spells of depression and bitter self accusation, but the excitement of his flight buoyed him up amazingly.

He had distanced and outwitted pursuit, and his old pride in his physical strength and superiority returned. The woods never ceased to interest him. There was a mighty freedom about them, a freedom he shared and joyed in. He felt he could tramp on forever, with the scent of the pines filling his nostrils and the sweep of the wind in his ears. His muscles seemed of iron. There was cunning and craft, too, in the life he was living.

The days were sultry August days. No rain had fallen in weeks, and the earth was a dead, dry brown. A hot haze quivered under the great trees. Off in the north, against which his face was set, a long, low, black cloud lay on the horizon. Sometimes the wind lifted it higher, and it sifted down dark threads of color against the softer blue of the summer sky. Presently the wind brought the odor of smoke. At first it was almost imperceptible—a suggestion merely—but by and by it was in every breath he drew. The forest was on fire ahead of him. He judged that the tide of devastation was rolling nearer, and he veered to the west. Then one evening he saw what he had not seen before—a dull red light that shone sullenly above the pines. The next day the smoke was thick in the woods. The wind, blowing strongly from the north, floated little wisps and wreaths of it down upon him. It rested like a heavy mist above the cool surface of the lake, on the shores of which he had made his camp the night previous, while some thickly grown depressions he crossed were sour with the stale, rancid odor that clung to his clothes and rendered breathing difficult. There was a powdering of fine white ashes everywhere. At first it resembled a hoar frost and then a scanty fall of snow.

By 5 o'clock he gained the summit of a low ridge. From its top he was able to secure an extended view of the fire. A red line—as red as the reddest sunset—stretched away to the north as far as the eye could see. He was profoundly impressed by the spectacle. The conflagration was on a scale so gigantic that it fairly staggered him. He knew millions of feet of timber must be blazing.

He decided to remain on the ridge and study the course of the fire, so he lay down to rest. Sleep came over him, for the day had been a fatiguing one, but at midnight he awoke. A dull, roaring sound was surging through the forest, and the air was stifling. The fire had burned closer while he slept. It had reached the ridge opposite, which was nearly parallel to the one he was on, and was burning along its northern base. The ridge flattened perceptibly to the west, and already at this point a single lone line of fire had surmounted the blunt crest and was creeping down into the valley which intervened. Presently tongues of fire shot upward. The dark, nearer side of the ridge showed clearly in the fierce light, and soon the fire rolled over its entire length, a long, ruddy cataract of flame. As it gained the summit it seemed to fall forward and catch fresh

GOLF and GUILE

By Margaret Muzzey

Philip Prentiss was looking for a place where he could spend his two weeks' vacation playing golf. As he stepped on the train he tried to recall exactly what pretty Sallie Norton had told him at a dance the night before. She said there were several attractive resorts along the river and one where a lot of professional men and women went every summer. Unfortunately the twostep had struck up at that moment, and she had omitted to mention its name.

"Golf links here?" Philip asked the conductor as the train slowed down at a little station.

"Yes, sir; finest in the country. Rockdale, Rockdale! Don't forget your packages!"

An unfortunate commuter who bundled off at the same time told Philip that the pretty little house he saw on the hill was the Rockdale Golf club, so he made his way across the fields to inspect it. The fresh breeze fanned his cheek, the blue river looked cool and refreshing in the distance, and he hoped this was the place Sallie had referred to. If, with its natural charm, it combined the advantage of making acquaintances desirable for a young man eager to advance in the legal profession nothing was left to be wished for. He felt inclined to join the commuter and ask a few more questions, only could not, in decency, without offering to carry some of his bundles and hated to make a first appearance in a new place bearing a bright blue box of laundered shirts or a large gilt bird cage.

He interviewed the club instructor, who was leaning dejectedly against a pillar of the piazza. After inquiring the requisites for eligibility Philip said:

"You give lessons, I suppose?"

"I can't collect anything. Amounts to givin' 'em, don't it?"

"How many members?" Philip asked.

"Half an almshouse, a third of an old ladies' home, a quarter of a state hospital—there's that many and that kind of folks."

The man had been drinking, Philip thought, as he strolled down the hill toward a boarding house not far away in search of luncheon.

Philip was seated at a small table opposite a grumpy old man dressed in a dirty flannel shirt. Among the other "guests" was an elderly woman wearing a very short skirt and spectacles, who hurried into the room followed by a fat man, who was muttering imprecations on things in general and golf in particular.

Philip's table companion chuckled maliciously.

"Must be pleasant for a man and his wife to occupy a ten by ten room all summer and not be on speaking terms. She won a cup because her handicap was bigger than his, and he won't forgive her."

"The whole atmosphere appears sulphuric," Philip remarked.

"Are you a golfer?" asked the old man.

"Trying to be," said Philip.

"Married?"

"No."

"It is a great game for the single blessed, but every family should be without it. There is no blood or marital relationship that can mitigate its concentrated bitterness. A woman went away from here yesterday to get a divorce because her husband accused her of moving her ball. It is an awful temptation. We are all human."

After luncheon the old man asked Philip to play around the course. Philip borrowed some clubs of the instructor and they started off. The old duffer, as Philip mentally stigmatized him, sent his ball twenty-five yards, Philip sent his seven times as many, then he and the caddy—they had one between them—ran ahead and waited.

The old man raised his ball and a clod of earth at the same time.

"He's diggin' for bait," said the caddy, grinning.

The duffer found his ball behind a small mound of sod, which he pounded flat with a brassy, batted the ball to the near side of the bunker, then paused to consider.

"Stamp on it; mash it!" cried Philip. "Why let a barrier raised by man interfere when you can smooth out nature as you did?"

Three times the duffer struck his ball, and each time it leaped up in the air and fell on the ground just behind him.

"I say, old man, go back to the farm and play tiddlywinks," gasped Philip. "But I don't need any more practice. I'm learning from observation."

He sent his ball, however, to the edge of the green.

The next time the duffer's ball landed just off the course in a rut. Philip lighted a cigarette, keeping one eye on his opponent, and as he held the blazing match before his face the old man shuffled his ball with his foot to an easy lie.

"Hold on there! What are you doing?" Philip cried.

"Nothing—nothing. I"—

"You moved your ball. I saw you. Didn't you?" to the caddy.

"Ain't he the Foxy Grandpa?" said the boy.

"He is a dishonest, disgusting, disreputable person. A man who would do that would rob widows and orphans." And Philip marched off in a rage, leaving the duffer staring in amazement after him.

Philip returned the clubs to the dismal instructor and wrung his hand at parting.

"I did you an injustice," he said. "Knowing, as I do now, what your life in this place must be, my heart bleeds for you."

Sallie had gone away when he returned to town, so Philip could not tell her the result of his first venture into the world of sport, but he soon made another and that time scraped the acquaintance of a youth on the train who gave him some information worth having.

"If you are looking for golf come to Sunnyside—going there myself. The links are good, and you will find a lot of nice people."

"I spent an afternoon at Rockdale recently," said Philip, "and found the oddest collection of cranks and farmers imaginable."

"Cranks perhaps, but not farmers," said the youth, laughing. "The most distinguished doctors, lawyers, politicians and scientists in the state go there and all the literary and progressive lights in petticoats."

"Good heavens! All my discrimination must have escaped," Philip exclaimed.

In the autumn Sallie was again visiting their common friend at whose house Philip first met her. They fell deeply in love with each other, Philip asked Sallie to marry him, and she went home to tell her father about it. Soon afterward Philip was invited to dine at Judge Norton's house in Orange.

The lovers had a few minutes' talk before dinner.

"Father says you won't be able to support a wife for years," said Sallie sadly.

"We are young enough to wait"—

"But he says in New York without a 'pull' a young man isn't likely to succeed ever."

"Doesn't he want a young partner to relieve him of the petty details?"

"Well, you see, there's my brother Sam—he's a sophomore and will be graduated in four years, if he's dropped only twice more."

They found the judge and his son waiting for them in the dining room. After greeting Philip cordially Sam introduced him to his father, and, to his blank dismay, Philip found himself shaking hands with—the duffer!

There was not, however, the faintest gleam of recognition in the judge's eye. Philip thanked heaven he had grown a Vandyke beard since their last meeting. At the end of the dinner Sam and Sallie left Philip to speak his piece to their father.

"Judge Norton, I want to marry your daughter," he said.

"How do you propose to support a wife?" inquired the judge.

"I shall work for her"—

"To all appearance," interrupted the judge, "you are without influence, fortune or the semblance of a clientele. No, young man. 'Go back to the farm and play tiddlywinks.'"

So the old duffer had known him after all.

"By the bye," said Philip, after an instant's hesitation, "I was telling Sam about our game of golf."

"You held me up to ridicule before my son!"

"It was your moving the ball that impressed him. He said he would despise a man who did that, even if it were his own father."

"You took a mean advantage of me—as if a man is ever expected to play fair when he is off for relaxation in the summer!" The judge was greatly agitated. "I would have given anything to prevent having Sam told that," he continued. "The effort of my life has been to inspire him with absolute confidence."

"But, don't you see, I couldn't tell Sam the man's name? I didn't know it myself till tonight."

"Upon my word, I forgot that!" exclaimed the judge, immensely relieved.

"How about my marrying Sallie? You said you would give anything to prevent Sam knowing you cheated at golf."

The judge winced.

"We're all human, remember. I might be tempted to tell him the man's name yet."

"No, no—not on any account! I'll gladly give you Sallie"—

"'To have and to hold'—my tongue—'from this day forward,'" interrupted Philip, laughing.

Cleaning Papered Walls.

Papered walls may be cleaned with a mop of cheesecloth strips an inch and a half wide and eight inches long made fast to a light handle. Brush the paper well with it twice a month.

Every spring and fall mix cornstarch, whiting and powdered fuller's earth in equal parts, dip the mop into the powder and rub walls and ceilings well with it. Then shake all powder from the mop, cover it with a damp flannel and go all over the wall again, wiping in long straight strokes. The flannel must be damp only. Wet, it is apt to leave marks. As soon as it is dirty change it for a fresh one.

Old Lace Curtains.

A clever device for utilizing the beauty that remains in fine lace curtains that have seen their day is to cut out the rich raised work rings and wreaths from which the delicate net has worn away. Apply them to squares of velvet or satin for use as cushion covers. Applied on olive or metallic green velvet or some soft wood brown shade the effect is rich and elegant, especially when further set off with a frill of lace and the back of the pillow made of silk or corresponding tone.

Beware of worrying about little things. It is the malady of happy people.

It is more heroic to live on one's grief than to die of it.

FULLER.

The temperance lecture given in our church on Wednesday evening Jan. 2nd, by the Rev. Mr. Bowerman, of Madoc, proved a real success. The evening being very favorable the church was well filled. All seemed well pleased with the very impressive lecture by Mr. Bowerman and the suitable address by Mr. E. Tummon, of Crookston, who presided as chairman for the evening.

Miss Ethel Rushnell, of West Huntingdon, was the guest of Miss Ida Burke on Wednesday evening.

Miss Bertha Calvert, of this place, is the guest of her sister, Mrs. F. McCauley, of Crookston, during the holidays.

Mr. Lorne Brough is spending a few days in Picton.

Mrs. Frederick Goodman, of Picton, was the guest of Mrs. Leslie Ray one day this week.

Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Burke of this place spent New Year's day visiting in Ivanhoe and Crookston.

Miss Mary Barnum, of Belleville, spent a few days this week the guest of Miss Bertha Morland, of this place.

Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Burke, entertained a number of our young people on Tuesday evening.

SECOND LINE THURLOW.

The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Melburn has been seriously ill.

Miss Alida Sutton has been on the sick list.

Miss Kathleen Buskard, daughter of Mr. Fred Buskard, was home from Toronto and spent a few days with her father.

Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell, of Moira, are visiting their sons, Mr. Robt. and Mr. Coria Mitchell.

WORTH MILLIONS.

BUT COULD NOT BUY BREAD—SO GOES THE STORY.

LIKE THE MAN AT KLONDIKE, WHO DIED OF STARVATION, WITH HIS HUT FULL OF GOLD.

MANY DIE YEARLY, WITH MEANS OF SALVATION AT HAND, WERE THEY BUT ABLE TO USE THEM.

Physicians the world over have known of and believed in the virtues of cod liver oil. They have, alas! also realized its drawbacks and the impossibility of administering it where it would do good. Doctors have seen hundreds of people die of consumption and other wasting diseases, whom they knew might have been saved had they only been able to take enough cod liver oil to obtain from it a sufficient amount of the medicinal principles which it contained.

It is not necessary to go to doctors to know why cod liver oil has not been a popular remedy, or to realize how few people are able to take enough of it to do them any good. The many who have needed and attempted to take this nauseating remedy, if they are still in a position where they need cod liver oil, are the ones who should throw their hats in the air and shout their joy from the house-top at the news which comes to us of Vinol.

These are the people who will never forget the name of this new remedy, nor will they ever cease to thank Mr. J. S. McKeown, our prominent druggist, who has become famous in the past few days, on account of his connection with the Boston firm who have introduced this same remedy.

How simple it all sounds, now that we know of it. Here Mr. McKeown has, right in his store, a preparation that looks like and tastes like delicious wine. It is a delicious wine, only there has been added to it this extract of the cod's liver, this peculiar special extract of the curative principles, the means of obtaining which is the only discovery about Vinol. We do not believe there is an invalid in this city suffering from throat, lung or bronchial troubles, or in fact any wasting disease, but has already interested himself in this preparation.

Mr. McKeown is kept busy explaining its merits and telling his many friends how it is now possible to take all that is necessary of cod liver oil, or Vinol, its concentrated active medicinal principles, to overcome disease. It has not been a difficult matter for him to explain, as he has done, the absolute usefulness of the grease itself and to demonstrate the great value of the medicinal properties of the liver of the cod. It has not been necessary for him to tell sufferers from such troubles that fat does not make fat, but simply upsets and disarranges the stomach.

There are many people right here in our city who know from but a few days' experience how much benefit they are deriving from this preparation, and who have already learned that the medicinal properties of Vinol act in a most wonderful manner in checking the symptoms of disease, while at the same time enabling the stomach to assimilate and digest from palatable, every-day food, the necessary nourishment to renew tissue depleted by disease.

Mr McKeown is justly pleased at the success that will attend the connection he has made with the prominent Boston chemists who are putting up this preparation, and justly deserves all the fame and profit that will attach themselves to his name, on account of his enterprise in introducing Vinol to our city.

Set this day's work first and you shall not be ashamed if it should prove to be your last.

Tom Belden's Burglary

By W. I. SCANDLIN

Copyright, 1906, by H. Sprague

The familiar number, 120, painted in white upon the brownstone steps, suggested to Tom the lateness of the hour, and, unlocking the vestibule door, he removed his shoes. Entering the house, he softly closed and bolted the door and, shoes in hand, groped his way to the stairs.

As he passed the door at the top of the flight he thought he heard some one moving in his aunt's apartment. He had placed his foot upon the first step of the upper flight when a flood of electric light made the hall as bright as day.

In its sudden glare Tom saw the glittering barrel of a revolver looking in his face and heard the command: "Hold those shoes at arm's length and back down into that hallroom behind you. If you try to escape, I'll shoot you dead!"

Tom stood aghast. His impulse was to run, but as he looked into the muzzle of that gun he mechanically obeyed, and, arms at length, a shoe dangling from each hand and beads of perspiration standing on his forehead, he backed into the room, and the key was turned upon him.

He realized that he was in a grave predicament. He could hear voices in the hall and some one speaking into the telephone, presumably summoning the police. Could he escape before they arrived? He could perhaps swing himself out of the window ledge and drop to the pavement, but the danger of broken limbs and an ignominious capture caused him to abandon the idea. The only other means of exit was by the door into the hall, and it was locked. Clearly he must remain where he was until the police came, when he could explain.

TOM SAW THE GLITTERING BARREL OF A REVOLVER.

The bell rang. A detective and two officers entered.

"Good morning, ma'am. This is Mrs. Hapgood? Sergeant says you've got a burglar here under lock and key."

"Yes, officer; he's on the next floor in the hall room."

"Go up and fetch him," said the detective, and the two officers mounted the stairs. Mrs. Hapgood preceded the detective into the library.

"My brother, Mr. Waters," she began, "is connected with one of the morning papers. I have telephoned him, and he will be here soon. In his absence I am alone in the house with my maid and the cook. I retired about half past 11. The cook locked up downstairs, as usual, and is certain that every door and window was secure. I was awakened by some one moving about on this floor. I rose quietly and listened. I waited till I knew by the sound that the villain was just at the foot of the second flight, and then I turned on the lights, faced him with my revolver and quickly had him locked in the hall room."

"You're to be complimented, ma'am, on your nerve," commented the officer.

The officers came down the stairs with Tom between them. "There's a mistake here, sir," said one of them. "We'd better give the chap a chance to explain before we take him in. If he's crooked, he's the best disguised of any of 'em I ever seen."

"Tell Clancy to bring him in, and you go downstairs and find out if everything is O. K. there."

Tom had resumed his shoes and pulled himself together, and when he entered the library in charge of Officer Clancy there was nothing in his appearance to suggest the nature of his alleged profession.

"You are doubtless warranted, madam, in suspecting men of evil intent, but I assure you I am innocent of everything but a stupid blunder that led me to enter your house instead of my aunt's, with whom I am spending a few days. Her number, 120, is the same as this, but, as I know now, on the street below. The houses resemble each other very closely, and, strangely enough, my latchkey opened your door. Here it is. You may satisfy yourself, officer."

Clancy took the key, went out, closing both doors behind him, and reentered without difficulty.

"I can only offer you my most abject apologies and trust you will accept my explanation," Tom continued.

"Did you find a gun on him, Clancy?" asked the detective.

"No, sir, but he's got a good big wad of money."

"Do you know, ma'am, if your money's safe?"

"Yes, it's untouched in the drawer of my dresser."

"This is no new scheme, ma'am, but I'm strongly inclined to think that in this case the gent is straight. If the people on the next street identify him we can let him go. But of course if you say the word we'll pull him in now."

"No; give him a chance to clear himself, but be sure before you let him go."

Tom now breathed freely. He knew that a few inquiries would set him straight, but he had greatly feared that he might be locked up while they were being made.

The officer returned from downstairs and, stepping to Tom's side, reported:

"There's a pane of glass out of the rear extension window. The back door is open and the swag's all tied up in the tablecloth in the dining room, and"— Here the maid, entering excitedly, interrupted. "I'm sure, ma'am," she gasped, "I just heard some one moving in your room!"

"There's two of 'em, boys," whispered the detective. "Fit them bracelets." And Tom was handcuffed. "Clancy, go quietly upstairs and cover the door to the roof. Brady, watch the fire escape." Then, turning to Tom, "You walk quietly ahead of me, and if you give any signal I'll make you look like the outside ring of a target after pistol practice."

Instantly the situation became clear to Tom, but he knew his best course was to obey, so he started down the hall and quietly preceded the officer up the stairs.

At the top of the flight the detective stopped and listened. Suddenly pushing open the door of Mrs. Hapgood's room, he covered with his revolver the real burglar, who was pilfering the dresser.

"Here, Clancy," he shouted, "put the nippers on this man and take 'em both downstairs!"

They were halfway down when the front door opened and a tall, middle aged man of fine appearance entered. He was evidently prepared for the situation and was about to speak to the officer when, seeing Tom, he stepped forward and, extending his hand, exclaimed:

"Hello, Belden. How in the name of conscience did you come here, and what's all this about anyway?"

"Excuse me, Mr. Walters," answered Tom, "if I give you both my hands. It's difficult to differentiate just now, but if you can prove your identity and establish mine you'll put me under eternal obligations." Then, turning to the officer: "Say, man, don't you think I can get along without these ornaments now? I've helped you to catch a real thief, and it's time you let up."

"Why, you see," said Mr. Waters to his sister after the officers had gone with their prisoner, "I have known Tom Belden for years. He used to be our Boston correspondent.

Then he turned to Tom.

"Come on, my boy; let's go down to the dining room and see if that dratted thief left any cigars on the sideboard. I'll keep you with me until I think it safe to let you out. You might have further trouble finding the right 120."

"I say, Mr. Waters," responded Tom, "if you'll promise not to give this yarn away to the boys I'll sign an agreement to stop at a hotel whenever I visit New York again and give you a key to my room."

Dead Ivory.

The idea that innumerable elephants are shot to supply the market with ivory is incorrect, as the majority is what is known as dead ivory—that is, tusks of animals that have died from natural causes in the bush, many of them perhaps centuries ago. Climatic and other influences cause the color of the ivory to vary from pure white to dark brown. The latter, however, is only a surface discoloration that can be removed by scraping. Climate, however, affects the substance to a very great degree, rendering some hard and brittle and in other cases increasing the liability to crack and split. Some of the ivory that arrives from the northern part of central Africa is exposed to the sun throughout its long journey on camels across the desert and has to be bound up in rawhide to protect it and prevent it from splitting. Trifling as a defect in the surface may appear to the uninitiated, it may reveal to the expert the presence of disease within or may enormously reduce the value of the tusk by rendering it unsuitable for some particular class of work.

Birds of Prey.

The sharp eyed hawk can spy a lark upon a piece of earth almost exactly the same color at twenty times the distance it is perceptible to man or dog. A kite soaring out of human sight still can distinguish and pounce upon lizards and field mice upon the ground, and the distance at which vultures and eagles can spy their prey is almost incredible. Recent discoveries have inclined naturalists to the belief that birds of prey have not the acute sense of smell or of hearing that has hitherto been accredited them. Their keen sight seems better to account for their action, and they appear to be guided by sight alone, as they never sniff at anything, but dart straight after the objects of their desire. Their counterparts in the ocean doubtless smell and see, but are more guided by smell than sight. In both sharks and rays the eyes are good and have a distinct expression, though since they scent their prey from a short distance and swim up to it with greatest rapidity, smell may be called their real eye.

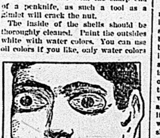
A SIMPLE DISGUISE.

Easy Way of Masking Yourself With Two Almond Shells.

Here is an easy way to disguise yourself and have fun with your playmates:

Take two half shells of an almond, large enough to be held between the upper eyelid and the cheek. Bore a small hole in the middle of each one a little larger than the pupil of the eye. You must do this with the sharp end of a penknife, as such a tool as a gimlet will crack the nut.

The inside of the shells should be thoroughly cleaned. Paint the outsides white with water colors. You can use oil colors if you like, only water colors dry quickly, which will enable you to make the monster pop eyes the faster.



THE EYE MASKS IN PLACE.

Paint an iris of dark green around the pupil hole, leaving a white spot for the "high light," or, in other words, the reflected light which is in every eyeball. Make the iris (or dark portion of the eye) somewhat larger than in the natural eye. You may get the natural color by mixing blue with a little yellow and red.

Now fit these "goggle eyes" in position after the fashion of a monocle or single eyeglass, and you will find that you are practically masked. The eyes and their expression play a very important part in the makeup of a face, and these two simple "eye masks" will make people stare and stare at you ever so closely before they can be sure of identity.—New York Mail.

GRAMMAR GAME.

Any Number Can Play, and It Makes Lots of Fun.

Paper and pencil are necessary for this game, which can be played by any number of children.

Each player writes a noun at the top of a paper and turns it down and then passes the paper to his right hand neighbor, who writes a verb on that paper, turns it and passes it on as before; then an adjective is written, next time a pronoun. After the papers have passed round three times (the process is repeated as described above) they are collected and shaken up in a hat or in some other convenient way, and each player draws a paper and is given ten minutes to write a paragraph or sentence containing the words. With the words on the paper may also be used as many times as necessary the articles a, an and the, the conjunctions and, but, etc., also prepositions and adverbs. Proper names may be used for nouns when desired, and the verb may be used in any form. Here is a sample paper:

Noun, Bench.
Verb, To giggle.
Adjective, Gorgeous.
Pronoun, I.
Noun, Polly.
Verb, Was.
Adjective, Toothsome.
Pronoun, He.
Noun, Rhinoceros.
Verb, Purr.
Adjective, Silky.
Pronoun, Her.

Sample sentence from the above words:

He and I were on the bench giggling at gorgeous Polly when a silky, toothsome rhinoceros purred at her.

TRUE HOSPITALITY.

It Is Not Made Up of Grand Meals and Entertainments.

In a home that I have in mind the real spirit of hospitality is shown at its best. There is often no maid, and sometimes the mistress of this household is nearly overworked, but invariably the guest is made comfortable. If it is a hot day a tray bearing lemonade, iced tea or ginger ale and wafers is brought at once to refresh the caller, or on a cool day it will be hot cocoa or tea or a bouillon cup of hot soup. Invariably there is something to express a kindly feeling for one's comfort, and it is never preceded with the query whether you will have the cup if it should be prepared.

Many a hostess will ask her guest if he will have refreshment, and it is rare that one replies that he will, for the question itself implies effort, something that should never appear in a hospitable offering. The overconscientious hostess, who fears that her beverage may not be made just right or that her china is not quite fine enough, misses much pleasure for herself and guest. The beginner in housekeeping would do well to acquire the habit of putting the true spirit of hospitality into her homelife at the outset, and as she grows older her home will have acquired a reputation for comfort and cheer that an ostentatious dinner or luncheon now and then will never confer.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

DRESS HINTS.

In pressing ribbons with a hot iron, lay them between two sheets of manila paper, and they will come out like new.

In sewing a piece of material on the bias to a straight piece the former is apt to become stretched. To avoid this the bias should be placed underneath, and it will then be sewn in evenly.

If sleeves are too long or too full don't rip them out. First take a tuck or fold in the tops, making them the desired length, and baste. Try on and if right cut off the superfluous material.

Skirts should always be provided with three bands—one on the right side, one on the left and one to hold up the drapery at the back. If this precaution is taken it is much better to hang up a skirt than to fold it and lay it away.

In making up any material with a nap remember that the nap should always run downward. This fact should not be forgotten when sponging and pressing, otherwise you will make a shiny streak on the surface of your material.

Mrs. B.

Complained of dizzy spells, and more or less stomach trouble, since a school girl. Had tried numerous remedies for stomach and liver; on investigation found she had headache both front and back, sleeplessness, and a frequent tired feeling. After a careful examination, found compound astigmatism: corrected with the proper glasses, especially made for her. In TWO MONTHS was VERY MUCH BETTER in appearance, headaches and stomach trouble ALL GONE. She said: "It is strange that I should have suffered for more than 20 years and no one seemed to know that my trouble was caused by my eyes: it hardly seems possible now, but I feel perfectly well." High Court Of Justice.

Before Boyd C., Maclaren J. A. and Mabee J.

Murphy v. Murphy.—E. G. Porter (Belleville) and M. Wright (Belleville) for plaintiffs, W. M. Douglas, K.C., for defendants. Argument of appeal by plaintiffs from judgment of Cluto. J., dismissing action upon three promissory notes, dated 4th December, 1901, for $1,000 each, made by defendants James Murphy and James Quinn to the order of Patrick Murphy and endorsed over by Patrick Murphy to plaintiffs, a partnership carrying on a banking business in the village of Tweed, concluded from yesterday. Judgment reserved.

A Small Flood.

Owing to the ice in the river breaking up and forming a blockade from the lower bridge to the footbridge, the water lately rose to an unusual height. Whilst no particular damage was sustained, some cellars of business places along the west side of Front street had considerable water in them. Precautions had, however, been taken to remove goods to a place of safety. A portion of the stables in rear of the Anglo-American Hotel were flooded.

Accident Caused Mrs. Reed's Death.

On December 23rd, Mrs. Benjamin Reed, an old lady, whilst on a visit to her daughter, Mrs. S. Clarke, Thurlow, had the misfortune to fall and break her hip. This, owing to her advanced age, had the effect of causing death, which occurred yesterday afternoon. Deceased, whose maiden name was Miss Mary Ashley, was born in Thurlow township 83 years ago, and had resided there all her life. She was a member of the Presbyterian church, and was a lady who was esteemed by all who knew her. Last March Mr. Reed, who was also 83 years of age, preceded her to the tomb. Five daughters survive, namely, Mrs. Jos. Bryant, Mrs. Sam Clarke, Thurlow; Mrs. John Vermilyea, Sidney; Mrs. Jaques, Foxboro, and Mrs. Jas. McCurdy, of this city.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

SPORTING NOTES.

The O'Brien-Burns pictures drew a select crowd of "dead game sports" to the opera house last night. The pictures, so far as clearness and absence of vibration was concerned, were probably as good as, if not better than, any ever seen here. But the contest, however exciting it may have been to those who saw it first-hand, was not of the kind to make good moving pictures. There was too much clinching and roughing. The men were clinched fully three-quarters of the time, the main desire of each man, apparently, being to hold the other fellow safe. Jeffries, the referee, had his work cut out in getting the men to break, and certainly earned his money. The pictures were run off too fast, and as a consequence the lightning-like movements of the men could not be intelligently followed. From what one could see, O'Brien was the cleverer man of the two, but he evidently had a wholesome dread of the bull-like rushes of the sturdy Canadian, for "Gentleman Jack" acted, good part of the time, as though he were in a footrace rather than a fight. Burns seemed to be eager for close quarters all the time, his favorite game, when he got at his opponent, being to duck under his arm, clinch and hammer the body. It did not seem that the referee could have decided the contest anything but a draw, for both men were strong and willing at the close—O'Brien, apparently, a little the stronger of the two. The only thing on which Burns could have claimed the decision was his aggressiveness, and he certainly did three-quarters of the leading. Everything else being even, this should have given him the decision, according to the up-to-date rules of the game. Two very interesting scenes shown were the training quarters of the men, with the gladiators doing preparatory stunts, getting in condition for the contest.

Good ice for the game to-morrow night is now a certainty. The locals have a little score to wipe out with the Pea Canners, and the game should be a corker.

Parts of Quinte Walls Fell Down.

The high wind prevailing last night blew down portions of the Quinte walls which were standing after the fire. Many residents of the east hill heard the crash, and it is said that, should the high wind continue, other parts of the walls are sure to go. Architects, we are told, say that the walls now standing cannot be utilized when the hotel is rebuilt; they must all come down before building operations begin.

Yesterday and to-day the appraisers were here looking over the ruins and examining what salvage had been saved in order to effect a settlement in the insurance of the various companies involved. It is expected that a satisfactory settlement will be effected.

The appraisers have completed their work as far as the building is concerned, and the insurance has been satisfactorily arranged. Mr. Walter Alford was looking after Mr. Jenkins interests in that respect.

The appraisers were to-day busily engaged in estimating the loss upon the contents, which was quite a task.

Shortly before noon to-day a large portion of the south wall, facing Bridge street, fell, but caused no damage.

Eastern Ontario Dairymen Meet.

Ottawa, Jan. 9. — The annual convention of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association began in this city this morning with Mr. Ruddick, Dairy Commissioner, in the chair.

President Derbyshire's address was, as usual, an interesting one. After referring to several other matters he said;

"We find that we have made about 100,000 more cheese this year than last, yet we find that we are behind in the exports of butter about 180,000 packages, but with the high prices obtained, we find that the estimated value of cheese, butter and bacon exported will amount to about $46,500,000 from the make of 1906, and when you add to this $54,500,000, the value of these articles of food (including milk) consumed at home, we have a grand total of $101,000,000, which is $6,000,000 more than for the year 1905, and as our dairymen become better educated in the work, we expect to see the demand for both foreign and home consumption increase each succeeding year.

"Under the direction of the Hon. Nelson Monteith, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, we have had twenty-eight (28) instructors and two sanitary inspectors for the year 1906 just closed, and we expect our staff to be increased for next year and each instructor made a sanitary inspector. We have, also, had the services of our chief instructor, G. G. Publow, whose untiring energies and marked ability have always been at the disposal of this association."

The following committee were appointed;

Business—J. A. Ruddick, John R. Reid, R. B. Faith, R. G. Murphy.

Nominations — J. R. Dargavel, M. P. P., Edward Kidd, James Whitton.

Legislation — D. Derbyshire, M.P., John J. Dargavel, M. P. P., Henry Glendenning, G. G. Publow.

Resolutions — R. G. Murphy, John R. Reid, L. Patton, T. B. Carlow.

The convention promises to be largely attended.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"AROUND THE CLOCK."

On Friday, January 11th, at the opera house, the management will politely proffer the Ritchie London Comedy and Pantomime Company in their latest and greatest musical comedy success, "Around the Clock," with the assurance that it will prove the most pleasing presentation of its kind ever seen in this city. The scenery is all new and pretty, the costumes are beautiful, and the music of the tuneful, inspiring sort. The Ritchie comedians need little introduction to local play-goers. They are perhaps best remembered for their inimitable work in the vaudeville classic, "A Night in a London Music Hall," which was one of the real novelties at the variety houses last season.

Mrs. Pitman's Funeral.

Little Boy Had A Narrow Escape

SLEIGH RIDING DOWN HILL AND RAN UNDER FEET OF TEAM — INJURIES WERE NOT SERIOUS.

Reggie Griffith, a little English boy, whose parents reside on Catherine St., had a narrow escape from serious injury or death yesterday afternoon about 2 o'clock. It seems that he was coasting down the hill at the juncture of Isabel and Catherine Sts., when he ran right under the feet of a team which was coming down the Catherine St. hill. Mr. Ernest Thompson, who saw the accident, picked the little chap up and took him home. The driver of the team, it is said, went right on without manifesting any interest in the child's welfare. It was at first thought the boy was badly hurt, but beyond a cut over the eye and a few bruises he does not to-day seem much the worse of his accident. His escape was certainly a miraculous one.

PERSONAL ..... AND ... SOCIAL.

Mr. A. Pitman, Catherine street, is seriously ill.

Miss May Mouck has gone on a visit to Detroit, Mich.

Mr. Arthur Bolyea, of Detroit, is in the city for a few days, having been called here by the unfortunate and fatal accident to his father, Mr. L. Bolyea.

Mr. and Mrs. R. McCurdy, of Stirling were in the city yesterday to attend the funeral of Mrs. McCurdy's father, the late Mr. John McKenna.

Home Wedding.

A quiet home wedding took place at 9.30 this morning, at the residence of Mr. Wm. Rosevear, Sinclair street, when his only daughter, Miss Helen B., became the wife of Mr. Charles Denton, whose home is near Ogdensburg, N.Y. The couple were unattended, with the exception of little Myrtle Andrews, daughter of Mr. Robt. Andrews, who acted as flower girl. Rev. R. H. Leitch performed the ceremony, at the conclusion of which a wedding repast was partaken of. Mr. and Mrs. Denton left at noon for their future home in New York State.

An Omission.

We regret that, in our table of returns of the Aldermanic election on Monday, the name of Mr. E. J. Butler was inadvertently omitted. Ald.-elect Butler stood ninth on the list, and this was his vote: Foster ward, 69; Samson, 101; Ketcheson, 130; Baldwin, 117; Bleecker, 44; Coleman, 101; Murney, 7, 88; Murney, 8, 37. Total, 687.

SENT FOR TRIAL.

Ex-Bank Manager McGill Committed For Making False Returns.

Toronto, Jan. 9.—Chas. McGill, formerly general manager of the Ontario Bank, was committed for trial yesterday morning by Magistrate Denison on the charge of making false returns to the Department at Ottawa.

The commissioners who went to New York brought back no evidence to affect this case, and the magistrate made the committal on the testimony given during the former hearing. The indictment will go before the Grand Jury immediately and in the meantime new bail bonds to the amount of $50,000 were made out.

The other two charges, of stealing over $1,000,000 and $136,000 from the Ontario Bank, come up for investigation on Thursday, and sureties to the amount of $50,000 were supplied for them also.

Fruit Growers' Officers.

Toronto, Jan. 9.—The first meeting of the directors of the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association, since the new act has come into force, took place in the office of the secretary, at the Parliament Buildings, yesterday afternoon. The following executive was elected: President, Harold Jones, Maitland; vice-president, Elmer Tick of Oshawa; secretary-treasurer, Percy Hodgetts of Toronto; executive, Messrs. W. H. Bunting of St. Catharines and A. T. Sherrington of Walkerton. There is a balance of $725 on hand in the treasury, with some outstanding liabilities, which will reduce it to about $500. The receipts from the Fruit, Flower and Honey Show were about $600 behind the expenses incurred.

Half Million Damage Claim.

Montreal, Jan. 9.—If the courts allow the full damages claimed by the Dominion Iron & Steel Co. against the Dominion Coal Co., Mr. James Ross will have to hand over the entire capital of his company save about half a million. The sum of $400,000 is claimed for damages to the coke ovens, furnaces, loss of profits and increased cost of production up to Nov. 30, 1906. The sum of $63,530 is also claimed for the increased price of coal bought from outside sources, and actually delivered to the Steel Co. up to Nov. 30, 1906.

Lumber Famine In Winnipeg.

Winnipeg, Jan. 9.—Lumber prices have taken a sudden leap and the outlook is far from bright for Winnipeg builders this year. Since Dec. 1 the price of wholesale lumber has gone up nearly $2. The principal cause of the advance is the inability to get the lumber out this winter, owing to the heavy fall of snow and the scarcity of men.

New Motto on Coins.

Paris, Jan. 9.—Finance Minister Caillaux has directed the authorities of the mint to substitute on all coins the words, "Liberty, Equality and Fraternity," for the old device of "God Protect France," in accordance with the amendment to the budget appropriation, forming a coin which was adopted by the Chamber of Deputies.

PERSIA'S SHAH IS DEAD

Public Announcement of the Fact Is, However, Delayed.

Soon After Sunset the Doors of the Harem Were Closed, the Sign That All Was Over—Vital Functions of Oriental Potentate Suspended Tuesday and Heir-Apparent and Ministers Were Summoned.

London, Jan. 9.—The Daily Mail's correspondent at Teheran, in a telegram sent last night at 11.50 o'clock, says:

"The Shah of Persia died last evening, though no public announcement of the fact will be made until to-day. All the Shah's vital functions were suspended yesterday, and at 5 o'clock last evening the heir-apparent and the Ministers were summoned. The women of the palace also began preparations for mourning.

"Soon after sunset the doors of the harem were closed. This was the sign that all was over."

JUST TEDDY'S IGNORANCE.

Made Him Speak as He Did of Japanese Labor at 'Frisco.

Sacramento, Cal., Jan. 9.—Governor Pardee, in his annual message, which was presented yesterday to the Legislature, devoted much space to the Japanese school question.

"It is safe to say that the President, when he penned the portion of his annual message upon the opening of Congress, in which he refers to the treatment of the Japanese in the San Francisco schools, was not aware of the condition of the coast, and especially in California," said the governor. "In common with the people of the east, who have no experience with unassimilable people of Japan and China, the President does not understand the racial differences between the Japanese and the Chinese and people of Caucasian blood.

"Coming in contact only with a few educated and intelligent individuals of these two races, the people of the Eastern States do not understand that to permit the immigration of only a small fraction of the whole number of these people means the monopolizing of them of such pursuits as they may engage in."

Jap Soldiers In Honolulu.

Honolulu, Jan. 9.—Although most of the 760 Japanese laborers arriving on the steamer Chiusa were classed as laborers in search of employment, none have gone to the plantations. It has been discovered that many of them were former soldiers, who brought with them their uniforms. All are now scattered in Oriental quarters.

THE GRAIL OF PEACE.

Britain Is to Take the Lead In Its Pursuit.

Paris, Jan. 9.—Wm. T. Stead, the well-known English journalist, who arrived here Monday, says, in an interview, that he is on his way around the world in the interest of peace.

He further declares that he is authorized by the British Premier, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, to say that Great Britain, if no other country did so, would at the approaching second peace conference at The Hague, raise the question of taking steps to provide for the maintenance of international peace.

Mr. Stead says this will be done in the form of two propositions, as follows:

"(1) That each country participating in the conference appropriate a sum of money to be used in the propagation of the idea of maintaining international peace.

"(2) That each country participating in the conference render obligatory the observance of the article of the act of the peace conference of 1899, permitting a third power to tender mediation, without giving offence, between two disputing powers, and also that the participating powers, extend the scope so as to bid the signatories, in case of a declaration of war, not to begin hostilities for a fortnight, in which interim friendly powers would have the right to intervene in an attempt to adjust their quarrel."

To Deport Prince Michael.

Portland, Me., Jan. 9.—Prince Michael, the Windsor, Ont., leader of the sect of Flying Rollers, who was detained at St. John, N.B., by the Dominion immigration officials, because he is a felon, has arrived here. He will be deported by the United States Immigration Department.

Thamesville People Arrested.

THEY WANT CHEAP POWER.

Hon. Mr. Hanna's Reading of the Big Majority For Bylaw.

Toronto, Jan. 9.—The latest returns show that the majorities in favor of the Niagara power bylaw were even greater than at first reported.

The vote in Berlin, according to Town Solicitor Clement, may be added to on the 17th by those who failed to vote yesterday, and the ballot will not be counted till after that date. In one polling division, where the ballots were counted, inadvertently, the vote for Niagara power was 153 in favor and 6 against.

The latest returns of those incomplete yesterday are:

New Hamburg, carried by 290.

Hon. W. J. Hanna's View.

Hon. W. J. Hanna gave expression to the general view yesterday in a press interview.

"It is an emphatic intimation that the people want cheap power, and want it quick," said the Provincial Secretary, "and a powerful endorsation of the efforts of the Government in that direction. In this connection I cannot speak too highly of Adam Beck's untiring work. He sacrificed his holidays and worked day and night in mastering the details of the subject, and in addressing meetings. It has been a most unique case of a public-spirited man working solely in the interests of the public."

Meanwhile the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission meets to-day Hon. Adam Beck having arrived at the Queen's last night.

STRIKERS WRECK STORE.

Refuse to Accept Award Made by the Mexican President.

City of Mexico, Jan. 9.—Late Monday word was received here that the textile workers in the mills in the City of Orizaba, State of Vera Cruz, who are on a strike, had burned a company store, and were threatening to destroy the mills. Two regiments of soldiers were assembled and rushed to the scene aboard a special train.

The mills where the trouble occurred employ about 5,000 men. On Friday last it was announced that the strike of the textile workers, which had spread throughout the republic, had been settled owing to the intervention of President Diaz and Vice-President Corrales.

The owner of the property thus far destroyed is Eduardo Garcin, a citizen of France. The trouble started on Saturday morning, when 2,000 workers met in Rio Blanco, near Orizaba, and voted not to accept the ward of President Diaz. Violent speeches were made and the men arming themselves with sticks and stones looted the company's store, destroyed it and confiscated thousands of dollars in money and goods. They then pillaged private houses and Government shops.

30 Dead At Arizaba.

Belated reports from the mill district of Arizaba, State of Vera Cruz, indicate that the Government is now complete master of the situation.

To gain control of the rioters, however, it was necessary for the troops to fire on the men. Thirty dead have been counted, while over 80 are reported wounded. It is believed that the strike has been broken.

Doctors Admit

That They Can Do Nothing More for Your Stomach Than Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are Doing Every Day.

COSTS NOTHING TO TRY.

According to the expert analysis of government authorities in the United States and Great Britain, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets contain the exact elements provided by nature for digesting food in the healthy stomach.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have saved sufferers from stomach disorders millions of dollars by giving them, in one small 50-cent package, more relief than countless treatments by physicians would bring about at $3.00 per visit.

Perhaps you are afflicted with dyspepsia — or some kindred disease arising from a disordered digestion. It may be headaches, heartburn, palpitation, liver trouble, insomnia, nervous debility. They all have their beginning in a stomach which does not secrete the juices or grind the food which is taken into it.

If so, we urge you to send for a free trial package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. It will cost you nothing and surely will bring us no gain unless you find, after using it, that you need a full-sized package.

There is absolutely no danger in using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. Nothing is contained in them that has not been subjected to the closest scrutiny by the government officials.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest your food without demanding a careful diet. One grain of these Tablets has power to digest 3,000 grains or ordinary food. You can be sure therefore that no matter what your condition, these little tablets taken after each meal will shortly restore your stomach to its normal condition and render it capable of doing its work unassisted.

We withhold the names of hundreds who have written us voluntarily expressing their gratitude to this simple substitute for nature.

Send for trial package to-day. F. A. Stuart Co., 70 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

Important Scheme For Development of All-British Route.

Canada to Be Portion of the Highway to the East to Be Launched Soon—To Cut Ireland's Corner—With 25-Knot Steamer Halifax Can Be Reached In 4 Days—Six Millions Capital Required.

London, Jan. 9.—(C. A. P.)—An important scheme for the development of all-British routes to the far east is likely to be produced at the coming parliamentary session.

Its object, says The Tribune, is to accelerate the carriage of mail by establishing a packet station at a point in the British Isles nearest Canada, viz., Blacksod Bay, Mayo, where there are a deep and spacious harbor, a railway ferry and steamers to carry mails and passengers across to Ireland.

It is stated if 25-knot steamers are used, Halifax can be reached over the route in four days. The capital required is £1,250,000.

CHAMBERLAIN'S MESSAGE.

Sentiments Should Go Straight to the Heart of Every Briton.

London, Jan. 9.—The Glasgow Herald, referring to Mr. Chamberlain's message to Canada in connection with the year's trade returns, says that consideration of the latter leads Mr. Chamberlain once more to emphasize the preference to pass lightly over protection. "When trade is good, talk imperialism; when bad, talk protective duties," is the ingenious political version of "Heads I win; tails you lose."

The Scotsman says the sentiments embodied in the message should go straight home to the heart of every patriotic Briton, and the paper asks: "If we continue to show no inclination to meet the approaches of Canada, can we depend upon the people of Canada maintaining their present attitude. The issue has never yet been fully raised in this country."

Grand River at Galt Overflows Earliest In 49 Years.

Galt, Jan. 9.—The first installment of ice on the dam came down yesterday morning at 7 o'clock, and a small-sized flood is now in progress. When the ice first broke up the water reached a level to within 18 inches of the top of the retaining wall at the Knox and Central Church manses. About 8 o'clock the flood began to diminish. The breaking up of the ice is the earliest in 49 years. The cellars of the merchants and residents on South, and a few of those on North Water streets, were flooded.

Another Victim Of Assassin.

"Hangman" Gen. Pavloff Falls Before One of Men He Hated

Riddled With Bullets, This Enemy of Russia's Revolutionists Was Shot In the Garden of Chief Military Court Building, St. Petersburg--Crime Carefully Prepared--Policeman Shot Down.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 10.—Lieut.-Gen. Vladimir Pavloff, the Military Procurator, or Advocate-General, generally known since the late Parliament as "Hangman" Pavloff, from the epithet constantly applied to him by the Radical deputies, was shot and killed at 10 o'clock yesterday morning while walking in the garden of the chief military court building, near the Moika Canal. The assassin, who, apparently, was disguised as a workman, was captured after a long chase through the crowded city streets, during which he fired about forty shots from two revolvers which he carried, killing a policeman and accidentally wounding a boy.

Murder Carefully Planned.

The crime showed evidence of the same careful preparation which was characteristic of the murderers of General Alexis Ignatieff and Von der Launitz and was undoubtedly carried out by the same organization which has sentenced Emperor Nicholas and several of the Ministers to death. The assassin, who wore the uniform of a military clerk attached to the court, obtained an entrance to the garden under the pretext of submitting a report to the Military Procurator.

Used Rapid-fire Pistol.

He approached the unsuspecting General within an arm's length, drew a pistol and fired the whole load, seven shots, into Pavloff's body. Every shot was well aimed, and two of them tore a gaping wound in his breast. The General expired while being carried to his apartments in the same building. From the nature of the wounds it appeared that the steel-jacketed bullets were flattened in order that they might inflict more serious wounds.

Assassin's Race For Life.

Hastily slipping another "clip" of cartridges into his revolver and drawing a second weapon, the assassin ran across the garden to the carriage entrance, threatened the porter with his pistols and dashed down Glinka street, past the Imperial Opera House, with a crowd of thirty house porters and court attaches in close pursuit. A policeman stationed in front of the opera house attempted to seize the assassin, but was shot down by the latter, who also wounded a boy. The terrorist then resumed his flight, firing at the police officers and house porters who attempted to bar his way. His ammunition became exhausted and he was intercepted and captured when he reached Lantern lane.

When taken to the police station General Pavloff's slayer was in high spirits and answered the officers' questions with laughing jests.

A Blood-thirsty Officer.

The entire career of General Pavloff, who was 55 years old, married, and had two children, was spent in the judicial department of the army. After serving several years as a military judge he was appointed Judge Advocate-General of the War Ministry, and later Procurator of the Supreme Military Court. General Pavloff was delegated by War Minister Rudiger to answer the interpellations of the Government in the Lower House of Parliament in regard to the courts-martial and executions in the Baltic Provinces and in Poland. The Military Procurator justified these acts with such cold-bloodedness and disregard of the sentiments of the members that it aroused the indignation of almost the entire House, and he was driven from the rostrum with cries of "murderer," "hangman," "assassin." He was not allowed to speak again. The murdered General was a large landowner. After the dissolution of Parliament, he organized the Portective Political League to combat Radical projects for the expropriation of landed estates.

Widespread Treachery Feared.

The police have established that a youth who was killed Tuesday after he had made a bonfire of his papers and started firing a revolver through the door of his room was a terrorist. The information which the social revolutionists have been able to acquire of the movements of its marked victims indicates the existence of widespread treachery in the military court, and the greatest alarm is felt in official circles, where it is believed that a reign of terror has begun. The assassin of General Pavloff was apparently informed by an accomplice among the court attaches that the General was in the garden at that hour, as the garden is entirely enclosed, and yesterday was a holiday, the Military Procurator, therefore, not following his usual routine.

G.T.P. Contract Forfeited.

Winnipeg, Jan. 10.—It is said the Macdonald MacMillan Co., railway contractors, have forfeited their 250-mile contract on the Grand Trunk Pacific from Portage La Prairie to the Touchwood Hills, and that the contract has been given to the New York firm of Trent & Johnston.

There is a rumor afloat to the effect that the firm has failed for a quarter of a million.

Not Jake Gaudaur's Daughter.

Orillia, Jan. 10.—J. G. Gaudaur, the well-known oarsmen, says the despatch published in Tuesday's dailies, that a daughter of his had been arrested in St. Louis, Mo., charged with the theft of trinkets, is totally without foundation. Mr. Gaudaur says the girl is no relative of his, as his children are all at home here.

Escaped a Whipping.

Hamilton, Jan. 10.—Arthur Smith, who pleaded guilty Tuesday to a charge of attempted criminal assault, was yesterday sentenced by Justice Clute to one year in the Central Prison. On account of his previous good record he escaped a whipping.

BARONESS COUTTS' WILL.

All Her Controllable Property Left at Disposal of Husband.

London, Jan. 10.—The late Baroness Burdett-Coutts by her will, which was signed in 1888, left all the property at her disposal to her husband, who is her sole executor.

Under the will of the late Duchess of St. Albans, the baroness was only entitled to the income of the trust estate, but had no power over the capital of the estate, which now passes to Francis Coutts.

On her marriage the late baroness, in order to avoid litigation, effected a compromise with the successors under the duchess' will by which she surrendered a large portion of the income from the trust estate and at various times since she conveyed almost all her real property to her husband, William Lehman Ashmead Bartlett Burdett-Coutts.

RAILWAY TAXATION.

Amounts to Eight Cents Per Head on 1901 Census Population.

Toronto, Jan. 10.—Eight cents a head on the census population of 1901 is the ratio of railway taxation to be paid by the province to the municipalities under the act of last session of the Legislature.

For each non-paying patient in any asylum the municipality to which such patient belongs will contribute from this allowance ten cents a day.

The amount collected from the steam railways was $375,[illegible]89 for 1906, as against $191,990 for 1905. For the expenses of the railway board $30,000 is deducted, and half of the balance of $172,844 will be distributed as above stated. The province retains the rest.

The municipalities will receive about twice as much as formerly.

REGISTER ALL FIRES.

Underwriters' Deputation Waits on Government With That Request.

Toronto, Jan. 10.—Statutory registration of all fires occurring in the province was the request of the Mutual Fire Underwriters' Association, preferred to the Government yesterday. A deputation presented the question as the result of action taken at the last annual meeting.

J. J. Craig, M.P.P., East Wellington, introduced the gentlemen: D. D. Yorke, Harrietsville; J. W. McKendrick, Galt; James McEwing, Drayton; George Kay, Stratford; J. Beattie, Fergus; Hugh Black, Rockwood. Consideration was promised.

STRIKERS DESTROY PROPERTY.

$1,500,000 Damage Done by Mexicans —Troops In Pursuit.

City of Mexico, Jan. 10.—A telegram from Orizaba received Tuesday night says that the value of the property destroyed by the strikers totals $1,500,000.

The strikers, who have escaped the soldiers, have fled to the nearby mountains, and are being sought by gendarmes and troops.

So far as known none of the 28,000 textile strikers has returned to work. The factory owners announce their intention to open up all the mills today.

Woman Abducts Child.

Sarnia, Jan. 10.—Mrs. Rose Cleveland, aged 39, was arrested as she was hurrying to the American border with her 6-year-old child, and brought back here, where she will be held on a charge of abduction. After kidnapping her child from the orphan asylum, where it had been placed by its father some months ago, she hurried to Port Huron. An officer stopped her as she was about to walk from the boat

The city of Guelph is in the same position as Belleville in one respect—it owns its own waterworks and gas plant, which have for some time been managed by the Council. At the recent election by-laws were voted on putting the management of the said utilities into the hands of commissioners. The water by-law carried by 766 majority, out of a total vote of 1498. The gas by-law carried by a majority of 733 out of a total vote of 1475. Commenting on this the Guelph Herald says;

"The sweeping majorities recorded in favor of the Waterworks and Power and Light Commissions reflect popular disapproval of the present system. The ratepayers have at last awakened to the fact that our public utilities are each of them a business concern and should have proper, up-to-date business management."

Experience is the best teacher. Housekeepers, who have tried them all, say WINDSOR TABLE SALT is the perfect table salt.

How far the above instance applies to Belleville, we do not venture to say, but, judging by what one hears on the street occasionally, the action of Guelph citizens might be duplicated in this city were such a by-law submitted to the people. The present management of our utilities may be all right, but many people think such important matters should be managed by men who have more time on their hands than busy aldermen.

Several hotel keepers, seeing that the people have voted for reduction in the number of licensed houses, call upon the commissioners to make the church-owned saloon the first choice for disallowance. Two dignitaries of the church pleaded for reduction; six of their clerical brethren receive $100 a year each from the hotel rent.

We clip from a U. S. paper the following reference to the good roads of the Motherland, written by a Yankee visitor who was astonished as most transatlantic visitors are, at the excellence of the roadways in the United Kingdom:

"To an American, used to rural bogs, stretches of sand, rocks and boulders, fatal ruts and ankle-deep dust, these highways are a perpetual marvel. One who has spun over them day after day feels like writing a monograph, or something of that sort on the subject of road-building. One also feels like suggesting that county commissioners and road supervisors from the States be given a junket trip to England and Scotland. All the highways are macadamized, and kept properly drained and in repair. The most frequent sight one sees is that of a stone-breaker — not a convict, but a day laborer—wielding a sledge-hammer, breaking flint or limestone, and heaping it in neat piles on the roadside for later use in bad spots, with the aid of the hand-stamper and steam roller. Even the by-roads are well paved, especially in Scotland. And even in Ireland, where the counties are too poor to buy steam rollers, the roads are better than any I have ever seen in America."

The secret of British good roads, it would appear, is that they are built of good material and then mended when occasion calls for it, never being allowed to get into really bad condition. There seems to be a lesson for Belleville roadmakers and overseers in this.

IT'S UP TO BILLY.

(Toronto Globe.)

By the way, now that Parliament reassembles, the member for South York may be expected to rise in his place and explain how he as an "honest" man could, year after year, since 1892, draw his full Parliamentary indemnity when he knows his absence from Parliament session after session was notorious, and also how he as a "truthful" man could sign a declaration that he was not absent fifteen days, knowing such solemn declaration to be utterly and absolutely false. Mr. W. F. Maclean, M.P. for South York, should have the floor to-day.

Failures In Canada.

Failures in the Dominion of Canada in 1906, according to reports to R. G. Dun & Co., were 1,184 in number and $9,085,773 in amount, against 1,347 failures in 1905, when liabilities aggregated $9,854,659. The only year in over a decade that recorded smaller liabilities than 1906 was 1903, and the number of failures was below all previous years since 1882, except two. In view of the steady growth of business in the Dominion of Canada, these statistics indicate a low death rate almost as gratifying as that shown by the United States. Manufacturing failures, in Canada were 293 in number and $3,482,511 in amount, against 289 in 1905, when liabilities were $3,129,262. There were 863 trading failures against 1,039 in the previous year, and liabilities of $5,145,142 compared with $6,552,821. Other commercial failures numbered 28 and involved $458,120, against 19 failures for $172,576 in the preceding year.

Bishop Potter on Dancing.

The Right Rev. Henry C. Potter, Bishop of New York, is writing a series of articles for the Harper's Bazar, in which he takes up the current questions of the day in their relation to women. In his remarks on dancing published in the January Bazar, the Bishop says some really startling things. For example:

"Some such homely proverb as 'What is one man's meat is another man's poison,' is in truth, the most philosophical statement of many great questions which human society, the church, the state, the municipality, the family, are striving to settle in some other way. And of nothing is more true than of what are known as 'round dances.' In other words, you cannot generalize about them, and say that they are invariably bad or invariably good. There are, e.g., a great number of persons whom a 'round' dance makes speedily dizzy, and if so there ought not to be question about the wisdom of their avoiding them. And, just so, there are others upon whom, in quite a different way, the effects of such dances are equally mischievous and unwholesome; but, my reverend brother, you must not take your dirty imagination into the pulpit and denounce as invariably dissolute and degrading that which many a decent young girl who hears its description from your lips knows of absolutely in no other way. In a word, what may be quite true of some coarse natures, and of some low masculine minds, is by no means universally true, and may not, except with insolent presumption, be universally predicted."

Leopold Knows But Will Not Tell.

Louis Leopold, formerly Louis Lazarus, late of the North Atlantic Trading Company, late associate of Mr. Preston at Charing Cross, late endorser of checks of the so-called Arundel Company for alleged Government printing in London, late of the Farmer's Bureau and other associations accused of sending mechanics and artisans with false hopes to Canada, is now in this country. He tells the reporters that the Government has made a great mistake in cancelling the contract with the Trading Company. Mr. Leopold does not blame the Government. He knows that Opposition exposure forced the unwilling Minister to terminate a corrupt bargain, under which a group of unknown persons were taking $100,000 a year for immigration services which were purely fictitious. The termination of this bargain seems to be a good thing for the country, for the department declares that the immigration has increased since the pay has been stopped. But it was bad for Louis Leopold and his associates, whether these latter are Canadian public men or not.

Brother Leopold says he knows who compose this North Atlantic Company but he will not tell. The good people of Canada, who have paid $300,000 to the contractors have apparently no right to know who have carried off their gift and made no return for it. The secret is for the Prestons Smarts, Liftons, Leopolds and others who handled the money and were concerned in the deal. The duty of the Canadian taxpayer is not to know but to pay.

You can tell a good deal about a man by the things that appeal to his sense of humor.

A man makes allowances for his faults, even though his wife may be one of them.

A Mighty Project.

HAS BEEN UNDERTAKEN BY THE GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY.

(Montreal Herald.)

The Grand Trunk is fighting grimly to maintain its supremacy against the C.P.R.'s vigorous and aggressive policy in Ontario.

The company has submitted to the Minister of Railways application for authority for a deviation of their main line between Montreal and Toronto, from Port Union to the Don, thus avoiding the heavy gradients of the present road near Scarboro Heights. The Minister will hear the application at a public sitting on Wednesday, the 16th inst., when the Canadian Northern's proposal to build a line from Toronto to Ottawa will also be considered.

The Grand Trunk project is the boldest and most gigantic piece of railway building that has ever engaged the attention of railway managers in the older provinces of Canada.

The G.T.R. main line over Scarboro Heights has an ascending gradient of one per cent. from Port Union for a distance of five miles, and from the rump of the hill the declivity stretches all the way to the Don. This means an enormous loss of power. Heavy trains have to be hauled over the heights with engines in front and in rear. It is true that the difficulty in operating the system has been greatly reduced since the double-tracking and levelling down of the steepest and most troublesome protuberances some years ago.

What the Grand Trunk now propose is to build a double-track line along the lake shore, right under the bluffs—skirting the coast line in part and crossing the arms of the lake on trestles in other parts.

It is held to be one of the most daring schemes ever conceived by a railway engineer, but it would give the Grand Trunk a double-track, practically on a dead level all the way from Port Union to Toronto.

As to cost, some sections would involve, it is said, an expenditure of $1,000,000 per mile, while the aggregate mentioned is not far short of $10,000,000. The route runs along the lake shore at the foot of the bluffs until the line strikes Munro Park. There it goes inland for about 400 feet and continues at that distance from the lake through Toronto's Dominion Park. It sweeps along south of Woodbine, along the 150 foot roadway on the north of Ashbridge's Bay and across the Don at the present Grand Trunk tracks, near Cherry street. As it goes through the beach district the track will be laid on an embankment sixteen feet high, and where it crosses the city streets it will be carried over on bridges.

In this way the Grand Trunk means to maintain its supremacy in Ontario, bidding defiance to all competitors.

The plans for this colossal undertaking have been prepared under the direct supervision of F. H. McGuigan, fourth vice-president, who has an engineering staff for certain kinds of work under his direction, apart from that of the chief engineer.

Mr. McGuigan is at present in the western part of the system, but it is reported that for a considerable time he has given this question the most careful consideration. It is the biggest thing the Grand Trunk has had in hand for many a day.

About Your Headache.

YOU MUST AGREE IN THIS:

That headache does not necessarily mean there is anything wrong with your head! That being so, you must look to some other organ for the trouble. Is the ache in the forehead, and does it cease if you press it? That is neuralgic headache. Is it on one side of the head only? That is what the doctors call "megrim." Both these forms arise from lack of tone in the system. Is your headache general and accompanied by sickness or foul breath or constipation? That kind of headache is due to liver and stomach disorder. Nine headaches in ten arise from these causes. There are two methods of treatment. One is to take headache powders. This is like trying to escape pain by taking chloroform. The other is to correct the organs which by their derangement are causing the trouble. That is the Bilean way! Bileans cure headache by their beneficial operation on the digestive system, the liver and the blood. Correct these properly and you will have no more headache.

Mrs. G. R. Black, of 35 Blevins Place, Toronto, says: "I suffered acutely from headache. The attacks were most violent and made me so ill I could hardly do anything. The headache was accompanied by digestive trouble, heartburn and constipation, and it seemed as if I were going from bad to worse. Until I tried Bileans I was unable to get anything which gave me relief. Bileans, however, acted like magic. They not only cured the headache, but also relieved me of the indigestion, heartburn and constipation. I have proved that a few doses of Bileans will remove the most violent headache, and as a cure for constipation they are absolutely unequalled. No family should be without a box of Bileans on the shelf."

Bileans are purely herbal in their composition and are also free from alcohol. They are a cure for all digestive and liver disorders, constipation, piles, debility, anaemia, blood impurities, colds and chills, rheumatism, wind spasms, female ailments and irregularities, sallow complexions (due to bile in the blood), dizziness, etc. All druggists sell at 50c a box, or may be obtained post free from the Bilean Co., Toronto, on receipt of price. 6 boxes for $2.50.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

Before Boyd C — Maclaren J.A. and Mabee J.

Murphy vs. Murphy. — Judgment (E.B.B.) on appeal by plaintiffs, appealed from judgment of Clute, J., dismissing action upon three promissory notes, dated Dec. 1, 1901, for $1,000 each, made by defendant James Murphy and James Quinn to the order of Patrick Murphy to plaintiffs, a partnership carrying on a banking business in the village of Tweed. Held, that the conclusions of the trial judge were unimpeachable down to the point of his judgment when he finds that $488 was paid out of the advances made by the plaintiffs' bank in order to satisfy the claims of the cheese patrons in full for the year 1901. Judgment to be entered on the first note for $448 and costs on the County Court scale. The rest of the claim to be dismissed with costs. No interest on the $448, as the amount has not been ascertained till now in the action. Plaintiffs to pay two-thirds of the costs of the appeal, and these and the other costs coming to defendants to be set off against the $446 and County Court costs, and payment made according to the result. E. G. Porter (Belleville) and M. Wright (Belleville) for plaintiffs. W. Douglas for defendants.

Indigestion, constipation, come and go like rent and tax day and other sorrows, if you take Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea, the greatest remedy known to mankind. 35 cents, Tea or Tablets.—D. M. Waters.

LEATHER CHAIRS.

Try Cleaning Them With a Lather of Castile Soap.

Leather on chairs is best cleaned with wet rag and soap. Select a pure castile or white soap—never a laundry variety—make a lather with lukewarm water and with a damp cloth rub suds into the leather with a rotary motion, covering the entire surface so one part will not be clean and another have a soiled appearance. When the seat or back has been well scrubbed in this way, rub the surface dry with a soft flannel cloth, and the spots should not disappear, but the leather should be as shiny as it was when new. Where there are grease spots on the leather they should have an extra washing and should first be cleansed with the suds and damp chamois or piece of cheese cloth, so that any stain will come out when the entire back or seat is scrubbed.

I would never rub oils into leather, for most of them make the surfaces sticky, especially during hot weather. Then, too, the leather is so prepared that no oil is necessary, the only essential in care of such upholstery being a dusting every day or oftener if convenient and a washing with suds and a damp cloth once in two or three weeks. Don't forget that leather must be carefully rubbed and kept warm in winter, and remember that it is a bad plan to sit down quickly on a leather seat that has been kept in a cold room for several days, for the upholstery is likely to crack and split, just as patent leather does.—New York Telegram.

Contentment has been praised more, and practiced less, than any other condition of life.

Literary Notes

JANUARY CANADIAN MAGAZINE.

The January number of The Canadian Magazine comes pretty close to the popular idea of what a high-class publication should be. It contains 104 pages of excellently illustrated articles and cleverly written stories, and is lightened by an unusually liberal use of verse and other short things that a person can read in passing. The first article, "The King's Highway" by Jane Lavender is a delightful treatment of what might reasonably be regarded as a prosaic subject. The number contains six other illustrated articles, four articles without illustrations, together with six short stories by W. A. Fraser, Isabel E. MacKay, Mabel Burkholder, Bradford K. Daniels, Perceval Gibbon, and Thomas F. Astle, all well-known writers, besides poems by E. Pauline Johnson, and others. The absence of a serial story will please most readers. The "Canadian" has certainly started the new year well. The announcement page promises for February a treat in the shape of an illustrated article by Goldwin Smith entitled "The Stage of Former Days."

THE JANUARY ROD AND GUN.

There is a wonderful blending of eastern and western Canada, not omitting the central portions, in the stories appearing in the January number of "Rod and Gun and Motor Sports in Canada," published by W. J. Taylor, at Woodstock, Ontario. Nova Scotia and Quebec have some of their attractions told about in pleasant stories, while the wonderful charms of the Muskoka and Temagami districts of Ontario continue to be described in a manner that is ever fresh, owing to the fact that their multifarious attractions are seen from different standpoints by their numerous devotees. A bit of exploration on the Mississaga, one of the wonderful rivers of Canada, about which much will be heard in the near future, is interesting. An account of a ladies' trip to those marvellous caves in the heart of the Selkirks, which in all probability will be known to future generations as the Caves of Cheops, is pleasantly and brightly told by Mrs. Arthur Spragge. The scientific work of the Alpine Club of Canada is described in popular language by the President. Papers showing the success of the licensing system for big game, and the distribution and migration of ducks, with special reference to Canada's interest in these fine game birds, ought to be read not only by every sportsman but also by the general reader who has a deep concern in these matters. There are numerous other stories, including an account of Lord Grey's western home, while the departments are all up to date, and such as to render the best of service to sportsmen consulting them.

TIMELY TOPICS.

NO NEWS.

I've heard of modest maidens, who,
  Though lovely, never guessed it,
I couldn't say if it be true,
  I've had no chance to test it.
But Kitty's not at all that kind—
  I've reason to suppose it—
Because she's neither deaf nor blind,
  She's pretty, and she knows it.

She never shows so much surprise,
  Or even says I flatter
When I remark her hair or eyes:
  It bores her, for that matter.
It's no great secret; if it were
  I wouldn't have disclosed it.
But all I get's a chilly stare,
  She's pretty, and she knows it.

For ardent suitors by the score
  Forever flock round Kitty,
Quite often she's been told before
  She's wonderfully pretty.
And if she felt the least distrust
  Her mirror daily shows it,
That's why it fills her with disgust.
  She's pretty, and she knows it.

One of New York's city's newest hotels offers its patrons a number of attractive little touches which make it very different from the bare hostelry of other days. Each room has a closet in which are found hangers for coats, skirts and trousers. Each dressing table has a pincushion, tray and powder box. Each room has a desk already provided with ink, pens, stationery and blotters. The tables have spreads, and the chairs have tidies. Surely the modern hotel-keeper knows all the secrets of the house comfortable.—New York Press.

Although most of the Australian gold is now obtained from depths of hundreds and thousands of feet, it is still possible to acquire a respectable nugget by pick and shovel close to the surface. The other day some workmen were making a drain near the city hall of Bendigo when the pick of one of them rebounded after having struck something hard. "That must be a nugget," remarked a jocular bystander. "I'll look," said the workman, and the next moment he had a lump of quartz thickly studded with gold in his hands. Then the earth that had been thrown out in the making of the drain was "cleaned up," as the miners say, and smaller gold specimens were secured. And now, if the law permits, a shaft is to be sunk in the back yard of a hotel close by.

EASTERN DAIRYMEN.

President Derbyshire Reviews Year's Work in Butter and Cheese.

Ottawa, Jan. 10.—The Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association opened yesterday morning, D. Derbyshire, M.P., president, in the chair.

In his annual address Mr. Derbyshire pointed out that during last year there was not as much milk produced as in 1905 owing to the shortage of pastures, but in view of all the educational advantages within the reach of dairymen better results should have been obtained.

The quantity of cheese made was about 100,000, but the exports of butter had fallen behind to the extent of about 180,000 packages. The estimated value of cheese, butter and bacon exports was $46,500,000, and adding to this sum the domestic consumption of these articles in would give a total value of $101,000,000. This was about $6,000,000 in excess of the year previous.

At a largely attended meeting of the citizens in the evening, the address of welcome was given by Earl Grey, who complimented the dairymen upon their growing importance to the life of Canada.

Addresses were delivered by Hon. Sydney Fisher, Dominion Minister of Agriculture; Hon. Nelson Monteith, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, the mayor of Ottawa and others.

POWER CONTRACTS.

Two Forms to Be Prepared—Figures of Quantity Awaited.

Toronto, Jan. 10.—The Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission had a meeting yesterday, when a number of routine matters arising out of Monday's vote were considered.

The form of contract being prepared by A. F. Lobb, solicitor to the commission, was fully discussed.

As a matter of fact, two forms of contract will be used. One of these will be for power for a price at the Falls, stepped-up, ready for transmission, plus cost of delivery. Such a contract almost necessarily involves Government control of transmission lines.

A second form of contract, which would also be applicable for districts outside the Niagara distributing area, would be for a straight delivery price to municipalities.

As soon as municipalities are able to state the probable amount of power they are likely to require, the necessary figures can be embodied in the contracts.

The commission will at once continue negotiations for the supply of power with the various power companies developing power at the Falls.

Toronto, Jan. 10.—Tenders are being called for by the T. and N. O. Railway Commission for the construction of general offices at North Bay. The office of the commission and the secretary-treasurer will remain in Toronto.

Ten Months' Earnings.

The net earnings of the Government railway for the ten months ending October amounted to $159,071. For October the gross earnings were $52,818, the operating expenses $14,560. In October, 1905, the earnings and expenses respectively were $32,623 and $16,056.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

Montreal, Jan. 9.—Receipts were 500 cattle, 1000 hogs, 50 sheep and lambs, 25 calves. There continues to be a strong undertone to the market for hogs and prices scored another advance of 10 cents per 100 lbs.

The demand from packers was keen owing to the fact that they were short of supplies and this, coupled with the very small arrivals of country dressed hogs, added further strength to the already strong situation, and sales of selected lots were made at $7 to $7.10 per 100 lbs weighed off cars. In addition to the above receipts noted, there were 15 carloads of cattle, sheep and hogs, which were delayed on the road, and were not expected to reach the market until some time in the afternoon. There were no prime beeves on the market and the best price for pretty good cattle was 4½c per lb, and from that down to 1¾c for the leanest cows, of which there were a considerable number.

Sheep sold at 4c¼ to 4½c; lambs at 5½c to 6c.

The drovers whose cattle were delayed were loud in their complaints about the dilatoriness of the railway officials in not forwarding the live stock to the market with greater despatch.

AN ENGINEER'S HEROISM.

Driven From Locomotive By Explosion, Risks Life In Stopping Train.

Boone, Iowa, Jan. 10.—After running for several miles at high speed with an engine out of control, by the blowing out of a "stud" in its boiler, the Chicago and Northwestern fast mail train No. 10 was barely saved from destruction near here Tuesday night by the heroism of Engineer Louis Shull.

Shull was driven from his cab by the scalding vapors and boiling waters. Realizing that he could not reach the throttle, he climbed over the tender to the express car and hammered on the door.

The express messenger, fearing robbers, refused him admission at first, but when he finally opened the door, he aimed two revolvers at Shull's head.

The engineer, bleeding and exhausted, dragged himself into the car and with his remaining strength pulled the rope connecting the air brakes, stopping the train.

Three Dead In Explosion.

Pittsburg, Jan. 10.—As a result of an explosion of a furnace at the Eliza furnace of the Jones & Laughlin Steel Works last night, three are known to be dead, seven in the hospital with serious burns and injuries and 24 are missing. The explosion was caused by an accumulation of gas at the base of the furnace, around which 35 men were working. Of all these but one man escaped injury.

HUMOR

STORY WITH A MORAL.

Two Fleas That Didn't Know When to Let Well Enough Alone.

Two fleas were sitting on a dog who was wandering about the streets when one of them said: "Brother, what a degraded, half starved lot is ours. Here we have chosen to unite ourselves to a common street cur, who wanders from alley to alley. We see nothing but the most dismal sights. We hear no elevating conversation or delightful small talk. Surely there ought to be something better in store for us than this."

"You are right," said the second flea. "Look, my brother! Here is a carriage approaching. It is evidently some highborn lady bent on a charitable enterprise. In her lap sits such a beautiful little terrier. Let us therefore make an effort to better ourselves."

"Splendid!" said the first flea. "We will live amid the most luxurious surroundings. We will feed on the fat of the land. We will sleep at night in a clean bed."

And so in a few bold but successful jumps as the carriage stopped they both landed simultaneously on the back of the terrier. In a short time they were driven to their new home.

So delighted were they with their new life that the two fleas could scarcely contain themselves for joy.

Their manifestations, however, were so unusual that the terrier frantically scratched himself, which attracted the attention of his mistress, who immediately sent for a physician, who at once gave the dog such a radical treatment that the two fleas were slowly drowned in a horrible fluid that came like a flood and surprised them before they were able to get away.

"Alas, brother!" said the first flea as he gave a dying gasp. "Why could we not have been satisfied with our humble lot?"

Moral.—Some folks never know when to let well enough alone.—Life.

A Misunderstanding.

At the breakfast table in one of the mining towns the landlady gave Mr. Muggins a severe look and said:

"Mr. Muggins, I understand that you have been circulating injurious reports about my house."

"How, madam?"

"I understand that you said you had used better butter than I have here to grease wagons with."

"I did say so, madam, but not to injure your house. I have used better butter, madam, to grease wagons, but I wouldn't do it again. I'd sell it to you."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Process of Elimination.

"What became of the four act play you were writing last summer?" they asked her at the high tea.

"I took it to a playwright," she replied, "who kept it four months, then gave it back to me, saying it was no earthly good as a four act play, but would make a very strong one act curtain raiser.

"I made a one act play of it and took it to a manager. I suppose he will give it back to me in another four months and tell me to cut it out altogether."—New York Press.

In One Braid.

"She has grown to be a very beautiful girl," said Jigley. "Her hair is positively golden."

"Indeed! That's odd," said Kidder. "I knew her when she was a little girl."

"Well?"

"Well, it was merely plaited then."—Philadelphia Press.

A Bitter Truth to Him.

"Bragg declares that his cook is one of the best in the country."

"Huh," snorted Subbubs, "that's not saying much! Whenever a really good cook gets into the country she chases back to the city the first chance she gets."—Catholic Standard and Times.

His One Try.

"Why have you and Charlie ceased to be friends?"

"He tried to kiss me."

"Pshaw! He's too nice a fellow to throw over for a little thing like that."

"He tried once and then quit."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Disappointed.

"The reason you don't sympathize with me is that you have never been disappointed in love yourself."

"I haven't, eh? That's all you know. Why, I once advertised for a wife with a million dollars, and I never got a single reply."—Philadelphia Press.

His Judgment.

"Is Biggins an epicure?"

"No. He is one of those people who judge of food by the way it sounds in the menu instead of by the way it tastes."—Washington Star.

timber, then it raced down the slope toward the valley, forming a great red avalanche that roared and hissed and crackled and sent up vast clouds of smoke into the night.

Clearly any attempt to go farther north would be but a waste of time and strength. The fire shut him off completely in that quarter. He must retrace his steps until he was well to the south again. Then he could go either to the east or west and perhaps work around into the burned district. The risk he ran of capture did not worry him. Indeed, he scarcely considered it. He felt certain the pursuit, if pursuit there were, had been abandoned days before. He had a shrewd idea that the fire would give people something else to think of. His only fear was that his provisions would be exhausted. When they went he knew the chances were that he would starve, but he put this fear resolutely aside whenever it obtruded itself. With care his supplies could be made to last many days.

He did not sleep any more that night, but watched the fire eat its way across the valley. When it reached the slope at his feet he shouldered his pack and started south. It was noon when he made his first halt. He rested for two hours and then resumed his march. He was now well beyond the immediate range of the conflagration. There was only an occasional faint odor of smoke in the woods. He had crossed several small streams, and he knew they would be an obstacle in the path of the fire unless the wind, which was from the north, should freshen.

Night fell. He lighted a campfire and scraped together his bed of pine needles and lay down to sleep with the comforting thought that he had put a sufficient distance between himself and the burning forest. He would turn to the west when morning came. He trusted to a long day's journey to carry him out of the menaced territory. It would be easier traveling, too, for the ridges which cut the face of the country ran east and west. The sun was in the boughs of the hemlocks when he awoke. There had been a light rain during the night, and the forest world had taken on new beauty. But it grew hot and oppressive as the hours passed. The smoke thickened once more. At first he tried to believe it was only his fancy. Then the wind shifted into the east and the woods became noticeably clearer. He pushed ahead with renewed hope. This change in the wind was a good sign. If it ever got into the south it would drive the fire back on itself.

He tramped for half the night and threw himself down and slept heavily—the sleep of utter exhaustion and weariness. It was broad day when he opened his eyes. The first sound he heard was the dull roar of the flames. He turned with a hunted, fugitive look toward the west. A bright light shone through the trees. The fire was creeping around and already encircled him on two sides. His feeling was one of bitter disappointment; fear, too, mingled with it. In the south were Ryder's friends—Dannie's enemies and his. Of the east he had a horror which the study of his map did not tend to allay; there were towns there and settlements, thickly scattered. Finally he concluded he would go forward and examine the line of fire. There might be some means by which he could make his way through it.

A journey of two miles brought him to a small water course. The fire was burning along the opposite bank. It blazed among the scrub and underbrush and leaped from tree to tree, first to shrivel their foliage to a dead, dry brown and then envelop them in sheets of flame. The crackling was like the report of musketry.

Roger Oakley was awed by the sight. In spite of the smoke and heat he sat down on the trunk of a fallen pine to rest. Some birds fluttered out of the rolling masses of smoke above his head and flew south with shrill cries of alarm. A deer crossed the stream, not 200 yards from where he sat, at a single bound. Next two large timber wolves entered the water. They landed within a stone's throw of him and trotted leisurely off. The heat soon drove him from his position, and he, too, sought refuge in the south. The wall of flame cut him off from the north and west, and to the east he would not go.

There was something tragic in this blocking of his way. He wondered if it was not the Lord's wish after all that he should be taken. This thought had been troubling him for some time. Then he remembered Dannie—Dannie, to whom he had brought only shame and sorrow. He set his lips with grim determination. Right or wrong, the Lord's vengeance would have to wait. Perhaps he would understand the situation. He prayed that he might.

Twenty-four hours later and he had turned westward with the desperate hope that he could cross out of the path of the fire, but the hope proved futile. There was no help for it. To the east he must go if he would escape.

It was the towns and settlements he feared most, and the people. Perhaps they still continued the search. When he left the wilderness the one precaution he could take would be to travel only by night. This plan when it was firmly fixed in his mind greatly encouraged him. But at the end of ten hours of steady tramping he discovered that the fire surrounded him on three sides. Still he did not despair.

For two days he dodged from east to west, and each day the wall of flame and smoke drew closer about him, and the distances in which he moved became less and less. And now a great fear of Antioch possessed him. The railroad ran nearly due east and west from Buckhorn Junction to Harrison, a distance of ninety-five miles. Beyond the road the country was well settled. There were thriving farms and villages. To pass through such a country without being seen was next to impossible. He felt a measure of his strength fail him, and with it went his courage. It was only the thought of Dannie that kept him on the alert. Happen what might, he would not be taken. It should go hard with the man or men who made the attempt. He told himself this not boastfully, but with quiet conviction. In so far as he could, as the fire crowded him back, he avoided the vicinity of Antioch and inclined toward Buckhorn Junction.

There was need of constant vigilance now, as he was in a sparsely settled section. One night some men passed quite near to the fringe of tamarack swamp where he was camped. Luckily the undergrowth was dense, and his fire had burned to a few red embers. On another occasion, just at dusk, he stumbled into a small clearing and within plain view of the windows of a log cabin. As he leaped back into the woods a man with a cob pipe in his mouth came to the door of the cabin.

Roger Oakley, with the hickory staff which he had cut that day held firmly in his hands and a fierce, wild look on his face, watched him from his cover. Presently the man turned back into the house, closing the door after him.

These experiences startled and alarmed him. He grew gaunt and haggard, a terrible weariness oppressed him, his mind became confused, and a sort of panic seized him. His provisions had failed him, but an occasional cultivated field furnished corn and potatoes in spite of the serious misgivings he felt concerning the moral aspect of these nightly depredations. When he raided a spring house and carried off eggs and butter and milk he was able to leave money behind. He conducted these transactions with scrupulous honesty.

He had been living in the wilderness three weeks, when at last the fire drove him from cover at Buckhorn Junction. As a town the Junction was largely a fiction. There were a railroad crossing, a freight shed and the depot and perhaps a score of houses scattered along a sandy stretch of country road.

The B. and A. had its connection with the M. and W. at this point. It was also the beginning of a rich agricultural district, and the woods gave place to cultivated fields and farm lands.

It was late afternoon as Roger Oakley approached Buckhorn. When it was dark he would cross the railroad and take his chance there. He judged from the light in the sky that the fire had already burned in between Buckhorn and Antioch. This gave him a certain sense of security. Indeed, the fire surrounded Buckhorn in every quarter except the south. Where there was no timber or brush it crept along the rail fences or ran with tiny spurts of flame through the dry weeds and dead stubble which covered much of the cleared land.

He could see a number of people moving about a quarter of a mile west of the depot. They were tearing down a burning fence that was in perilous proximity to some straw stacks and a barn.

He heard and saw the 6:50 on the M. and W. pull in. This was the Chicago express, and the Huckleberry's local, which was due at Antioch at midnight, connected with it. This connection involved a wait of three hours at Buckhorn. Only one passenger left the train. He disappeared into the depot.

Roger Oakley waited until it was quite dark, and then, leaving the strip of woods just back of the depot, where he had been hiding, stole cautiously down to the track. He had noticed that there were an engine and some freight cars on one of the sidings. He moved among them, keeping well in the shadow. Suddenly he paused. Two men emerged from the depot. They came down the platform in the direction of the cars. They were talking earnestly together. One swung himself up into the engine and lighted a torch.

Roger Oakley watched him from his cover.

He wondered what they were doing and stole nearer.

They were standing on the platform now, and the man who held the torch had his back to him. His companion was saying something about the wires being down.

He listened intently.

Antioch was in danger, and if Antioch was in danger—Dannie—

All at once the man with the torch turned, and its light suffused his face.

It was Dan Oakley.

CHAPTER XX.

Dan Oakley went to Chicago, intending to see Holloway and resign, but he found that the Huckleberry's vice president was in New York on business, and no one in his office seemed to know when he would return, so he sat down and wrote a letter telling him of the condition of affairs at Antioch and explaining the utter futility, in view of what had happened, of his trying to cope with the situation.

He waited five days for a reply and, none coming, wired to learn if his letter had been received. This produced results. Holloway wired back that he had the letter under consideration and requested Oakley to remain in Chicago until he returned, but he did not say whether or not his resignation would be accepted. Since there was nothing to be done but await Holloway's pleasure in the matter Dan employed his enforced leisure in looking about for another position. He desired a connection which would take him out of the country, for the farther away from Antioch and Constance Emory he could get the better he would be satisfied. He fancied he would like to go to South America. He was willing to accept almost any kind of a post—salary was no longer a consideration with him. What he required was a radical change, with plenty of hard work.

By far his greatest anxiety was his father. He watched the papers closely, expecting each day to read that he had been captured and sent back to Antioch, but the days slipped past, and there was no mention of him. Holt, with whom he was in constant correspondence, reported that interest in his capture had considerably abated, while the organized pursuit had entirely ceased.

Dan had the feeling that he should never see him again, and the pathos of his age and dependence tore his heart. In a manner, too, he blamed himself for the tragedy. It might have been averted had he said less about Ryder in his father's hearing. He should have known better than to discuss the strike with him.

One morning as he left Holloway's office he chanced to meet an acquaintance by the name of Curtice. They had been together in Denver years before, and he had known him as a rather talkative young fellow, with large hopes and a thrifty eye to the main chance. But he was the one man he would have preferred to meet, for he had been in South America and knew the field there. Apparently Curtice was equally glad to see him. He insisted upon carrying him off to his club for lunch, where it developed he was in a state of happy enthusiasm over his connection with a road which had just gone into the hands of a receiver, and a new baby, which he assured Oakley on the spur of the moment he was going to name after him.

"You see, Oakley," he explained as they settled themselves, "I was married after you left to a girl who had come to Denver with a consumptive brother. They boarded at the same place I did." His companion was properly interested. "Look here, how long are you going to be in the city? I want you to come and see us."

Dan avoided committing himself by saying his stay in Chicago was most uncertain. He might have to leave very soon.

"Well, then, you must drop in at my office. I wish you'd make it your headquarters while you are here."

"What about the road you are with?"

"Oh, the road? We are putting it in shape."

Oakley smiled a trifle skeptically. He recalled that even as a very young man, filling a very subordinate position, Curtice had clung to the "we." Curtice saw the smile and remembered too.

"Now, see here, I'm giving it to you straight. I really am the whole thing. I've got a greenhorn for a boss, whose ignorance of the business is only equaled by his confidence in me. If you want to be nasty you can say his ignorance is responsible for much of his confidence. I've been told that before."

"Then I'll wait. I may be able to think of something better."

"There are times when I wonder if he really knows the difference between an engine's headlight and a coupling pin. He's giving me all the rope I want, and we'll have a great passenger service when I get done. That's what I am working on now."

"But where are you going to get the funds for it? A good service costs money," said Dan.

"Oh, the road's always made money. That was the trouble." Oakley looked dense. He had heard of such things, but they had been outside of his own experience.

"The directors were a superstitious lot. They didn't believe in paying dividends, and as they had to get rid of the money somehow they put it all out in salaries. The president's idea of the value of his own services would have been exorbitant if the road had been operating 5,000 miles of track instead of 500. I am told a directors' meeting looked like a family reunion, and they had a most ungodly lot of nephews—nephews were everywhere. The purchasing agent was a nephew, so were two of the division superintendents. Why, the president even had a third cousin of his wife's braking on a way freight. We've kept him as a sort of curiosity and because he was the only one in the bunch who was earning his pay."

"No wonder the stockholders went to law," said Oakley, laughing.

"Of course when the road was taken into court its affairs were seen to be in such rotten shape that a receiver was appointed."

Oakley's business instinct asserted itself. He had forgotten for the time being that his services still belonged to Cornish. Now he said, "See here, haven't you cars you intend to rebuild?"

"We've precious few that don't need carpenter work or paint or upholstering."

"Then send them to me at Antioch. I'll make you a price you can't get inside of, I don't care where you go."

Curtice meditated, then he asked: "How are you fixed to handle a big contract. It'll be mostly for paint and upholstery or woodwork. We have been considering equipping works of our own, but I am afraid they are not going to materialize."

"We can handle anything," and, from sheer force of habit, he was all enthusiasm. He had pleasant visions of the shops running overtime and everybody satisfied and happy. It made no difference to him that he would not be there to share in the general prosperity. With the start he had given it, the future of the Huckleberry would be assured. He decided he had better say nothing to Curtice about South America.

The upshot of this meeting was that he stuck to Curtice with a genial devotion that made him wax in his hands. They spent two days together inspecting paintless and tattered day coaches, and on the third day Dan strolled from his friend's office buttoning his coat on a contract that would mean many thousands of dollars for Antioch. It was altogether his most brilliant achievement. He felt that there only remained for him to turn the Huckleberry over to Holloway and leave the country. He had done well by it.

Dan had been in Chicago about three weeks, when at last Holloway returned, and he proved as limp as Cornish had said he would be in a crisis. He was inclined to be critical, too, and seemed astonished that Oakley had been waiting in Chicago to see him. He experienced a convenient lapse of memory when the latter mentioned his telegram.

"I can't accept your resignation," he said, fussing nervously among the papers on his desk. "I didn't put you at Antioch. That was General Cornish's own idea, and I don't know what he'll think."

"It has got past the point where I care what he thinks," retorted Dan curtly. "You must send some one else there to take hold."

"Why didn't you cable him instead of writing me?" fretfully. "I don't know what he will want, only it's pretty certain to be the very thing I shan't think of."

"I would have cabled him if I had considered it necessary, but it never occurred to me that my resignation would not be agreed to on the spot, as my presence in Antioch only widens the breach and increases the difficulty of a settlement with the men."

"Whom did you leave in charge?" inquired Holloway.

"Holt."

"Who's he?"

"He's Kerr's assistant," Dan explained.

"Why didn't you leave Kerr in charge?" demanded the vice president.

"I laid him off," said Dan in a tone of exasperation, and then he added, to forestall more questions: "He was in sympathy with the men, and he hadn't the sense to keep it to himself. I couldn't be bothered with him, so I got rid of him."

"Well, I must say you have made a frightful mess of the whole business, Oakley, but I told General Cornish from the first that you hadn't the training for the position."

Dan turned very red in the face at this, but he let it pass.

"It's too bad," murmured Holloway, still fingering the letters on the desk.

"Since you are in doubt, why don't you cable General Cornish for instructions, or, if there is a reason why you don't care to, it is not too late for me to cable," said Dan.

This proposal did not please Holloway at all; but he was unwilling to admit that he feared Cornish's displeasure, which, where he was concerned, usually took the form of present silence and a subsequent sarcasm that dealt with the faulty quality of his judgment. The sarcasm might come six months after it had been inspired, but it was certain to come sooner or later and to be followed by a bad half hour, which Cornish devoted to past mistakes. Indeed, Cornish's attitude toward him had become through long association one of chronic criticism, and he was certain to be unpleasantly affected both by what he did and by what he left undone.

"Why don't you wait until the general returns from England? That's not far off now. Under the circumstances he'll accept your resignation."

"I can't accept your resignation."

"He will have to," said Oakley briefly.

"Don't worry. He'll probably demand it," remarked the vice president disagreeably.

"If you are so sure of this, why don't you accept it?" retorted Dan.

"I have no one to appoint in your place."

"What's wrong with Holt? He'll do temporarily."

"I couldn't feel positive of his being satisfactory to General Cornish. He's a very young man, ain't he?"

"Yes, I suppose you'd call him a young man, but he has been with the road for a long time and has a pretty level head. I have found him very trustworthy."

"I would have much greater confidence in Kerr. He's quiet and conservative, and he's had an excellent training with us."

"Well, then, you can get him. He is doing nothing and will be glad to come."

"But you have probably succeeded in antagonising him."

"I hope so," with sudden cheerfulness. "It was a hardship not to be able to give him a sound thrashing. That's what he deserved."

Holloway looked shocked. The young man was displaying a recklessness of temper which was most unseemly and entirely unexpected.

"I guess it will be well for you to think it over, Oakley, before you conclude to break with General Cornish. To go now will be rather shabby of you, and you owe him fair treatment. Just remember it was those reforms of yours that started the strike, in the first place. I know—I know. What you did you did with his approval. The men are peaceable enough, ain't they?" and he glared at Oakley with mingled disfavor and weariness.

"Anybody can handle them but me."

"It won't be long until they are begging you to open the shops. They will be mighty sick of the trouble they've shouldered when their money is all gone."

"They will never come to me for that, Mr. Holloway," said Dan. "I think they would, one and all, rather starve than recognize my position."

"They'll have to. We'll make them. We mustn't let them think we are weakening."

"You don't appreciate the feeling of intense hostility they have for me."

"Of course the murder of that man—what was his name?"

"Ryder, you mean?"

"Was unfortunate. I don't wonder you have some feeling about going back."

Dan smiled sadly.

The vice president was wonderfully moderate in his choice of words. He added: "But it is really best for the interest of those concerned that you should go and do what you can to bring about a settlement."

"It would be the sheerest idiocy for me to attempt it. The town may go hungry from now to the end of its days, but it won't have me at any price."

"I always told Cornish he should sell the road the first opportunity he got. He had the chance once and you talked him out of it. Now you don't want to stand by the situation."

"I do," said Oakley, rising. "I want to see an understanding reached with the men, and I am going to do what I can to help along. You will please to consider that I have resigned. I don't for the life of me see how you can expect me to show my face in Antioch." And with that he stalked from the place. He was thoroughly angry. He heard Holloway call after him:

"I won't accept your resignation. You'll have to wait until you see Cornish!"

Dan strode out into the street, not knowing what he would do. He was disheartened and exasperated at the stand Holloway had taken.

Presently his anger moderated and his pace slackened. He had been quite oblivious to what was passing about him, and now for the first time, above the rattle of carts and trucks, he heard the newsboys shrilly calling an extra. He caught the words, "All about the big forest fire!" repeated over and over again.

He bought a paper and opened it idly, but a double leaded headline arrested his attention. It was a brief special from Buckhorn Junction. He read it with feverish interest. Antioch was threatened with complete destruction by the forest fires, which for several weeks had been raging in the northern part of the state. All traffic was suspended, and the exact condition could only be guessed at, but there had been repeated calls for help. The neighboring towns had responded to these appeals by sending fire engines and hose, which were still waiting at Buckhorn Junction to go through. Oakley knew that the long drought had so diminished the available water supply that in an emergency of this kind Antioch must depend on the river.

The town derived its regular water supply from a standpipe fed from a small reservoir. In ordinary seasons and under ordinary circumstances the force was sufficient to meet all needs, but on an occasion such as the present the equipment of the local fire department, consisting of two hose carts and a single old fashioned hand engine, would be quite useless.

Oakley's hands shook as they clutched the paper. He forgot his own troubles; all in an instant he was alive to the danger that threatened Constance. She was a prisoner in the menaced town, in the very center of an impending tragedy. The thought of her possible peril sent the blood surging away from his heart.

Ten minutes later Dan again presented himself to Holloway. His face had lost its former look of dogged determination. It had become keen and pinched with a sudden anxiety.

"It's all right, Mr. Holloway!" he cried as he entered the office. "You needn't bother about my resignation. I'll take the first train for Antioch. Have you seen this?" and he held out the crumpled page he had just torn from his newspaper.

Holloway glanced up in astonishment at this unlooked for change of heart.

"I thought you'd conclude it was no way to treat General Cornish," he said.

"Hang Cornish! It's not on his account I'm going. The town is in a fair way to be wiped off the map. Here, read."

And he thrust the paper into Holloway's hands. "The woods to the north and west of Antioch have been blazing for two days. They have sent out call after call for help, and apparently nobody has responded yet. That's why I am going back, and for no other reason."

CHAPTER XXI.

At Buckhorn Junction Joe Durks, who combined the duties of telegraph operator with those of baggagemaster and ticket agent, was at his table receiving a message when Dan Oakley walked into the office. He had just stepped from the Chicago express.

"What's the latest word from Antioch, Joe?" he asked hurriedly.

"How are you, Mr. Oakley? I got Antioch now."

"What do they say?"

"They are asking help."

The metallic clicking of the instrument before him ceased abruptly.

"What's wrong, anyhow?" He pushed back his chair and came slowly to his feet. His finger was still on the key. He tried again to call up Antioch. "They are cut off. I guess the wire is down."

The two men stared at each other in silence.

Dan's face was white in the murky, smoky twilight that filled the room. Durks looked anxious, the limit of his emotional capacity. He was a lank, colorless youth, with pale yellow tobacco stains about the corners of his mouth and a large nose, which was superior to its surroundings.

Oakley broke silence with:

"What's gone through today, Joe?"

"Nothing's gone through on the B. and A. There's nothing to send from this end of the line," the operator answered nervously.

"What went through yesterday?"

"Nothing yesterday either."

"Where is No. 7?"

"It's down at Harrison, Mr. Oakley."

"And No. 9?"

"It's at Harrison too."

"Do you know what they are doing at Harrison?" demanded Oakley angrily.

It seemed criminal negligence that no apparent effort had as yet been made to reach Antioch.

"I don't," said Durks laconically, biting his nails. "I suppose they are waiting for the fire to burn out."

"Why don't you know?" persisted Dan tartly. His displeasure moved the operator to a fuller explanation.

"It was cut off yesterday morning. The last word I got was that No. 7 was on a siding there and that No. 9, which started at 8:15 for Antioch, had had to push back. The fire was in between Antioch and Harrison, on both sides of the track and blazing."

"Where's the freight?" questioned Oakley.

"The last I heard it was trying to make Parker's Run."

"When was that?"

"That was yesterday morning too. It had come up that far from Antioch the day before to haul out four carloads of ties. Holt gave the order. It is still there, for all I know—that is, if it ain't burned or ditched. I sent down the extra men from the yards here to help finish loading the cars. I had Holt's order for it, and supposed he knew what was wanted. They ain't come back, but they got there ahead of the freight all right."

Oakley felt this care for a few hundred dollars' worth of property to have been unnecessary in view of the graver peril that threatened Antioch. Still, it was not Durks' fault. It was Holt who was to blame. He had probably lost his head in the general alarm and excitement.

While Harrison might be menaced by the fire, it was in a measure protected by the very nature of its surroundings. But with Antioch, where there was nothing to stay the progress of the flames, the case was different. With a north wind blowing they could sweep over the town unhindered.

"Yesterday the wind shifted a bit to the west, and for awhile they thought Antioch was out of danger," said Durks, who saw what was in Oakley's mind.

"What have you heard from the other towns?"

"They're deserted. Everybody's gone to Antioch or Harrison. There was plenty of time for that, and when No. 7 made her last run I wired ahead that it was the only train we could send out."

"How did you get the extra men to Parker's Run?"

"Baker took 'em there on the switch engine. I sent him down again this morning to see what was the matter with the freight, but he only went to the ten mile fill and come back. He said he couldn't go any farther. I guess he wasn't so very keen to try. He said he hadn't the money put by for his funeral expenses."

"They told me up above that the M. and W. had hauled a relief train for Antioch. What has been done with it? Have you made an effort to get it through?"

Durks looked distressed. Within the last three days flights of inspiration and judgment had been demanded of him such as he hoped would never be required again. And for forty-eight hours he had been comforting himself with the thought that about everything on wheels owned by the Huckleberry was at the western terminus of the road.

"It ain't much of a relief train, Mr. Oakley. Two cars, loaded with fire engines and a lot of old hose. They are on the siding now."

"Were any men sent here with the relief train?" questioned Oakley.

"No; Antioch just wanted hose and engines. The water's played out, and they got to depend on the river if the fire strikes the town. They're in pretty bad shape, with nothing but one old hand engine. You see, their water mains are about empty and their hose carts ain't worth much."

Oakley turned on his heel and strode from the office. The operator followed him. As they gained the platform Dan paused. The very air was heavy with smoke. The sun was sinking behind a blue film. Its dull disk was the color of copper. He wondered if the same somber darkness was settling down on Antioch. The element of danger seemed very real and present. To Dan this danger centered about Constance Emory. He quite overlooked the fact that there were several thousand other people in Antioch. Durks, at his side, rubbed the sandy bristles on his chin with the back of his hand and tried to believe he had thought of everything and had done everything there was to do.

The woods were on fire all about the Junction, but the town itself was in no especial danger, as cultivated fields intervened to shut away the flames. In these fields Dan could see men and women busy at work tearing down fences. On a hillside a mile off a barn was blazing.

"There goes Warwick's barn," remarked the operator.

"What was the last word from Antioch? Do you remember exactly what was said?" asked Dan.

"The message was that a strong north wind was blowing and that the town was pretty certain to burn unless the engines and hose reached there tonight. But they have been saying that for two days, and the wind's always changed at the right moment and driven the fire back."

Dan glanced along the track and saw the relief train, consisting of an engine, tender and two flat cars, loaded with hose and fire engines, on one of the sidings. He turned on Durks with an angry scowl.

"Why haven't you tried to start that train through? It's ready."

"No one is here to go with it, Mr. Oakley. I was sort of counting on the freight crew for the job."

"Where's Baker?"

"He went home on the 6:10. He lives up at Carson, you know."

This was the first stop on the M. and W. east of Buckhorn.

"Why did you let him leave? Do you mean to say that he's been loafing around here all day with his hands in his pockets? He'll never pull another throttle for the Huckleberry!"

Durks did not attempt to reply to this explosion of wrath.

"Who made up the train?" demanded Dan.

"Baker did—him and his fireman. I didn't know but the freight might come up from Parker's Run, and I wanted to be fixed for 'em. I couldn't do a

Presentation at Plainfield

A Plainfield correspondent writes: Two presentations were recently made to Mrs. (Rev.) W. H. Buckler, of this place. They were as follows:

Dear Mrs. Buckler, — We, the members of the East Methodist Church, Plainfield, present you with this purse as a token of our appreciation and friendship, for the able and energetic manner in which you have discharged the responsible duties of leader of the choir and superintendent of the Sabbath School.

That you may be spared to long continue in the service of the church is the earnest prayer of the many members of the church and that the incoming year may be a happy and prosperous one to you is the wish of all.

Signed on behalf of the said congregation and school,

Mrs. James L. Hamilton.

To Mrs. W. H. Buckler:

Dear S. S. Teacher,—We have assembled here to-night to commemorate the birth of our Saviour and to try to make hearts happy, as our Saviour has said by giving to one another. It is at Christmas time, when this thought of giving seems to be felt the most in our hearts. We exchange friendly greetings and show our love to another by giving them a present just for a token of remembrance, and in this way we wish to show our love and appreciation to you. You have proved yourself a successful teacher of our Bible class, composed of married women, young middle-aged andd old, and all enjoyed your teaching so much. If there would only more come, any who do not seem to get time to study the lesson during the week, if they would come and listen to the lesson being taught they would go home with such a full knowledge of the lesson, they would want to come every Sunday. The lesson is so thoroughly prepared the preceding week, that it is fully explained on Sunday. One of the grandest things in a Sunday school is to have a good religious teacher, and we are well suited with ours. We have always found you to be just as friendly and kind one time as another, and you have won many friends since you have been in our midst. We thought we would like to show you in some way how we appreciate your teaching, so we ask you to accept this purse, not for its value, but for the meaning it is intended to convey. We hope God will strengthen you to perform your many duties in the church and Sunday school wherever you and yours are stationed. We wish you a merry Christmas and a happy New Year.

Signed on behalf of your Bible class of the West Church:

A Sidney Wedding.

A very pretty wedding took place on Jan. 2nd, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Christopher Jeffrey, on the second concession, when their oldest daughter, Jannie, was married to Mr. Frank Hogle, of Glen Miller. At stroke of seven, after Miss Mabel Ketcheson played the wedding march, the ceremony was performed by Rev. H. W. Foley, of Bayside, pastor of the bride. The bridal party stood beneath an arch of evergreens beautifully decorated for the occasion, while about fifty guests witnessed the interesting event. The bride, who was given away by her father, was gowned in pearl grey crepe de chene, with yoke, with all over lace, trimmed with silk chiffon and ruching, and carried a bouquet of carnations and smilax, and was attended by Miss Aggie Ray, of Centenary, who wore grey woollen voile with pearl sequin yoke, with silk lace trimmings and bouquet same as the bride. The groom was ably assisted by his brother, Ed. After the usual congratulations the company retired to the tea room, where a magnificent supper was spread. The groom's gift to the bride was a gold watch and chain, to the bridesmaid a gold brooch, and to his groomsman a gold pin. The bride received also a large assortment of the most beautiful and useful articles in china, glass, silverware and household furniture. Mr. and Mrs. Hogle will spend a short honeymoon with relatives in North Hastings. Mrs. Hogle's many friends at White's Church join heartily in wishing her all the joy and happiness that heart can desire and will be glad to know that she will not move far from their midst and hope that they will still have her presence in the congregation.

SIDNEY CROSSING.

The annual Sunday School entertainment of White's Church was held on Friday night, Jan. 4th. A large crowd was present. An excellent programme, consisting of recitations, solos, dialogues, monologues, etc.; also the instrumental selections by Bandmaster Rogers, of Trenton, and Mr. Herb. Sweatman, and cornet solos by Mr. Rogers was thoroughly enjoyed by all present. A flower drill given by ten young ladies was very pretty and gracefully done. Proceeds exceeded $40.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining or the Eustachian Tube. When the tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

STEAMED POTATOES.

Properly Cooked, They Are White, Mealy and Nutritious.

The potato is, on the whole, the most valuable of all our vegetables, since in nutritive value it stands next to wheat. When we consider how universally the potato is used in this country, a large proportion of our people deriving their chief sustenance from this plant, we have as yet made little advance in the art of preparing this most useful vegetable for our tables. We boil and bake potatoes. Beyond this the cooking of this most valuable of all roots is comparatively unknown. We commit, moreover, several cardinal errors in boiling potatoes. We very frequently find them on our tables nearly ruined, unpalatable and waterlogged. The most nutritious part, which lies just under the skin, is thrown away in peeling.

If young and tender, take off the surface skin by scrubbing with a stiff brush; if old, scrape with a blunt knife. It is never best to let them remain in contact with the boiling water. The best way is to place a quart of water in the kettle, cover with a steamer and put over a brisk fire. When the water boils, put the potatoes in the steamer, the largest at the bottom, boil briskly until done, then remove the steamer lid, fold a clean towel, cover the potatoes, first sprinkling a small teaspoonful of salt over them. In five minutes they will be white and mealy—a feast for hungry people. — Brooklyn Eagle.

SHRINKING FROM GUESTS.

A Mistake That Busy Married Women Are Apt to Make.

"The woman who does her own work is sometimes in danger of gliding into an attitude of shrinking from guests," says Mary Stewart Cutting in Harper's Bazar. "Very mistakenly she feels that when she cannot offer the perfection of employed service to her friends she does not care to ask them to her table. Thus the man of the house too often has to renounce the privilege, dear to his heart, of bringing home a chance guest. When young and inexperienced he cherishes the illusion that he can do this at any time without warning, and it takes a series of bitter lessons to convince him that he is not free in this regard, and even if he sends word to his wife that one of his old college friends has happened in and that he is bringing him out to dinner he may be making a terrible blunder.

"It is always a pity when this stage is reached. The man who comes to the point where he is afraid to invite a friend home with him when he pleases has lost something besides the privilege. A certain degree of confidence in his wife's ability to meet emergencies in her eagerness to give him pleasure is gone."

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

A new range should be very gradually heated to prevent the possibility of cracking.

Air the clothespress and drawers regularly once a month to make sure there is no dampness in them.

If kerosene is spilled on carpets, books or manuscripts, try removing it by sprinkling cornmeal thickly over the article immediately. Renew frequently until the oil has been entirely absorbed.

A Chinese proverb says, "The wind between two walls is like a dagger," meaning never sit in a draft, for a cold is a stab in the lungs. Moral.—If the wind blows between your walls, fix things and save the doctor's bill.

An upholsterer's needle will prove very useful to keep in the sewing table. Chair buttons, lounge buttons, etc., can then easily be replaced by the housekeeper. When one lives in the country it is not always possible to send for aid outside.

Over the Falls.

Did you ever hear of the cruel experiment that some heartless men made at Niagara falls many years ago? They got an old ship and put aboard a buffalo, a fox, a bear, a dog and some geese and then sent it over the falls. The bear jumped from the ship before it reached the falls and was rescued unhurt. The geese went over the falls and found their way ashore, where they were sold at a high price as curiosities. The buffalo, the fox and the dog were never seen or heard of afterward. It is almost a pity that the man who suggested the experiment was not on board the ship.—Chicago News.

The Dado.

Nothing is more economical in wall decoration than a dado, according to Wall Paper News. As the lower part of the walls becomes soiled more quickly than the upper, a room can often be freshened simply by renewing the dado without touching the upper walls. Another advantage of the dado is that it gives a room a comfortable and furnished appearance without the addition of a lot of furniture. This is particularly true of a hall or stairway where there is a lot of space that needs breaking up.

Lanolin Cream.

Lanolin cream, which is considered an excellent emollient for the skin, may be prepared as follows: Get half a pint of lanolin and half a pint of pure oil of sweet almonds. Put a tablespoonful of the lanolin on a china plate and add an equal quantity of the almond oil. Mix together thoroughly and add from half to a teaspoonful of tincture of benzoin till the paste becomes of the consistency of thick cream. This should be applied at night.

USING STARCH.

The Proper Degree of Stiffness For Different Materials.

Starch is used in laundry work for stiffening muslin, lace, linen and cotton materials. It improves the appearance of clothes and also enables them to resist the action of dust, and they in consequence keep clean longer than when they are quite limp. The degree of stiffness necessary enables the laundress to decide as to which is the better starch to use, hot or cold water starch.

As a rule, it is better to use hot water starch for muslins, laces, prints, table linen and cotton underwear. It not only makes the clothes less stiff and more agreeable to wear or use, but it makes them look clearer than when cold water starch is used. Except in the case of muslins and print dresses this starch is seldom used in its full strength, but it is diluted to a degree varying according to the quality of material to be starched and also to the stiffness required. Usually a thin material requires a thicker starch than one of a thicker make.

The following may be considered average proportions of hot water starch to be used for different kinds of material:

Muslins, print blouses and skirts, white or colored underskirts, babies' robes and Dutch bonnets are, as a rule, stiffened in full strength starch.

It is better to starch only the lower two-thirds of underskirts, leaving the upper part soft to cling to the figure.

Babies' dresses should always have the bodices less stiff than the skirts.

For print pinafores, aprons, muslin handkerchiefs and common laces equal parts of starch and water give a very good stiffness.

The starch for table linen and pillow slips if diluted to one-fourth of its strength gives the necessary degree of stiffness.

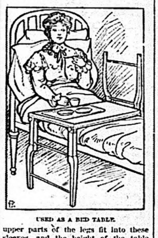
Frills of pillow slips are usually starched in thicker starch. Underwear, unless wished specially stiff, is done in starch reduced to about one-fifth of its strength.

CONVERTIBLE TABLE.

Useful For Sewing or Writing or For an Invalid's Bed.

A handy table invented by a Canadian possesses capacities of adjustment and transformation which fit it for use for purposes which ordinarily require several separate articles. This table can be readily made into either a work table, a lap board, a shirt fitting appliance or an invalid or bed table.

The top of the table is broad, with a thin flat surface, adaptable as a sewing table or writing desk. At the four corners are openings, beneath which are sleeves having thumbscrews. The upper parts of the legs fit into these sleeves, and the height of the table is adjusted by means of the thumbscrews. In this way the top of the table can be lowered so that it rests across the knees, in which position it serves as a lap board. To adjust the table for serving meals in bed to an invalid one pair of legs are removed and secured in reverse position. One pair of legs thus rest on the floor and one pair on the bed. The braces of the reversed pair of legs serve in this instance as a rack for the support of napkins or other linen. A drawer for holding needles, thimbles, pins, etc., is fitted in guides beneath the table top.



USED AS A BED TABLE.

Taking Care of Clothes.

Any woman with a limited amount on which to dress should learn the value of looking after her clothes and putting them carefully away each time they are worn. In doing this she will find her gowns will last twice as long and look well to the end. Sew up a seam the minute it starts to rip. Fasten on a button or a hook and eye if they are loose, and don't use pins if you wish to preserve your gown. For the protection of light dresses hang your closet with unbleached muslin sheeting. Have plenty of hooks and skirt hangers and hang up every gown as soon as you take it off after you have brushed it, if it is dusty. When a gown becomes soiled, send it to the cleaner before it is too dirty to be remedied. You will be repaid for your trouble and always have something ready to wear.

Kitchen Floors.

So many people find it hard to keep their kitchen floors in good condition that method may help them. Wash with soda and water. After sprinkling about a heaping teaspoonful of soda on any grease spots pour boiling water over it, then take a mop and wipe up the whole floor. This is far more satisfactory than scrubbing, for it will take out grease spots without the use of "elbow grease." This will also keep the floor snowy white.

Flashed From a Fan

By COLIN S. COLLINS

Copyright, 1906, by H. C. Sutcliffe

That the junior partner did not like Miss Coddington was a self evident fact. The senior partner and the manager approved her work, and once the manager had even praised it, but letters never went into Frank Spaulding's room that they were not returned for correction—usually just before closing time.

Only Ruth Coddington and Harry Jackson knew why Spaulding disliked her, for it was Jackson, working late over his books, who had come at her call when the junior partner had tried to kiss her as she brought in to him some late work.

It had marked them down as the victims of Spaulding's wrath, but it had also established between them a bond of sympathy that had ripened into love. Spaulding could not very well have them dismissed without explaining why he wanted it done, so he took his revenge in making things about the office as unpleasant for them as he could.

But they did not care for his petty meannesses so long as they were together. Jackson had been given the promise of a raise in the fall, and together they would have enough to make a comfortable home. There would be a quiet marriage, and they would wait for their honeymoon for the following year.

Then suddenly the firm began to lose money. Until Spaulding had been taken in as a partner Gordon Nixon had conducted a conservative brokerage business. With the coming of the younger man they had taken to speculating on their own account. Now in some mysterious fashion the market invariably went against them.

Nixon worried much over the situation. The fever of gambling is in the blood of those who handle stocks, and as loss followed loss he sought the sadly needed recoup by making heavier investments until his entire fortune was pretty well tied up.

THERE CAME A REGULAR FLASH.

For a time they had operated brilliantly and had taken a position of power in the market that had brought many new customers who follow "lucky" firms with blind superstition. Now they were losing their customers as well as their money, and Hennings, Crease & Hennings were winning their business away.

Hennings and Nixon had been bitter enemies for years, and Nixon would rather have lost outright double what he had dropped than that he should have lost it to the man who had stolen from him the girl he loved. He could not believe that any one in the office should be guilty of treachery, and yet Hennings appeared to have information of his moves almost before they had been made.

"I think I can show you," suggested Spaulding as he listened to the elder's plaint. "Come with me."

Spaulding led the way to the other side of the quadrangle about which the offices were grouped. He ascended one flight and stepped into a vacant office directly over those occupied by Hennings' firm.

"I was in here the other day looking for new offices," he said. "I thought it might be a good plan for me to have a private office here where I might keep an eye on Hennings. This is what I noticed."

He led the way to the window and pointed across to their own offices. From one of the open windows there came a regular flash. For a few moments they stared in silence; then Spaulding drew his partner away.

"I suppose you know what heliographing is?" he suggested.

"It's a military telegraph with flashes from a mirror, isn't it?" asked Nixon.

Spaulding nodded.

"I suppose you don't remember that little mirror Miss Coddington carries in her purse?" he asked meaningly. "I noticed it the other day when I was over. It's a pity you cannot read the Morse code."

Slowly Nixon turned out of the office. "I liked that girl," he said sadly. "She seemed to be an earnest and conscientious little thing."

"I told you some time ago," suggested Spaulding, "that I thought she should be turned off, though I had no idea that she was as bad as this."

"I don't like to think it even now," said Nixon. "Even in spite of what I have seen I cannot believe it of her."

Yet he summoned Ruth to his office and in gentle tones told her that she would have to go. He was not disposed to explain for a moment, but she was tearfully persistent, and finally the whole story came out.

Jackson looked anxiously toward her as she came out of the office and as soon as the door closed came toward her. Brokenly she told him of the charge that had been made and of her inability to refute it.

"I have used my mirror a lot," she confessed. "Any girl in an office would want to look neat. But you know, Harry, that I would not do such a thing."

"I know," he admitted. "But there must be something to it or Mr. Nixon would not have been convinced. There is a mystery here somewhere."

"Now it's all spoiled," she sobbed, "our marriage and my career—everything."

"Not if I know it," he said savagely. "Don't you worry. "I'll find something out."

A little later he slipped from the office. He had been gone several minutes when the telephone bell rang. Nixon had come out into the office to see the bookkeeper, and he picked up the receiver.

"It's Jackson talking," he said after a moment. "He wants you to turn off that fan, Miss Coddington."

Ruth reached up and turned off the electric fan that was whirring over her head and went on with her writing. A moment later Jackson dashed into the office.

"If you will come with me," he said to his employer, "I'll show you the real explanation of those flashes. Please come."

He stopped a moment at Ruth's desk, then led Nixon out into the hall. Like Spaulding, he went to the empty office on the other side of the building. The heliograph flashes were still sending their mute signals, but in a moment they stopped. Presently they began again, and again ceased. This was repeated several times when Harry turned to his companion.

"You know that fan over Miss Coddington's desk? It's one of the sort that swings back and forth to keep the air moving. That flash is caused by the back of the fan. There's a brass screw that catches the sun and makes the flash when it comes into the sunlight. The moment Miss Coddington turns off the fan the signals stop. That's the whole explanation of the mystery."

"But the leakage of the information?" persisted the troubled Nixon. "That does not account for that."

"I can show you what does," was the jubilant answer. "I worked in an electrical place once, and I got the idea there. Your telephone wires, like the rest, run around the building, because this place was built before the idea of interior conduits for wires was developed. They all run around the building until they come to the lower corner, and then they join the cable that runs down to the street conduit. All the Hennings people had to do was to tap your private wire to the exchange and get the whole thing. They got some outside man to do the tapping. Every message you send to the street comes in here."

Nixon leaned out and verified the fact. Then he turned to Harry.

"I think," he said, "that by sending false messages over the wire for a few days we can recoup our losses. Then we will have Hennings arrested. It's a criminal offense, I believe."

He turned and led the way back to his own office. Ruth looked up anxiously as they entered.

"My dear Miss Coddington," he said, with old fashioned courtesy, "I have to beg your pardon for even suspecting you." He clasped her hand warmly and turned to the bookkeeper.

"Miss Coddington and Mr. Jackson are going to take next week and the week after for their honeymoon trip," he said. "Please make them out a check for a thousand as a wedding present from the firm. No, don't thank me," he went on as Ruth sprang forward. "Send me a piece of the wedding cake; that's all."

The Missel Thrush.

The robin, that "pious" bird, is very quarrelsome, and it exasperates one to watch him wasting the precious hours of food in hunting another hungry robin up and down and around and around till the sparrows have cleared the board. The blackbirds, too, are very annoying in the way that they snatch up a lump of bread and fly off with it, only to be chased about for the rest of the morning by other blackbirds, while a sparrow makes a square meal off the morsel fallen meanwhile under a shrub. But relentless as they are in pursuit, the curious fact is that they seldom fight. If the pursued turns the pursuer stops, perks up his tail and, being promptly charged by the other, becomes in his turn the pursued. But woe to both when the missel thrush comes. He is pitiless in pursuit, and I have seen them pass my window time after time in the course of a morning, the storm cock hard on the "heels" of the blackbird, and when they overtake them what happens? For myself I believe the missel thrush is a cannibal. At any rate, I attribute some of the dead blackbirds and thrushes that one finds about the grounds to his cruel beak. He watches for birds for hours at a time, like a bird of prey, and attacks them like one. I have often stopped a chase which I knew could only end one way. —Contemporary Review.

Follow Each New Discovery of Science.

The great strides that medical science has made in the last few years is due to the germ theory. When the germ of disease has been discovered, the doctors have not been slow in finding a drug to kill it. In a few years, it will be rare to find a bald-headed man or woman. The falling out of hair is due to a dandruff germ, and now it has been discovered how to kill this germ. The remedy used is called Newbro's Herpicide. Its success has been marvelous. Not a failure has been so far reported. It is also a delightful hair dressing free from oil or sticky substances. Try it and be convinced of its actual merit. Sold by leading druggists. Complained of dizzy spells, and more or less stomach trouble, since a school girl. Had tried numerous remedies for stomach and liver; on investigation found she had headache both front and back, sleeplessness, and a frequent tired feeling. After a careful examination, found compound astigmatism; corrected with the proper glasses, especially made for her. In TWO MONTHS was VERY MUCH BETTER in appearance, headaches and stomach trouble ALL GONE. She said: "It is strange that I should have suffered for more than 20 years and no one seemed to know that my trouble was caused by my eyes: it hardly seems possible now, but I feel perfectly well." President—W. C. Reid.

First Vice-President—H. J. Clarke.

Second Vice-President—S. J. Wedden.

Directors—W. Rodbourne, D. Barragar, S. A. Gardner, J. Harris, E. T. Cherry, Mayer Sulman, W. J. Diamond, F. D. Diamond and W. Kemp.

Auditors—H. J. Clarke and S. A. Gardner.

After the annual meeting was over The Directors met and selected Mr. W. J. Diamond as Secretary-Treasurer, at the usual salary of $25 per annum.

Mr. Rodbourne, in leaving the chair, thanked the members for the honor conferred upon him last year.

The newly-elected President, Mr. W. C. Reid, also returned his thanks. He promised to do all he could to promote the welfare of the society. The society, he said, should continue to encourage the children of the city to grow flowers, which added much to the beauty of the city. More should be done in this direction.

Kingston and Its Church-Owned Saloon

Kingston, Jan. 9.—The St. George's Rectory owns much of the block on King street facing the market, and in one building the Collendar House is situated, and is rented by the church to J. M. Connell. The rent from the property is divided among the six Anglican clergymen of the city, and they get $100 each. As Bishop Mills and Dean Farthing asked the Council to make a reduction in the number of hotels, and the by-law has been carried, several hotel-keepers have retaliated by asking the License Commissioners that the Collendar be the first to be closed up.

Married at Christ Church Last Night.

Last evening at 8 o'clock a quiet wedding took place at Christ Church, when Mr. Robert John Boyle and Miss Nettie M. Stratton, both of this city, were united in marriage. The rector, Rev. R. C. Blagrave, performed the ceremony. The bridesmaid was Miss Carrie Butler, and Mr. Walter Symons did honors for the groom. The young couple have taken up their residence in this city.

Weather For January.

Rev. Irl R. Hicks, predicts for January: Storms from the 3rd to the 8th, with perhaps lightning and thunder about the 6th: then sleet and snow and a "full-grown cold wave." Boreas will raid the country, extending far into the southward. Then from the 11th to the 12th there are to be more storms, with high winter gales, rain southward and snow northward. There will be earthquakes, and then another "wicked" cold wave. From the 16th to the 20th there will be rain and snowstorms, then another cold wave. From the 21st to the 24th, there will be snow squalls, then another cold wave. From that to the end of the month there are to be variations of wind, rain, snow and cold, and we are warned to beware of blizzards. More seismic disturbances are also promised.

Skull Was Fractured.

The Eganville Star-Enterprise has the following regarding the death of Alex. Logan, at Madawaska recently:

Alexander Logan, of New Carlow, Hastings county, met a horrible death at Madawaska on Saturday morning last. We have been unable to obtain full particulars, but it appears the unfortunate man was struck by the morning mixed train and instantly killed, the skull being badly fractured and the body mangled. The accident occurred before daylight and just how it happened will remain a mystery. Logan was a man of about fifty-five or sixty years of age and is said to have been of a sober and industrious disposition. About fifty dollars was found in his pocket. He leaves a wife and family at New Carlow. The remains were taken to Barry's Bay and thence to his home for interment.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"AROUND THE CLOCK" TO-MORROW NIGHT.

"Around the Clock" is the new musical comedy written especially to introduce the Ritchie London Comedy and Pantomime Company in a new field of mirth. This famous band of foreign fun-makers, who took the American public into their confidence and hearts at once by their clever work in that rollicking and interesting travesty on the present vaudeville craze, "A Night in a London Music Hall," which by the way was one of the big sensational acts at the various variety houses last season, will be seen to better advantage this year. The play is in three acts and the joint effort of Frank Huffman, L. O. Smith and Sebastian Hiller. It is brimful of humor, wit, satire, pantomime and novelty, and is sure to strike more than the popular chord when it comes to the opera house on Friday, January 11th.

"THE VILLAGE PARSON."

"The Village Parson," one of the biggest successes on tour this season, will be the offering at the opera house on Wednesday, January 16th. It is in four acts, is replete with genuine heart interest and clever comedy, and is said to be interpreted by an evenly balanced and exceptionally artistic company. A special scenic outfit is carried, and the production as a whole has won unstinted praise wherever it has been seen. Plan opens Monday morning.

CHEAP CANDIES.

NEARLY PUT AN END TO A YOUNG FELLOW WHO LIVES IN NORTH HASTINGS.

Madoc, Jan. 7.—A young fellow, Martin Haggerty by name, who lives 30 miles north of here, near Gilmour, was poisoned by eating "conversation" lozenges. Three Madoc doctors were called in attendance, and by their combined efforts he succeeded in recovering from the effects of the poison. It is time, however, that the Government enquired a little more closely into the manufacture of this cheap confectionery. Cases of poison from this cause are becoming so common as to give cause for alarm.

Died In California

The Pasadena (Cal.) Star has the following obituary notice of a young lady, formerly well-known in this city: "Miss Elfleda R. Chapman, aged 25, died yesterday at the home of her aunt, Mrs. Byron Fox, No. 154 West Walnut street. She was a native of Toronto, and was an only daughter. She had lived in Pasadena about three years, endearing herself to many friends. The funeral services will be held from the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Fox Thursday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock. Interment at Mountain View.

Valise Forced Open And Money Stolen

YOUNG ENGLISHMAN ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN ROBBED BY MAN HE HAD BEFRIENDED.

A young Englishman named Isaac Bernard, who is employed on the Grand Trunk Railway here, reports to the police that some time on Tuesday night his valise was opened and $7 taken therefrom. It appears that Bernard is boarding at a house on Reid street, and a party named Edward Reeves was his room-mate. Tuesday night Bernard retired and later, Reeves came in but did not go to bed. Upon rising yesterday morning Bernard found his valise had been forced open and $7 in money taken therefrom.

Reeves was not to be seen, and upon enquiry it was learned that he had taken the 2.55 train yesterday morning for Buffalo. He is suspected of taking the money and the circumstances are said to be strongly against him. Bernard had befriended Reeves, and the latter knew that Bernard kept his money in the valise.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

SPORTING NOTES.

The Wanderers, Stanley Cupholders, beat Montreal 6-3 last night.

Young Corbett was badly plastered by Tommy Murphy, a third-rater, last night. Corbett's place is now way back among the has-beens.

Belleville will have, on the ice this evening, its strongest line-up of the winter. The ice is fine, and "Chaucer" Elliott will be on the job as referee.

The game to-night will probably draw a big crowd. The locals can't afford to lose to-night. It will be a case of "skidoo" for any club which loses a match at home. Be on hand to cheer the boys along to-night.

It is now said that "Reddy" McMillan will play with the Michigan Soo. He has played with several clubs so far and none of them seem to want to keep him.

Picton wants Chaucer Elliott for the match here to-night. Anybody will do for Belleville, so long as there's an even break.

At Westport ice races yesterday the winner of the green race was A. M. Patch, owned by E. Mulville, Westport, second, Maud D., owned by T. Devlin, Perth; third, Volto, owned by W. C. Fredbrugh, Westport. The 2.30 class was unfinished.

Ireland possesses a new lady master of hounds in Mrs. L. A. Bryan, of Breemount, who has just accepted the leadership of the Bree Harriers, a pack of fifteen couples, hunting in the neighborhood of Enniscorthy. The Tynan and Armagh Harriers also possess a lady M.H. in Miss Isa McClintock, while Miss Kate Rose-Cleland and two sisters hunt the Rathgael Harriers.

The skeleton of Sysonby, the greatest horse of his day, if not the best that ever raced in this country, and for whom his owner, James R. Keene, refused an offer of $200,000 a year ago, is being mounted for exhibition, and will soon be placed alongside of that of George Wilkes and the big Percheron in the horse alcove of the American Museum of Natural History in New York.

Bancroft Village Election

The election in Bancroft village on Monday was a spirited one. Three candidates ran for Reeve, namely: Jas. Best, Geo. Weese and J. Davey. The former won by 3 votes over Mr. Weese, who was second.

The councillors elected were M. Rouse, T. Walker, L. Reid and J. A. Eby.

TO ENTHRONE NEW SHAH

Mohammed Ali Mirza Formally Succeeds on Chadir Festival.

Death of the Late Persian Monarch Will Leave No Stir In European Politics—Nor Will There Be Internal Troubles, as the Persian People Are Devoted to the Present Dynasty—British Fully In Touch.

Teheran, Jan. 10.—The enthronement of the new Shah, Mohammed Ali Mirza, has been fixed for the Chadir Festival, the festival of the lake, which will be celebrated on Feb. 2. This date is regarded as very auspicious, being the anniversary of the day upon which the prophet, standing at the side of the lake, proclaimed that Mohammed Ali Mirza was his own flesh and blood.

Almost immediately after the official announcement of the death of the Shah yesterday morning, Mohammed Ali Mirza proceeded to the palace, where he was formally acknowledged as Shah by the grand vizier and other princes of the royal family, and by a large number of high court and Government officials.

NEW SHAH OF PERSIA.

Late yesterday the body of the dead monarch was removed, with imposing ceremonials to the "Great Kakieh," where it will remained until its actual interment. The date of the obsequies has not yet been fixed.

A Picturesque Ruler.

London, Jan. 10.—The death of the Shah of Persia removes a picturesque ruler, who was well known to western Europe owing to his frequent visits, particularly to France. During the visit of 1905 the Shah and his suite made a dazzling appearance on the boulevard and in the music halls of Paris. They were treated as national figures, and popular enthusiasm was marked owing to the Shah's good nature and lavish charity. At that time his majesty looked old and feeble. He invariably wore a royal costume with richly embroidered coat and red fez.

The Shah's death comes at a time when European Governments are engaged in an effort to strengthen their position in Persia. The struggle is due to the geographical position of Persia as a buffer between India and Russia's southern possessions, stretching toward the Persian Gulf. Still another international factor has recently been introduced by Germany's commercial and railway activity along the Persian Gulf.

Strongly Pro-Russian.

The Shah was strongly pro-Russian, and as a result Russian influence had been predominant at Teheran. An Anglo-Russian understanding has recently been negotiated and the announcement of its terms is considered imminent. By this agreement Great Britain and Russia will cease their rivalry over Persia and unite in a joint policy.

A leading Persian official here in an interview yesterday said he did not believe that internal trouble would follow the Shah's death, as the people are devoted to the present dynasty. Foreign controversies are not anticipated.

The British Foreign Office is in touch with the situation. Exchanges of views between Russian and Great Britain have brought about complete accord, by which they will act together in a crisis to maintain the status quo. Consequently no fear is entertained that any other power will try to disarrange the existing political conditions.

London Firemen Injured.

London, Jan. 10.—A fire occurred in South London early yesterday morning, which completely gutted the old Trebilcock Hall, causing damage to the extent of nearly $2,500, on which the total insurance amounts to $2,800.

An axe slipped off the verandah roof and struck Foreman Mason on the head, inflicting a nasty scalp wound. Fireman Coles also met with a slight mishap, being struck on the back by falling eavestrough.

Was Once a Queen.

Gmunden, Upper Austria, Jan. 10.—The Princess Mary of Saxe-Altenburg, former Queen of Hanover, died yesterday. She was the widow of King George V. of Hanover, who was dethroned in 1866, when the kingdom was annexed by Prussia because the Hanoverians took the Austrian side in the war with Prussia.

Dies From Burns.

Toronto, Jan. 10.—Mrs. Susan Fennell of Lee avenue, whose clothing caught fire from matches on Monday, died yesterday at the General Hospital.

Seventy-Six Indictments.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 10.—The Federal grand jury yesterday returned [illegible] indictments against the Santa Fe Railroad Co. containing 76 counts.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.

Farmer Dean of Smith Township Rescued by His Wife.

Peterboro', Jan. 10.—Word was received here yesterday of the determined attempt at suicide of Adolphus Dean, a well-to-do farmer, aged 45 years, living in Smith Township, about 20 miles north of this city. Monday was hog-killing day on the farm and the chains were left in place.

Going out in the evening, Mrs. Dean found her husband hanging, he having mounted a block of wood, placed a chain about his neck and then kicked the block away. Mrs. Dean held him while the daughter and servant loosened the chains.

Dean was nearly dead, and is still in a precarious condition. He has been in ill-health for a month past.

Statue to Pope Leo XIII.

Rome, Jan. 10.—In the presence of Tadolini, the sculptor, the statue of the late Pope Leo XIII., which is 20 feet high, yesterday was raised above the door leading to the sacristy of the Church of St. John Lateran, left of the choir. It is expected that the monument, which will cost $12,000, will be paid for among the cardinals created by Pope Leo, who were alive when the late pontiff died. It is likely that the body of the late Pope will be removed to the Church of St. John Lateran in February.

Drowned Through Ice.

Ottawa, Jan. 10.—A team and sleigh containing six men plunged into a hole in the ice on the Ottawa River opposite Rockland about 1.30 o'clock yesterday morning, and Arthur Lemieux of Papineauville and the team were drowned.

Heading Off the Boycott.

Hong Kong, Jan. 10.—The viceroy of Canton has ordered the arrest of leaders of the proposed anti-American boycott meetings. Placards on the subject are being destroyed and newspapers prohibited from mentioning the topic.

To Kill Race-Track Betting.

Nashville, Tenn., Jan. 10.—Gov. John I. Cox, in his final message to the Legislature yesterday, suggests the enactment of an anti-racetrack gambling law.

Cured Of Piles by Pyramid Pile Cure.

IF YOU SUFFER, YOU CAN BE CURED, COSTS NOTHING TO TRY.

If you think that you must be operated upon to be cured of piles, you are wrong. Thousands of cases of piles of excruciating severity—worse no doubt than yours, have been cured painlessly, quickly and permanently, while the patient has been at his work without the loss of time necessitated by an operation. In fact, many a sufferer has not been able to reach his work or even move across the room until after using the home remedy prepared by the Pyramid Drug Co.

No More Piles! One Box Cured—Only 50 Cts!

Such was the condition of an Indiana business man, as shown in a recent letter:

"Received your sample of Pile Cure and have given it a fair trial and it has proven the best I ever tried. I can recommend you highly in this vicinity. Have used your sample and one box and it has effected a complete cure. It has been worth $100 to me. Thanking you for the sample and the cure, I will recommend you to everybody. Yours respectfully, Julius Mayer, Dealer in Feathers, Ginseng and Hides, Bedford, Ind."

The Pyramid Pile Cure can be used at home in the privacy of your own room. There is enough strength in each little suppository to drive out infection, while at the same time it melts away into the deadened tissues of the rectum, heals up the fissures, relieves the inflammation, starts the circulation of the hemorrhoidal veins, diminishes the congestion and brings the organs back to their normal condition.

We want to prove to every sufferer from piles that the Pyramid Pile Cure will cure. This treatment is prepared exclusively by the Pyramid Drug Co., which is sufficient evidence of its genuineness. However, we do not ask you to depend upon the reliability of our name or the bona fide testimonials of the hundreds of cured piles sufferers. Send us your name and address for a free trial package. Use it according to directions. The relief you will get will justify your going at once to the druggists for a 50 cent box. All druggists sell the Pyramid Pile Cure, just like the sample. Accept no substitute. Pyramid Drug Co., 76 Pyramid Bldg., Marshall, Mich,

TO STOP THE LABOR WAR

House of Commons Discusses Mr. R. L. Borden's Motion.

Leader of Opposition Would Provide For More Effective Legislation to Prevent Strikes and Lockouts—Hon. Mr. Lemieux Has Bill Providing For Arbitration and Forbids Labor Action While In Progress.

Ottawa, Jan. 10.—There was a fair attendance when the House convened at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon and some fifty questions were answered by the Ministry, the information, as a rule being already published in the blue books.

A long debate, to be continued on some future occasion, sprung up in connection with a resolution offered by R. L. Borden declaring:

"That in the opinion of this House more effective legislative provision should be made for the prevention and settlement of disputes between employers and workmen, to the end that strikes and lockouts, sometimes resulting in loss of life, and always entailing privation and suffering, may be prevented; that a select committee of nine be appointed to enquire into the matters, aforesaid, and to consider and report what further enactments are desirable or necessary."

Mr. Borden spoke at considerable length, and his address was thoughtful and to the point. Strikes for years past had been frequent and costly in Canada. They had brought with them, not only financial loss to employer and employe, but they had, at times, provoked disorder which called for the interposition of troops.

He did not think that the Conciliation Act had amounted to much. Some strikes had been settled by the act and good offices of Mackenzie King, but these settlements had been due to his personality rather than to any particular legislation.

The futility of the conciliation act had been shown last summer when the Buckingham strike, involving human life, had raged within a few miles of the capital. The strike record for five years showed 104 in 1901, 123 in 1902, 160 in 1903, 103 in 1904 and 87 in 1905. In 1906 there had been serious labor troubles, and the Lethbridge strike had exposed the people of Saskatchewan to a fuel famine, which threatened the lives of many citizens.

In New Zealand the Government retained coal lands, and it was always prepared to take over and operate coal mines. The progressive colony had a compulsory arbitration act, and the speaker was of the opinion that a similar act could be enforced in Canada.

Mr. Verville, the Labor member from Montreal, opposed compulsory arbitration. He did not favor the appointment of a committee.

Mr. Lemieux as Minister of Labor opposed the Borden resolution. He briefly explained his bill, which has not yet been printed and distributed. It provided not only for arbitration, but forbade any strike or lockout while the arbitration was in progress. True, neither party was bound to accept the reward, but he submitted that public opinion was not prepared for compulsory arbitration. The bill would apply, not only to coal mines, but to all public utilities.

He admitted that the Conciliation Act had failed in the Buckingham strike, and that the award respecting the G.T.R. telegraphers had not been strictly observed. He claimed, however, that as a result of the arbitration on the latter case the parties had come to an agreement.

Ralph Smith (Liberal, B.C.), offered an amendment declaring that some legislation should be passed at the present session. He favored the Lemieux bill, but was opposed to compulsory arbitration.

Mr. Bourassa favored the principle of compulsory arbitration, but believed it would at this time be premature.

Hon. George Foster moved the adjournment of the debate.

Other Matters.

Mr. Macdonnell (South Toronto) presented a petition praying for a subsidy to be given the Temiskaming and North Ontario Railway.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier introduced a bill providing for ten members from Saskatchewan and seven from Alberta, the redistribution being based on the census of 1906.

A return brought down disclosed some interesting correspondence which followed the cancellation by Mr. Oliver of the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Co. The reason given to the company for the cancellation of the contract was that the company had not carried out its promises in respect to supplying immigrants from Norway, Sweden and Finland. The company maintained that it had always lived up to its contract, and that it could not be canceled except on a year's notice, and claimed compensation for loss of three years and five months of the contract.

A New Fast Line Is Sure.

3 1-2 Days' Service Between Halifax and Blacksod Bay, Ire.

Lord Strathcona Interested in the Syndicate—Ships to Speed 25 Knots an Hour Across Ocean—Rapid Trains Over Ireland and Ferry Line to England—Big Men in the Project.

Montreal, Jan. 11.—That a syndicate has been formed in London with Lord Strathcona interested to establish a 3 1-2 days' service between Halifax and Blacksod Bay, Ireland, is confirmed.

The Great Britain, Ireland and Canada Express route is the official title of a project which proposes:

No. 1. The establishment of a service between Halifax, Nova Scotia and Blacksod Bay, on the west coast of Ireland of a line of first-class steamships capable of crossing the Atlantic in 3 1-2 days at an average speed of 25 knots per hour.

No. 2. The establishment of ferries between the east coast of Ireland and the west coast of Scotland and England by means of steamships so constructed as to be capable of conveying passengers and goods train entire from port to port without disturbing passenger or unloading trucks.

No. 3. The construction of such railways in Ireland as may be necessary in conjuction with existing lines to provide for a express passenger service between Blacksod Bay and the east coast at a speed of not less than 50 miles per hour.

Blacksod to Halifax 3 1-2 Days.

The distance between Blacksod and Halifax is 2,100 miles, and with 25 knot steamers the trip would be made in 3 1-2 days. The distance between Blacksod and London, 664 miles, would be covered in about 14 hours and between Halifax and Montreal in 18 to 20 hours, so that mails could be conveyed from the postoffice in London to Chicago in less than 6 days and London to the Pacific coast in 9 days.

With proper steamers on the Pacific Ocean it would be possible to deliver the mails in Japan in 17 days and to Hong Kong in about 22 days.

The promoters claim, in fact, that passengers and mails can be landed in Halifax and sent on to Chicago by the time the best New York steamers reach that port.

It is said the enterprise had the support of Messrs. Chaplin, Milne and Grenfell, the Linton-Clarke Co., Messrs. Vickers, Son & Maxim; Messrs. Swan and Hinton, who are building one of the two new 25-knot Cunard steamers, and others. It is said that the company will seek a yearly subsidy of one million dollars from the Canadian and half a million from the Imperial Parliament.

Cleanliness In Dairying.

Ottawa, Jan. 11.—At the Eastern Dairymen's convention yesterday G. A. Putnam, superintendent of dairying, urged the importance of efforts which would induce the producer to to exercise the greatest possible care in dairying. An authority had declared that the infant raised upon the average milk delivered in the city stood only one chance out of fifteen for life, compared with the infant raised in the natural way.

Ponce May Be Lost.

New York, Jan. 11.—The steamship Ponce of the New York & Porto Rico Steamship Line, which sailed from Ponce, Porto Rico, on December 26 and was due at this port on January 1, is still missing, and the belief that her delay is due to some mechanical accident is giving way to the fear that she is lost. She was last spoken on December 28.

He Fought In '38.

Brockville, Jan. 11.—In the death of Archibald Elliott at his home near Bishop's Mills, one of the landmarks of Grenville County passed away. He was [illegible] years old He came to this country in 1832. He is the last resident in this vicinity who, with the Loyalists, fought at the battle of the windmill near Prescott in 1838.

Cut His Throat.

Montreal, Jan. 11.—Matthias Wallcocks, an Englishman, employed at the C. P. R. Angus shops, committed suicide by cutting his throat with a razor while preparing to go to his work yesterday morning. He was 62 years of age, sober and industrious, but had been acting strangely for a few days.

COST $15,000 TO HOLD SEAT.

W. A. Preston Confirmed In His Election With a Majority of 15 After Two Years' Fighting.

Port Arthur, Jan. 11.—W. A. Preston has been declared elected for the district of Thunder Bay and Rainy River, by Justices Teetzel and Anglin. The majority is 15.

The fight has been on in the courts for two years, and expenses have totaled up close to $15,000.

There has been a recount, three trials and four appeals to win the fight.

Each of Mr. Preston's majority votes will have cost from $200 to $300 each.

The justices will make their report to the Speaker of the House and Mr. Preston will take his seat as representative at the next session.

HOUSES ROCK, PEOPLE FLEE.

Two Distinct Earthquakes Felt In Norway and Sweden.

Stockholm, Sweden, Jan. 11.—Two distinct and sharp shocks were felt at several points in Sweden at 1.30 yesterday morning.

Despatches received from Arvika, Mellerud and Stromstad, report that the rocking of houses at those places caused a hasty exodus of the alarmed inhabitants.

At Christiania, Norway, the disturbance caused considerable alarm, but no damage has been reported.

The shock was also felt at Yekateringburg, Russia.

Pennsylvania Towns Shaken.

Williamsport, Pa., Jan. 11.—A series of shocks, evidently earthquakes, were felt in this section from 4.45 to 5.30 a.m. yesterday.

Buildings shook so that the families were awakened, and rumbling sounds were heard over an area of about 20 miles.

The shocks were felt in the vicinity of Baltimore, Md., but the Washington seismograph made no record of the disturbance.

Eruption In Hawaii.

Honolulu, Jan. 11.—The crater on the summit of the volcano of Mauna Loa broke out Wednesday midnight. The eruption forms a magnificent spectacle, which is visible for 100 miles at sea.

BIG SAVING IN FREIGHT.

Shippers $890,000,000 Better Off In 20 Years Through Lake Navigation.

Detroit, Jan. 11.—In a paper read by Mr. Hodgman, president of the Michigan Engineering Society, Mr. Hodgman said that the sum of $890,000,000 has been saved shippers during the past 20 years as a result of the difference in rates between railroad and lake shipment. Last year alone the saving was nearly $90,000,000.

Since 1823 the United States has spent about $80,000,000 on improvements of the great lakes, on which investment she has enabled her citizens to save nearly $900,000,000.

Canada has in the same time expended $70,000,000 on her waterways, but mostly in the St. Lawrence district. With a 25-foot channel at mean low water from Duluth to Buffalo it might be possible to make lake freight rates as low as those charged to transatlantic lines.

The annual report of President William Livingstone of the Lake Carriers' Association was read yesterday at the convention of the organization.

Heavy Rains Bring Death.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 11.—In precipitation, the storm that has drenched Southern California during the past four days is the heaviest in 18 years. Four lives are known to have been lost from the storm. At Santa Barbara a country bridge over the Santa Ynez River went down, carrying 20 persons into the river. Two were drowned.

Goldfield Strike Settled.

Goldfield, Nev., Jan. 11.—The miners' strike is considered settled. At midnight tellers were still counting the votes, but it was stated that the majority of votes favored accepting the mine operators' proposition of $5 per day for miners and skilled help, with $4.50 for laborers.

Poison in Turkey.

Kingsville, Jan. 11.—County Crown Attorney Rodd and Provincial Detective Mahony are investigating a case of wholesale poisoning of the members of a Christmas party at the home of a prominent resident of this town. It is supposed that the poison was in the turkey. There were no fatalities.

What is to be feared is that the warning sounded by Mr. B. E. Walker, now President of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, may come true. He pointed out to the shareholders of the bank that towards the end of last autumn land in the West became too dry to plow, and that it is predicted by some that the prairie country will have a series of dry seasons. This assertion recalls the warning of Prof. Shortt, of Queen's University, made some years ago. He then remarked that new settlers were taking up lands that had hitherto been considered too arid for agricultural purposes, and that they might be driven off them some day by a return of the cycle of dry years. It is, however, to be remembered that the settled arid lands of the Canadian West constitute a very small fraction of the wide areas under cultivation. And it must be remembered also that the farmers of the Northwest have learned how to cultivate the soil better than during former droughts. Still caution is necessary.

$459,710,000 is the estimate of the New York Journal of Commerce of the losses by fire in the United States during the year 1906; of this amount $280,000,000 is debited to San Francisco. The Journal of Commerce adds, that the average yearly loss by fire in the United States is only $27,655,000; in France it is put at $11,699,000; in Austria at $7,601,000, and in Italy at only $4,112,000. When the amount of these losses are considered people will not wonder at the closing of the doors of some of even strong companies.

"It is noted in Toronto," says a contemporary, "that the increase in the number of branch banks is affecting business between the retailer and the wholesaler. The smaller merchants, it seems, find it more convenient to get accommodation from the local banks than to give notes for the merchandise they buy. The result is said to be that there is more buying for cash, presumably at better prices from the retailer's point of view, and though the gain will be in part offset by the interest paid to the bank, the result is generally regarded as satisfactory and healthy. The bank is a help to sound business wherever it is established." The wholesaler must rejoice at this change in the manner of doing business. He gets his money for the goods and the banks take the risk.

The Montreal Gazette says: "The trade and navigation tables for 1905-6 show that Canadians going to the United States took with them in the twelve months, $1,615,838 worth of household effects. There is still a considerable exodus from Canada to the industrial centres over the border; and there probably always will be."

Our Toronto friends are having no little trouble just now over the proposition of the Grand Trunk Railway's attempt to enter the city via the lake shore, thus destroying lake shore residences of the western residents of the city. Discussing the Beach proposition, the News says that Mayor Coatsworth said: "The latest proposal comes from a railway man. It is to have the Grand Trunk cut down the grade of the present route by at least 100 feet, and have this used by the other roads as well. This, it is said, would be cheaper than going along the beaches." This is no new idea. A layman suggested this mode of getting over the trouble some time ago. Cut down the hill and fill up the marsh at the end of the city is what should be done.

A Boy's Mishap

TYENDINAGA LAD HAD HIS HAND CUT OFF BY A STRAW CUTTER.

Merrill Wright, the 12-year-old son of Mr. W. G. Wright, of Tyendinaga, met with a painful accident on Friday last. While feeding a straw cutter his left hand was drawn into the machine and was cut in several places and practically severed at the wrist. His father, who had been working the machine, had warned the little fellow not to go near it and had just stepped out of the barn for a minute when the accident occurred. Mr. Wright at once started for Roslin with the little boy for a physician but when he arrived there the doctor was away and he had to drive on to Tweed. It was necessary to amputate the hand at the wrist. The unfortunate little boy stood the drive remarkably well and complained only of the tightness of the bandage that was wound around his wrist to stop the bleeding. Mr. Wright, the father of the boy, was for a number of years cheesemaker at Roblin factory and is well known in this vicinity.

FALSE THEORIES.

Lead to Worthless or Harmful Remedies.

Stimulating the scalp may allay the itching of the dandruff, but that does not cure the scalp. The disease won't yield to quinine or capsicum nor alcohol, because it is caused by a germ or parasite. To cure dandruff the germ must be destroyed. Until recently there was no hair preparation or dandruff cure, or hair restorer on the market that would kill that insidious germ that digs up the scalp in little scales called dandruff, and absorbs the vitality of the hair, causing falling hair, and finally baldness. Newbro's Herpicide is the only really scientific preparation to cure dandruff, prevents falling hair and baldness. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Unwise And Improvident Undertaking.

While there is an unanimity of opinion as to the desirability of the Western section of the Grand Trunk Pacific, Liberals as well as Conservatives in the country would like to see the Levis to Moncton project abandoned. The Mail and Empire recently gave the history of the enterprise. It appears that in the year 1900 a company called the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company was chartered to build a road from Levis opposite Quebec, eastward to Moncton. In the following year, 1901, a subsidy of $3,200 a mile was granted to the line.

The distance between Levis and Moncton is said by the surveyors to be 514 miles. The subsidy offered in 1901 was for but a portion of the road. But when the entire road had been subsidized at the same rate, the cost to the country of getting this railway through would have been $1,644,800. In 1903 the Laurier Government got entangled in the Transcontinental scheme, and before it knew what had happened it found itself committed to the building of a railway covering the route which the Quebec and New Brunswick company had been authorized to use. The project, as taken over by the Government, imposed upon the country the responsibility of finding the money for the building of the railway, and then required us to lease the line to the Grand Trunk for ten years without rental. What the cost of the road will be it is impossible to discover. The country is irregular, and the engineering difficulties are in many places unusual. But if the cost be but $40,000 per mile, we shall have to find, in order that the 514 miles may be built, the sum of $20,550,000. The rate of interest upon that money is three per cent., or $616,800 per annum. By leasing the road for ten years free of rental to the Grand Trunk we pay the $616,800 annually for that period out of the taxes. This calls for no less a sum than $16,168,000. If this be added to the principal it will be seen that the line requires an expenditure of $26,728,000 of public money. We are getting for this huge amount the very railway which we could and would have had, if the Government had abstained from interfering, for the subsidy of $1,644,800 to the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway. To put the case in brief: A company offered to build this road for a bonus of $1,644,800 and the Laurier Government rejected the proposition and decided instead to expend $26,728,000 upon the same enterprise. The Intercolonial from Levis to Moncton is 493 miles long. The new road is 514 miles in length. So that we are going to this great expense to get a longer line than that already in existence.

The disappointment of the reasonable Liberals will be experienced also by independent observers, and especially by the tax-paying public. It is purely extravagant and stupid to spend $26,000,000 upon a line to duplicate one we have already have, and upon which we are losing money annually. And it is especially unwise to insist upon doing this in view of the fact that the service we are to get could have been secured for one-sixteenth of the cost.

Married At Lakefield

At Lakefield yesterday, Mr. Albert Wm. Record, a former well-known young man of this city, was married to Miss Laura Gordon. The wedding took place at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Gordon, and was witnessed by a large number of invited guests.

Rev. Mr. Collins, Baptist minister of Lakefield, performed the ceremony The couple were unattended.

The bride received a beautiful array of gifts. Amongst the guests were Mr. and Mrs. James Riggs, of this city.

A Narrow Escape.

Picton Times: Mr. F. E. Jackson had a narrow escape on New Year's Day while crossing the track at Hallowell station. He was driving his roan horse to Wellington to attend the races and did not notice the train coming. The engine struck the horse and threw him about thirty feet into the gutter. He was not hurt seriously but bruised considerably. Mr. Jackson fortunately got off without a scratch.

Operating Rules Of the Railways.

RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS WILL DISCUSS THEM NEXT MONTH,

Ottawa, Jan. 10.—The Railway Commission has consented to the construction of a Canadian Northern Ontario bridge over the Wahnapitae.

The Railway Commissioners will hold a session in Ottawa on Tuesday, February 5, at 11 o'clock, to settle the form or forms of bills of lading and to discuss and decide upon a system of operating rules for the various railways subject to the jurisdiction of the board. The board will also consider at this meeting the petition of the railway trainmen of Ontario, dated the 28th day of April, 1906, and the representations of employees in relation thereto as made before the board on the 15th day of June, 1906.

The board would like also to have consideration given to the following subjects enumerated and to receive information in relation thereto: Railway accidents and precautions for preventing the same; provisions for cleanliness, ventilation and health at passenger stations; supply of equipment and adoption of methods; to insure more prompt and efficient service on railways; car supply for traffic originating on short local lines for carriage for long distances over other lines, mechanical appliances and fire guards for preventing the setting or spreading of fires from locomotive engines, especially on the prairies; equipment of cars carrying lumber and similar commodities and rules regarding the same; width of gates and planking at farm crossings; forms of orders for railway crossings, supply of ice at convenient points for the icing of refrigerator cars for shipment, and provision for re-icing the same in transit for export and to the western provinces; compliance with section 216, requiring the wearing of badges by railway officials; more careful compliance with section 231 of the railway act, respecting notices of delayed trains; compliances with section 215 of the railway act, respecting notices of delayed trains; compliance with section 215 of the railway act, requiring trains to be run according to schedule time; such other subjects connected with the management and operation of railways, as it may then appear to those skilled therein desirable to discuss before the board.

Dr. Oronhyatekha Denies a Tall Story.

An item has lately been going the round of the press that Dr. Oronhyatekha was about to build a $60,000 yacht. The big chief thus wrote to the Picton Times concerning it.

If you do not permit me to correct some of the statements made touching the yacht I am building for myself on Foresters' Island, you will destroy my reputation as an architect and builder. Several years ago I had built on lines drawn by myself a small yacht, which we have been using during the last two years as a sort of a ferry between Foresters' Island and Deseronto.

Marine men who have visited the island have said that the little yacht was a perfect gem. It certainly has been exceedingly useful in keeping the Foresters' Orphans' Home in close touch with Deseronto during navigation and carrying all supplies needed by the Home from the mainland, and I intend making a present of this yacht to the Supreme Court to continue its useful services to the Orphans' Home. With that object in view, I have begun the building of a new yacht for myself.

The first yacht cost me about $2,000, the new yacht, I expect, will cost me about $4,000, or $6,000 for the two, instead of $60,000 for one.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"AROUND THE CLOCK" TO-NIGHT.

When those famous fun makers, the Ritchie London Comedy Company, appear at the Opera House to-night in their latest musical success, "Around the Clock," they will be greeted cordially by the public. Unlike some players who are greeted in this manner at the early stage of their professional labors, they did not presume upon their friendship and settle into a lazy status succeeding seasons, possibly with a deluded notion of larger profits, but instead they have taught the public to regard them as prolific and ardent workers who are always sure to present a programme of novel and individual charm.

"THE VILLAGE PARSON."

"The Village Parson," which comes to the Opera House on Wednesday, Jan. 16th, is a drama strong in human interest. The play is staged in four acts, and is said by all who have witnessed it to be worthy and fitting as a companion play to W. E. Nankeville's immense success, "Human Hearts." "The Village Parson" is replete with real heart interest and genuine comedy so skilfully interwoven that it cannot fail to awaken the most sturdy, but is so cleverly put on and environed with complete special scenic effects as well each scene representing a triumph of artistic skill. The play will be acted by a brilliant cast and a thoroughly successful performance is promised. Plan opens Monday morning.

A Lucky Man.

(The Khan.)

The voting is completed, and I hear you are defeated—
Beaten by the folk who have been
slappin' you,
When you're better of your dizziness you'll get right back to business
And a better stroke of luck couldn't happen you.

Oh, you listened to the babble of the many-headed rabble
When on your noble back they were
slappin' you;
They gave you several cracks where the chicken got the axe,
And a better stroke of luck couldn't
happen you.

Each pocket was a till and you spout
it with a will,
And the rabble all the while were till-tappin' you;
You got it for your deeds where Matilda wears her beads,
And a better stroke of luck couldn't
happen you.

You're not so dreadful gay as you were the other day;
The ballot didn't leave any scrap
in you;
But go to work to-morrow, and you'll forget your sorrow,
And a better stroke of luck couldn't happen you.

An Odd Blunder.

George Eliot, whose knowledge of science is highly commended, in "The Mill on the Floss" makes the odd blunder of having the boat overtaken in midstream by a mass of drift floating at a more rapid rate than the frail craft—a physical impossibility.

Birds and Mosquitoes.

Mosquitoes are more of a pest to birds than to man. The mosquitoes cannot always get at a man, but the birds have no protection from them.

Buried Bottles.

Unique among cemeteries is that of L'Ouedel-Kebir, Algiers, in many of the graves of which are dozens of medicine bottles. The natives of the territory bury with the deceased the bottles which held the medicines used in the last illness.

Transparent Paper.

To make paper transparent saturate it with castor oil and then dry it.

Serpent Fangs.

When a serpent is about to strike an intended victim he raises his head, jaws distended and fangs protruding. With lightning rapidity he directs the fangs to the point of attack. The fangs are hollow muscular tissue growing from two glands placed on either side of the head.

Honors of War.

"Honors of war" is the privilege allowed to the enemy on capitulation of being permitted to retain their arms. This is the highest honor a victor can pay a vanquished foe.

Pimples.

Do not tamper with pimples, but just leave them to the care of this application: Carbolic acid, fifteen drops; borax, sixty grains; glycerin, four fluid drams; tannin, thirty grains; alcohol, one fluid ounce; rose water, two and a half fluid ounces. Mix and dissolve. Apply night and morning.

First Submarine Boat.

Alexander the Great employed the first submarine boat at the siege of Tyre in the year 332 B. C.

Fumigating a Room.

To fumigate, or disinfect, a room place an ordinary house shovel over the fire until it becomes thoroughly heated (not red hot); move to the center of the room with it and pour on it an ounce of No. 4 or No. 5 carbolic acid. The shovel should be so placed that none of the fluid can run off on to the floor. The carbolic will be given off in a vapor which will be strong enough to disinfect a room, and if genuine carbolic is used, which is not a mineral corrosive acid, the vapor will in no way injure pictures, metals or fabrics.

When One Is Nervous.

If you are nervous remember this simple rule: Nothing is so effective as taking a drink of water every hour or two. Medical men declare that we should be helped in various ways if we were more thoughtful and persistent in this respect. It is certainly a simple rule and one that is within reach of the busiest among us.

TIMELY TOPICS.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

(Life.)

I have an ear for music—I can even make a bluff
At listening to Wagner and to other classic stuff,
The harp that once through Tara's halls, the fiddle, fife and drum
Excite a jubilation within my tympanum,
O, yes, my taste is cath'lic, yet I venture to protest Against the sort of melody that's labelled "By Request,"

I'm not averse to opera—I rather like the score
As offered by Herr Conried for the thousandth time or more;
And when the prima donna is sick or on a strike
I worship Fraulein Framsky from Freiburg-on-the-Pike,
But appetite deserts me, and dessert will not digest,
When the band puts by the programme for something "By Request."

To adjust the jaws to ragtime is a feat of which I boast,
I can sip my soup to Sousa, chew "Das Rheingold" with the roast;
An entree with "Aida" it is my delight to munch,
While a liquier with a fargo is a musical free lunch.
Adagio, andante, allegretto — Oui, mais peste!
Ach himmel! Dieu! Sapristi! Police! It's "By Request,"

Last night I had a vision; I had reached the golden shore—
"It would have been a beauteous dream if it had been no more."
I heard the herald angels sing, a harp was in my hand,
Beethoven waved his baton to direct the heavenly band—
When suddenly I shouted, "Am I really damned or blest?"
For there, in flaming letters, burned the legend, "By Request."

No matter. Retribution will o'ertake him, soon or late,
The tables of the table d'hote be turned. Attend his Fate:
In the lowest pit of Limbo he shall call for food and drink,
From a marvel of a menu that would make Lucullus blink.
But for soup they'll serve saltpeter, and the liquor he loves best
Will be ladled out as lava — "By Unanimous Request."

Women in China have the privilege of fighting in the wars. In the rebellion of 1850, 500,000 women from various parts of the country were formed into brigades of 13,000 each, under female officers. Of these soldiers 10,000 were picked women, drilled and garrisoned in the city.

A Western editor has discovered that the best way to keep the boys on the farm is to induce the girls to stay there first. This appears a very simple solution of a problem that has been vexing the minds of our political economists for a number of years.

The Archbishop of Paris and the heads of the various religious orders were not accorded an invitation to the New Year reception of the President of France, a proceeding which has probably no precedent in the history of Republican France. The intention seems to be to make the separation of Church and State complete, even at the expense of courtesy.

12 BODIES RECOVERED.

Thought That Nearly a Score Were Consumed By White Hot Metal That Burst From Furnace.

Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 11.—Partial investigation to ascertain the number of fatalities at the Eliza furnaces of the Jones & Laughlin Steel Co., Limited, Wednesday night, when an accumulation of gas exploded, bursting the base of the large furnace and showering tons of molten metal over about forty men, was completed last night, and shows that the bodies of twelve men, horribly mutilated, have been recovered and from fifteen to twenty men are missing.

It is generally believed the bodies of these were consumed by the white hot metal. Ten men are in hospitals terribly burned. Four of them are expected to die. It is doubtful whether the number of men killed will ever be known.

The condition of the injured is pitiful. A number have their eyes burned out, and others were so badly injured that amputation of limbs was necessary.

Last night Deputy-Coroner Laidley said that one foreigner, apparently a youth, became crazed by his injuries, and before he could be prevented, leaped into a pot of molten metal and was incinerated.

W. L. Jones, vice-president of the company, issued a statement last night, that it has been unable to determine what caused the explosion. A rigid investigation has been instituted, however. The damage will amount to over $50,000.

Coroner Armstrong announced yesterday that he would conduct an investigation into the accident, and if he found that carelessness was responsible prosecution would immediately follow.

Killed By Fire Damp.

Connellsville, Pa., Jan. 11.—Fire, caused by an explosion of gasoline in the mines of the H. C. Frick Coke Co. at McClure station, spread to nearby shafts. Several men overcome by fire damp will die.

Powder Plant Explodes.

Hollidaysburg, Pa., Jan. 11.—The plant and buildings of the Standard Powder Co. of Pittsburg at Horrell station yesterday, were destroyed by an explosion, caused by a fire. No lives were lost. The damage will exceed $100,000. Two houses, a mile distant, were wrecked. The explosion was heard 25 miles away. Five thousand kegs of powder went up in the explosion.

LEG PULLED FROM SOCKET.

Horrible Death of Workman in Pulp and Paper Plant.

Chatham, N. B., Jan. 11.—John Burns, an employe of the Miramichi pulp and paper plant here, met a terrible death yesterday morning.

He was clearing away refuse accumulating near the blow pipe, when a rope attached to one of the grappling hooks he was using became entangled in the shaft and the hook was jerked into his right leg, whirling him around the shaft. As the rope was drawn into the machinery his leg was pulled out of the socket and clean away from the body.

He was alone at the time and no one saw how the accident actually occurred.

Body Strewn Along Track.

Fernie, B. C., Jan. 11.—Wm. K. Thomas, aged 34, a brakeman on the Mine Road train here, was thrown under the cars at the high line switch leading to the slack bins at the coke ovens and instantly killed Wednesday night. The fragments of his body were strewn along the track from the lower end of the switch to the bins at the top.

Amber.

To polish amber rub the amber first with whiting moistened with water, then apply a little olive oil and polish well with a piece of flannel. A good deal of "elbow grease" will be needed in this polish.

A Delicate Compliment.

No more elegant compliment was ever paid to a preacher than that of King Louis XIV. of France to Jean Batiste Massillon, bishop of Clermont. Said he: "I have heard many great preachers, and the effect they produced on me was that I felt thoroughly satisfied with them. Every time I heard you I was dissatisfied with myself."

Strikes.

Strikes occurred centuries ago, and their outcome was just as disastrous as is that of the present day work struggles. In the year 1329 a strike of brassworkers was initiated in Breslau, Silesia, which lasted a year.

Right and Left Sides.

The majority of human beings exercise the right side of the body more constantly than the left, and in consequence it is superior in strength. It would be far better if both sides of the body worked equally, and if the habit of using the left arm and the left leg as readily as the right is formed in childhood the physical strength will not only be equalized, but increased.

Jet.

The derivation of the word jet is quite interesting. It was first found near the river and town of Gagas, in Asia Minor, whence its old French name, gagate, jayet or jaet, which eventually developed into the English jet.

Spiders.

The winter homes of spiders consist of a silken weatherproof covering.

White Pines.

Probably the tallest trees that ever grew in the eastern part of the United States were white pines. There is good authority for putting the height of the finest specimens cut in the forests of Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota at not less than 160 feet and in some cases more than that.

Spinsters in Russia.

In Russia an unmarried woman remains under the absolute sway of her parents until her death, regardless of her age.

Bashi Bazouk.

Bashi bazouk means "hot brained." Their motto is "Kill, kill!" to which they freely add "and rob." Their weapons are the long lance, such as is used by the Cossack; the saber, two or three pistols and as many murderous looking daggers.

Drithel.

A drink called drithel is popular in the north of England. The cotton hands of Manchester and the factory workers get through nearly 10,000,000 pints of this stuff every year. It is made from hops, hemlock root, parsley and clove and is one of the most dangerous liquors ever brewed. The northern counties pay about $75,000 a year for the output of drithel.

Oil in Fish.

White fish is less nutritious than mutton or beef. Salmon is nearly or quite equal to beef in point of nutrition. All fish contain oil largely. In some, as eels and salmon, the oil is distributed throughout the flesh. In others, as the cod, it is almost confined to the liver.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, Jan. 10.—Receipts of live stock at the City Market since last Tuesday, were 115 carloads, composed of 1549 cattle, 1704 hogs, 948 sheep and lambs, with about 100 calves. The quality of fat cattle was not as good all round as the trade requires, too few finished and too many half finished being offered. Trade was good, especially for the best, but if anything the common grades were easier, with a few common lots left unsold at the close of the market.

Exporters.

A few loads of exporters changed hands at $4.60 to $4.95, with some odd prime cattle as high as $5.15; export bulls sold at $3.50 to $4.25.

Butchers.

Prime picked lots of butchers sold at $4.50 to $4.80 per cwt.; loads of good at $4.25 to $4.40; medium, at $3.90 to $4.15; common, at $3.50 to $3.75; cows, at $2.50 to $3.40 per cwt.; canners, $1.25 to $1.75 per cwt.

Feeders and Stockers.

There is little doing in the feeding classes, but a few feeders, 1000 to 1100 lbs. of good quality would sell all right; a few odd steers of this kind sold at $3.75 to $4. A few short-keeps, 1200 lbs. each, sold at $4 to $4.25 per cwt. Common inferior stockers are not wanted.

Milch Cows.

Good to choice milkers and forward springers sold readily at $40 to $[illegible] each, and one extra choice cow sold at $62. Common and inferior cows slow of sale, at $30 to $37½ each.

Veal Calves.

Good quality veal calves are scarce and in strong demand, as there are too many skim milk fed vealers being offered. Prices ranged from $3.50 to $6.50 with a prime new milk fed calf worth $7 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

The run being light caused a strong market. Export ewes sold at $4.50 to $5 per cwt.; culls and rams, at $3 to $4 per cwt.; lambs sold at $6.25 to $6.85 per cwt. for choice quality lambs for export; common to good lambs, at $5 to $6 per cwt.

Hogs.

Receipts of 1700 were bought by Mr. Harris at another advance of 10c per cwt. Selects sold at $6.75; lights and fats, at $6.50 per cwt., all fed and watered.

thing with Baker. I told him his orders were to try and reach Antioch with the relief train, but he said he didn't care who gave the order, he wasn't going to risk his life."

But Dan had lost interest in Baker.

"Look here," he cried. "You must get a fireman for me, and I'll take out the train myself."

He wondered why he had not thought of this before.

"I guess I'll manage to reach Antioch," he added as he ran across to the siding and swung himself into the cab.

A faded blue blouse and a pair of greasy overalls were lying on the seat in the cab. He removed his coat and vest and put them on. Durks, who had followed him, climbed up on the steps.

"You'll have to run slow, Mr. Oakley, because it's likely the heat has spread the rails, if it ain't twisted them loose from the ties," he volunteered. For answer Oakley thrust a shovel into his hands.

"Here, throw in some coal," he ordered, opening the furnace door.

Durks turned a sickly, mottled white.

"I can't leave," he gasped.

"You idiot. You don't suppose I'd take you from your post. What I want you to do is to help me get up steam."

The operator attacked the coal on the tender vigorously. He felt an immense sense of comfort.

Dan's railroad experience covered nearly every branch. So it chanced that he had fired for a year prior to taking an office position. Indeed, his first ambition had been to be an engineer. It was now quite dark, and, the fires being raked down, he lit a torch and inspected his engine with a comprehensive eye. Next he probed a two foot oiler into the rods and bearings and filled the cups. He found a certain pleasure in the fact that the lore of the craft to which he had once aspired was still fresh in his mind.

"Baker keeps her in apple pie order, Joe," he observed approvingly. The operator nodded.

"He's always tinkering."

"Well, he's done tinkering for us unless I land in a ditch tonight, with the tender on top of me."

A purring sound issued from the squat throat of the engine. It was sending aloft wreaths of light gray smoke and softly spitting redhot cinders.

Dan climbed upon the tender and inspected the tank. Last of all he went forward and lit the headlight, and his preparations were complete. He jumped down from the cab and stood beside Joe on the platform.

"Now," he said cheerfully, "where's that fireman, Joe?"

"He's gone home, Mr. Oakley. He lives at Carson, too, same as Baker," faltered the operator.

"Then there's another man whose services we won't require in future. We'll have to find some one else."

"I don't think you can," ventured Durks reluctantly. Instinct told him that this opinion would not tend to increase his popularity with Oakley.

"Why not?"

"They just won't want to go."

"Do you mean to tell me that they will allow Antioch to burn and not lift a hand to save the town?" he demanded sternly.

He couldn't believe it.

"Well, you see, there won't any one here want to get killed, and they will think they got enough trouble of their own to keep them home."

"We can go uptown and see if we can't find a man who thinks of more than his own skin," said Dan.

"Oh, yes; we can try!" agreed Durks apathetically, but his tone implied an unshaken conviction that the search would prove a fruitless one.

"Can't you think of any one who would like to make the trip?" Durks was thoughtful. He thanked his lucky stars that the M. and W. paid half his salary. At last he said:

"No, I can't, Mr. Oakley."

There was a sound like the crunching of cinders underfoot on the other side of the freight car near where they were standing, but neither Durks nor Oakley heard it. The operator's jaws worked steadily in quiet animal enjoyment of their task. He was still canvassing the Junction's adult male population for the individual to whom life had become sufficiently burdensome for Oakley's purpose. Dan was gazing down the track at the red blur in the sky. Back of that ruddy glow, in the path of the flames, lay Antioch. The wind was in the north. He was thinking, as he had many times in the last hour, of Constance and the Emorys. In the face of the danger that threatened he even had a friendly feeling for the rest of Antioch. It had been decent and kindly in its fashion until Ryder set to work to ruin him.

He knew he might ride into Antioch on his engine none the worse for the trip, except for a few burns, but there was the possibility of a more tragic ending. Still, whatever the result, he would have done his full part.

He faced Durks again.

"Any man who knows enough to shovel coal will do," he said.

"But no one will want to take such long chances, Mr. Oakley. Baker said it was just plain suicide."

Dan swore like a brakeman out of temper in the bad, thoughtless manner of his youth.

At the same moment a heavy, slouching figure emerged from the shadow at the opposite end of the freight car and came hesitatingly toward the two men. Then a voice said in gentle admonition:

"Don't swear so, Dannie. It ain't right. I'll go with you."

It was his father.

CHAPTER XXII.

ANTIOCH had grown indifferent to forest fires. They were of almost annual recurrence, and the town had come to expect them each fall. As the Hon. Jeb Barrows remarked with cheerful optimism, voicing a popular belief, if it was intended Antioch should go that way it would have gone long ago.

But this summer the drought had been of longer duration than usual. The woods were like tinder, and the inevitable wadding from some careless hunter's gun or the scattered embers from some campfire far up in the northern part of the state had started a conflagration that was licking up miles of timber and moving steadily south behind a vast curtain of smoke that darkened half the state. It was only when the burned out settlers from the north began to straggle in that Antioch awoke to a proper sense of its danger.

It was then that Antioch sent out its first call for help. It needed fire engines and hose, and it needed them badly, especially the hose, for the little reservoir from which the town drew its water supply was almost empty.

Antioch forgot the murder of Ryder. It forgot Roger Oakley, the strike and all lesser affairs. A common danger threatened its homes, perhaps the lives of its citizens.

A score of angry men were stamping up and down the long platform across from the shops or pushing in and out of the ugly little depot, which had taken on years in apparent age and decay in the two days during which no trains had been running.

They were abusing Holt, the railroad and every one connected with it. For the thousandth time they demanded to know where the promised relief train was—if it had started from Buckhorn Junction, and, if it hadn't started, the reason of the delay.

The harried assistant treasurer answered these questions as best he could.

"Are you going to let the town burn without making a move to save it?" demanded an excited citizen.

"You don't think I am any more anxious to see it go than you are?" retorted Holt angrily.

"Then why don't your road do something to prevent it?"

"The road's doing all it can, gentlemen."

"That's a whole lot, ain't it?"

"We are cut off," said Holt helplessly. "Everything is tied up tight."

"You can wire, can't you?"

"Yes, I can wire; I have wired."

"Well, where's the relief train, then?"

"It's at the Junction."

"It's going to do us a lot of good there, aint it?"

"They'll send it as soon as they can get together a crew."

"Stir them up again, Holt. Tell 'em we got to have that hose and those engines or the town's gone. It's a matter of life and death."

"Don't swear so, Dannie. It ain't right. I'll go with you."

When you want BLACK silk, you don't say "a spool of silk." When you want Windsor Table Salt, say so—"WINDSOR."

Holt turned back into the depot, and the crowd dispersed.

In the ticket office he found McClintock, who had just come in from uptown. The master mechanic's face was unusually grave.

"I have been investigating the water supply with the city engineer. Things are in awful shape. The mains are about empty, and there isn't pressure enough from the standpipe to throw a thirty-five foot stream."

"I wish Oakley was here," muttered Holt.

"So do I. Somehow he had a knack at keeping things moving. I don't mean but what you've done your level best, Byron," he added kindly.

"They've laid down on me at the Junction," said the younger man bitterly.

He stepped to the door, mopping his face with his handkerchief, and stood looking down the track in the direction of Buckhorn.

"They made it so Oakley couldn't stay, and now they wonder why the relief train is hung up. All Durks says is that he can't get a crew. I tell you if Oakley was here he'd have to get one."

"It was a mistake to send the yard engine up to Parker's Run. If we had it here now"—

"How was I to know we'd need it? I had to try to save those ties, and we thought the wind was shifting into the south," in fierce justification of his course.

"That's so, all right," said McClintock. "We did think the danger was past. Only we shouldn't have taken any chances."

At this point they were joined by Dr. Emory.

"Anything new from Buckhorn?" he inquired anxiously.

"No; it's the same old story. Durks ain't got anybody to send."

The doctor, like Holt, fell to mopping his face with his handkerchief.

"Don't he know our danger? Don't he know we can't fight the fire without engines and hose—that our water supply is about exhausted and that we'll have to depend on the river?"

Holt nodded wearily.

"It looks as though we were to be left to face this situation as best we can, without help from the outside," said the doctor uneasily.

Holt turned to McClintock.

"Isn't there some method of back firing?"

"It's too late to try that, and, with this wind blowing, it would have been too big a risk."

He glanced moodily across the town to the north, where the black cloud hung low in the sky. He added:

"I have told my wife to keep the young ones in, no matter what happens, but, Lord, they will be about as well off one place as another when it comes to the pinch."

"I suppose so," agreed the doctor. "I am at a loss to know what precautions to take to insure the safety of Mrs. Emory and my daughter."

It was only 4 o'clock, but it was already quite dark in the town, a strange half light that twisted the accustomed shape of things. The air was close, stifling, and the wind, which blew in heavy gusts, was like the breath from a furnace. The somber twilight carried with it a horrible sense of depression. Every sound in nature was stilled. Silence reigned supreme. It was the expectant hush of each living thing.

The three men stepped out on the platform. Holt and the doctor were still mopping their faces with their limp handkerchiefs. McClintock was fanning himself with his straw hat. When they spoke they unconsciously dropped their voices to a whisper.

"Those families in the north end should move out of their homes," said the doctor. "If they wait until the fire gets here they will save nothing but what they have on their backs."

"Yes, and the houses ought to come down," added McClintock. "There's where the fire will get its first grip on the town, and then heaven help us!"

Night came, and so imminent seemed the danger that Antioch was roused to something like activity.

A crowd composed almost exclusively of men gathered early on the square before the courthouse.

They had by common consent given up all hope that the relief train would be sent from Buckhorn Junction. The light in the sky told them that they were completely cut off from the outside world. The town and the woods immediately adjacent formed an island in the center of an unbroken sea of fire. The ragged red line had crept around to the east, west and south, but the principal danger would be from the north, where the wind drove the flames forward with resistless fury. To the south and east Billup's Fork interposed as a barrier to the progress of the fire, and on the west was a wide area of cultivated fields.

At regular intervals waves of light flooded the square as the freshening gusts fanned the conflagration or whirled across the town great patches of black smoke. In the intervals of light a number of dark figures could be seen moving about on the roof of the courthouse. Like the square below, it was crowded with anxious watchers.

The crowd jostled to and fro on the square, restless and excited and incapable of physical quiet. Then suddenly a voice was raised and made itself heard above the tramp of feet.

"Those houses in the north end must come down!" this voice said.

There was silence and then a many tongued murmur. Each man present knew that the residents of the north end had sworn that they would not sacrifice their homes to the public good. If their homes must go they much preferred to have them burn, for then the insurance companies would have to bear the loss.

"Those houses must come down!" the voice repeated.

It was McClintock who had spoken.

"Who's going to pull them down?" another voice asked. "They are ready to fight for them."

"And we ought to be just as ready to fight if it comes to that," answered the master mechanic. "It's for the common good."

The crowd was seized with a noisy agitation. Its pent up feelings found vent in bitter denunciation of the north end. A man—it was the Hon. Jeb Barrows—had mounted the courthouse steps and was vainly endeavoring to make himself heard. He was counseling delay, but no one listened to him. The houses must be torn down whether their owners wanted it or not. McClintock turned up the street.

"Fall in!" he shouted, and at least a hundred men fell in behind him, marching two abreast. Here and there as they moved along a man would forsake the line to disappear into his own gate. When he rejoined his neighbors he invariably carried an ax, pick or crowbar.

From the square they turned into Main street and from Main street into the north road, and presently the head of the procession halted before a cluster of small frame houses resting in a hollow to their right.

"These must come down first," said McClintock. "Now, we want no noise, men. We'll pass out their stuff quietly as we can and take it back to the square."

He swung open a gate as he spoke. "Williams keeps a team. A couple of you fellows run around to the barn and hook up."

Just then the front door opened, and Williams himself appeared on the threshold. A dog barked, other doors opened, lights gleamed in a score of windows, and the north end threw off its cloak of silence and darkness.

"Keep quiet and let me do the talking," said McClintock over his shoulder. Then to the figure in the doorway:

"We have come to help you move, John. I take it you will be wanting to leave here shortly. We'll give you a hand." And the master mechanic pushed through the gate and took a step down the path.

He presented the muzzle of a shotgun.

"Hold on!" cried Williams, swinging out an arm. "I got something to say about that?"

There was a sound as of the clicking of a lock, and he presented the muzzle of a shotgun.

"Oh, say," said McClintock gently, "you had better not try to use that! It will only make matters worse. Your house has got to come down. We got to save what we can of the town."

Williams made no answer to this, but McClintock saw him draw the butt of the gun up toward his shoulder.

The men at his back were perfectly still. They filled the street and, breathing hard, pressed heavily against the picket fence, which bent beneath the weight of their bodies.

"You'd better be reasonable. We are losing precious time," urged McClintock. "In an hour or two this place will be on fire."

"I've got no kick coming if it burns, but it shan't be pulled down."

"Put up your gun, and we'll give you a lift at getting your stuff out."

"No, you won't."

McClintock kept his eyes on the muzzle of the shotgun.

"It ain't the property loss we are thinking of—it's the possible loss of life," he said mildly.

"I'll chance it," retorted Williams briefly.

"Well, we won't."

Williams made no reply. He merely fingered the lock of his gun.

"Put down that gun, John!" commanded McClintock sternly.

At the same moment he reached around and took an ax from the hands of the nearest man.

"Put it down," he repeated as he stepped quickly toward Williams.

The listening men pressed heavily against the fence in their feverish anxiety to miss nothing that was said or done. The posts snapped, and they poured precipitously into the yard. At the same moment the gun exploded, and a charge of buckshot rattled harmlessly along the pavement at McClintock's feet.

Then succeeded a sudden pause, deep, breathless and intense, and then the crowd gave a cry—a cry that was in answer to a hoarse cheer that had reached them from the square.

An instant later the trampled front yard was deserted by all save Williams in the doorway. He still held the smoking gun to his shoulder.

CHAPTER XXIII.

WHEN Roger Oakley appeared on the platform at Buckhorn Junction Durks started violently, while Dan took a quick step forward and placed a warning hand on the old convict's arm. He feared what he might say. Then he said to the operator: "He'll do. Go see if you can get Antioch. Try just once more. If you succeed tell them the engines and hose will be there within an hour or they need not look for them. Do you understand?"

"All right, Mr. Oakley." And Durks moved up the platform with alacrity. He was relieved of one irksome responsibility. He had his own theories as to who the stranger was, but he told himself it was none of his business.

As soon as he was out of hearing Dan turned to his father and said earnestly:

"Look here, daddy, I can't allow you to do it. We are neither of us popular. It's bad enough for me to have to go."

"Why can't you allow it, Dannie?" And his son recognized the same cheerful tone with which he had always met and overruled his objections.

"It will end in your arrest, and we don't want that."

"It's more than likely I'll be arrested sooner or later, anyhow," he said, with a suggestion of weariness, as if this were a matter it was a waste of time to consider. "The Lord has set his face against me. It's his wish I should return. I've been stubborn and headstrong and wouldn't see it, but look there." And he nodded toward the red western sky. "It's a summons. I got to obey whether I want to or not."

"It won't be safe. No telling what they will do with you."

"That ain't the question, Dannie; that ain't at all the question. It's not what they'll do to me." And he softly patted the hand that rested on his arm.

Dan saw that his clothes hung loosely to his mighty frame. They were torn and stained. He had the appearance of a man who had endured hardship, privation and toil. His glance was fugitive and anxious. "Where have you been all this while?" he asked. "Not here?"

"No; I have been living in the woods, trying to escape from the country, and the fires wouldn't let me. Wherever I went they were there ahead of me, driving me back."

"Why did you kill him? How did it happen?" Dan added. "Or is it all a mistake? Did you do it?"

The smile faded from the old convict's lips.

"It was a sort of accident, and it was sort of carelessness, Dannie," he explained, with a touch of sullenness. "I hit him—not hard, mind you. I know I shouldn't have done it, but he was in the wrong, and he wouldn't listen to reason. I don't know when I ever seen a man so set in his wickedness."

"And now you want to go back. Do you know what it means if you are arrested? Have you thought of that?"

Roger Oakley waved the query aside as though it concerned him not at all.

"I want to be with you," he said wistfully. "You may not get through alive, and I want to be with you. You'll need me. There's no one you can trust as you can me, for I won't fail you no matter what the danger is. And there's the girl, Dannie. Have you thought of her?"

Dan set his lips. "My God, I can't think of anything else."

There was a moment's silence.

"Here," said Dan, thrusting his hands into his pockets. "I am going to give you what money I have. It isn't much."

"What for, Dannie?"

"You are sure to be seen and recognized if you stay about here. Your description has been telegraphed all over the state. For that reason I'll take you with me part way. Then I'll slow up, and you can hide again. It's your only chance. I am sorry I can't do more for you. I wish I could. But perhaps we can arrange to meet afterward."

His father smiled with the unconscious superiority of the man who firmly believes he is controlled by an intelligence infinitely wise and beyond all human conception. No amount of argument could have convinced him that Providence was not burning millions of feet of standing timber and an occasional town solely for his guidance. In his simple seriousness he saw nothing absurd or preposterous in the idea. He said:

"I've wanted to escape, Dannie, for your sake, not for mine. But when I seen you tonight I knew the Lord intended we should keep together. He didn't bring us here for nothing. That ain't his way. There's no one to go with you but me, and you can't go alone."

"I can—I will!" And Dan swore under his breath. He realized that no word of his could move his father. He would carry his point, just as he always had.

Durks came running along the platform from the depot.

"It's no use," shaking his head. "The wire's down. Say, you want to keep your eyes open for the freight. It may be on the siding at Parker's Run, and it may be on the main track."

Dan made a last appeal to his father.

"Won't you listen to what I say?" sinking his voice to a hoarse whisper. "They'll hang you—do you hear? If ever they lay hands on you they will show no mercy!" It did not occur to him that his father would be returning under circumstances so exceptional that public sentiment might well undergo a radical change in his favor.

Roger Oakley merely smiled as he answered, with gentle composure: "I don't think we need to worry about that. We are in his hands, Dannie." And he raised his face to the heavens.

Dan groaned.

"Come, then," he said aloud.

"I'll throw the switch for you!" And the operator ran down the track. He was quite positive he should never see Oakley again, and he felt something akin to enthusiasm at the willing sacrifice of his life which he conceived him to be making.

Father and son stepped to the engine. The old convict mounted heavily to his post, and Dan sprang after him, his hand groping for the throttle lever. There was the hiss of steam, and Joe cried from the darkness:

"All right, come ahead!" And the engine, with its tender and two cars, began its hazardous journey.

As they slipped past him the operator yelled his goodby and Dan pushed open the cab window and waved his hand.

Roger Oakley on the narrow iron shelf between the engine and the tender was already throwing coal into the furnace. His face wore a satisfied expression. Apparently he was utterly unmoved by the excitement of the moment, for he bent to his work as if it were the most usual of tasks and the occasion the most commonplace. He had taken off his coat and vest and had tossed them up on the tender out of his way. Dan, looking over the boiler's end, could see his broad shoulders and the top of his head. He leaned back, with his hand on the throttle.

"Father!" he called.

The old convict straightened up instantly.

"Yes, Dannie."

"You are going with me? You are determined?"

"I thought we settled that, Dannie, before we started," he said pleasantly, but there was a shrewd, kindly droop to the corners of his mouth, for he appreciated his victory.

"I want to know, because if I am to slow up for you I'll have to do it soon or I'll be leaving you in worse shape than I found you."

To this his father made no direct reply. Instead he asked, "Do you think we'll reach Antioch in time to do them any good?" Dan faced about.

They slid into a straight stretch of road beyond the Junction, and the track shone yellow far ahead, where the engine looked down upon it with its single eye. Each minute their speed increased. A steady jarring and pounding had begun that grew into a dull and ponderous roar as the engine rushed forward. Dan kept a sharp watch for the freight.

As Durks had said, it might be on the siding at Parker's Run, and it might not. In the latter event his and his father's troubles would soon be at an end.

He rose from his seat and went to the door of the cab.

"We'll take it easy for the first ten miles or so, then we'll be in the fire, and that will be our time to hit her up."

Roger Oakley nodded his acquiescence. In what he conceived to be worldly matters he was quite willing to abide by Dan's judgment, for which he had profound respect.

"How fast are we going?" he asked. Dan steadied himself and listened, with a finger on his pulse, until he caught the rhythmic swing of the engine as it jarred from one rail to another. Then he said:

"Twenty-five miles an hour."

"It ain't very fast, is it, Dannie?"

He was evidently disappointed.

"We'll do twice that presently."

The old convict looked relieved. They were running now with a strip of forest on one side of the track and cultivated fields on the other, but with each rod they covered they were edging in nearer the flames. At Parker's Run the road crossed a little stream which doubled back in the direction of Buckhorn Junction. There was nothing after that to stay the progress of the fire, and the rest of their way lay through the blazing pine woods.

Just before they reached the ten mile fill they came to the strip of burned timber that had sent Baker back to Buckhorn earlier in the day. Here and there a tree was still blazing, but for the most part the fire had spent its strength.

As they swung past Parker's Run a little farther on Dan saw the freight, or, rather, what was left of it, on the siding. It had been cutting out four flat cars loaded with ties, and he understood the difficulty at a glance. On the main track a brick and stone culvert spanned the run, but the siding crossed it on a flimsy wooden bridge. This bridge had probably been burning as the freight backed in for the flat cars, and when it attempted to pull out the weakened structure had collapsed and the engine had gone through into the cut. It rested on its forward end, jammed between the steep banks, with its big drivers in the air. Of the cars there remained only the trucks and ironwork. Near by a tool shed had formerly stood, but that was gone too. The wheels and gearing of a hand car in the midst of a heap of ashes marked the spot.

Dan turned to his father. "Are you all right, daddy?" he asked.

"Yes, Dannie."

"Mind your footing. It will be pretty shaky back there."

They were still in the burned district, where a change in the wind that afternoon had driven the fire back on itself. It had made a clean sweep of everything inflammable. Luckily the road had been freshly ballasted, and the track was in fair condition to resist the flames. But an occasional tie smoldered, and from these the rushing train thrashed showers of sparks.

Dan kept his eyes fastened on the rails, which showed plainly in the jerky glare of the headlight. It was well to be careful while care was possible. By and by he would have to throw aside all caution and trust to chance. Now he increased his speed, and the insistent thud of the wheels drowned every other sound, even the faroff roar of the flames. At his back at intervals a ruddy glow shot upward into the night when Roger Oakley threw open the furnace door to pass in coal. Save for this it was still quite dark in the cab, where Dan sat with his hand on the throttle lever and watched the yellow streak that ran along the rails in advance of the engine. Suddenly the wall of light ahead brightened visibly, and its glare filled the cab. They were nearing the fire.

Dan jammed the little window at his elbow open and put out his head. A hot blast roared past him, and the heat of the fire was in his face. He drew the window shut. It was light as day in the cab now.

He leaned across the boiler's end and, with a hand to his lips, called to his father, "Are you all right?"

The old man drew himself erect and crept nearer.

"What's that you say, Dannie?" he asked. His face was black with coal dust and grime.

"Are you all right? Can you bear the heat?"

"I am doing very nicely, but this ain't a patch on what it's going to be."

"Yes, it will be much worse, though this is bad enough."

"But we can stand it. We must think of those poor people at Antioch."

"We'll stick to the engine as long as the engine sticks to the rails," said Dan grimly. "Hadn't you better come into the cab with me? You'll be frightfully exposed when we get into the thick of it."

"Not yet, Dannie? I'll give you steam, and you drive her as hard as you can."

He turned away, shovel in hand.

Then, all in a second, and they were in the burning woods, rushing beneath trees that were blazing to their very summits. The track seemed to shake and tremble in the fierce light and fiercer heat. Burning leaves and branches were caught up to be whirled in fiery eddies back down the rails as the train tore along, for Dan was hitting her up.

Tongues of fire struck across at the two men. Smoke and fine white ashes filled their mouths and nostrils. Their bodies seemed to bake. They had been streaming wet with perspiration a moment before.

Off in the forest it was possible to see for miles. Every tree and bush stood forth distinct and separate.

Roger Oakley put down his shovel for an instant to fill a bucket with water from the tank on the tender. He plunged his head and arms in it and splashed the rest over his clothes. Dan turned to him for the last time.

"It isn't far now," he panted. "Just around the next curve and we'll see the town if it's still there off in the valley."

The old convict did not catch more than the half of what he said, but he smiled and nodded his head.

As they swung around the curve a dead sycamore which the fire had girdled at the base crashed across the track. The engine plunged into its top, rolled it over once and tossed it aside. There was the smashing of glass and the ripping of leather as the sycamore's limbs raked the cab, and Roger Oakley uttered a hoarse cry—a cry Dan did not hear, but he turned, spitting dust and cinders from his lips, and saw the old convict still standing, shovel in hand, in the narrow gangway that separated the engine and tender.

He had set the whistle shrieking, and it cut high above the roar of the flames, for off in the distance under a canopy of smoke he saw the lights of Antioch shining among the trees.

Two minutes later and they were running smoothly through the yards, with the brakes on and the hiss of escaping steam. As they slowed up beside the depot Dan sank down on the seat in the cab limp and exhausted. He was vaguely conscious that the platform was crowded with people and that they were yelling at him excitedly and waving their hats, but he heard their cries only indifferently well. His ears were dead to everything except the noise of his engine, which still echoed in his tired brain.

Dan turned, spitting dust and cinders from his lips.

He staggered to his feet and was about to descend from the cab when he saw that his father was lying face down on the iron shelf between the engine and tender. He stooped and raised him gently in his arms.

The old convict opened his eyes and looked up into his face, his lips parted as if he were about to speak, but no sound came from them.

To be continued.

BLOOD POISON KILLED HIM

Frederick Bolton, a Lockport man was struck on the arm by a Plymouth rock rooster, and neglected the wound. Blood poison set in and he died within a week. The air is full of disease germs and poisonous microbes and no open sore, no cut, no cold-crack is safe if neglected. Just think! A box of Zam-Buk might have saved Bolton's life. Zam-Buk's germ killing power has been proved to be greater than that of crude carbolic acid. Just imagine such power! Yet Zam-Buk is painless. Applied to a wound or sore it first kills all germs and prevents blood poison suppuration and festering. Then its healing power comes into operation and it builds up new, healthy tissue. Whether on cuts and wounds, or on ulcers or diseased sores, such as eczema, etc., just as effective. Healing, soothing and antiseptic, all in one.

ZAM-BUK CURES BLOOD POISON.

Even when blood poison has already set in, Zam-Buk is still just as effective. Miss Saddington, of Huntsville (Ont.), says: "I had a scalded arm, which 'went the wrong way,' and began to swell very badly. The pain from it was terrible, and when I went to the doctor he said it was blood poison. For ten months I was very bad with it. I tried all sorts of remedies, but could not get ease, to say nothing of cure. One day in the house of a friend, Zam-Buk was recommended to me. On my friend's recommendation I applied some Zam-Buk that same night, but it was more to please her than because I had much faith in it. To my intense surprise, when I awakened next morning my arm was much better. I thereupon obtained a supply of Zam-Buk, and continued with the treatment regularly. In three weeks the arm was quite well; and I have never felt any trace of pain from it since. It is now some months since it was cured, so that it is evident the cure is permanent.

Since that time my friend's husband cut his arm. This wound also turned to blood poison. Zam-Buk was applied and in his case also it worked a complete cure. It is without doubt a marvellous balm."

WHAT ZAM-BUK REALLY IS.

Zam-Buk is a marvel of healing and antiseptic herbal combinations. It represents the "last thing" in medical science as applied to the human skin. It is so powerful that the hard skin of the workman is healed by it, and yet the soft, tender, delicate skin of young babies benefits from its application. It is entirely herbal, contains no animal fat, no mineral coloring.

WHAT IT CURES.

Zam-Buk cures eczema, scalp sores, itch, ringworms, rashes, ulcers, abscesses, chronic sores, festering or open wounds, cuts, burns, scalds, bruises. It heals chapped hands and cold sores; used as an embrocation it relieves tightness in the chest in cases of cold and also rheumatism, sciatica, neuralgia, etc.

Obtainable from all druggists at 50c a box, or post free from The Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. 6 boxes for $2.50.

NOTICE:

DR. PERRY GOLDSMITH, 84 Carlton St., Toronto, will be at his former office, 55 Campbell St., Belleville, every Saturday, for consultation, Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat cases.

The worst of all faults is never to see any of your own.

NURSERY NOTES.

Feeding children between meals is a poor practice and should not be permitted at home or away from home.

Wind on the stomach will be relieved if the child is placed on its back and the stomach kneaded with the hand as you would knead bread, but with less force.

A child's bed should be placed out of a direct draft and where the morning sun will not shine into the child's eyes and awaken it before the proper time.

When bathing baby place the bath on a box or stool instead of on the floor. You will then be able to sit down while bathing the little one and will find it far more comfortable and less tiring.

Keep in your nursery bedrooms one or two strong sacks about three and a half feet in depth and one and a half in diameter, held open at the top by a thick wooden hoop and having a very long strong rope attached. In case of fire the children may be let down in safety.

House Furnishing.

The woman who is moving into a new house will do well not to furnish it completely all at once or before she has lived in it for awhile. Let her first place such of her old furniture as she wishes to keep; then from time to time a new chair or another table can be added to fill some vacant corner. Or it is better to let the corner remain bare until she runs across something which will exactly suit the space to be filled. It is far preferable to buy furniture to suit the apartment than to select a house to fit the furniture, when it can be done, and, on the other hand, many a woman has spoiled the interior of her library in hurrying to a shop to purchase something chosen for the number of square feet which it contains rather than for the suitability or beauty of the object itself.

Curtains.

Very attractive curtains may be made that are not forever in need of the washtub and stretching poles, as are those of muslin and lace. Buy a thin grade of glasscloth for about 25 cents a yard. Cut it to hang straight from the top of the window on each side, with a deep hem at the bottom. Then make a stenciled border across the bottom or reaching one-half way up the curtain of a simple design. Apply the color over the design with navy blue diamond dye. Do not trouble yourself to hold it. Simply mix a spoonful of the dye with water. These curtains will not wash, but they remain clean for a considerable time and may be easily shaken to free them from dust and pressed with an iron.

Lady Finger Potatoes.

One of the best ways of serving potatoes is in the shape of "lady fingers." Take medium sized potatoes, pare, cut lengthwise three or four times, then slice these lengthwise, making them about the width and thickness of a little finger. Fry these brown and crisp in deep hot fat same as for Saratoga chips. You will find them delicious if served hot soon as fried and salted.

Loaded For Hawks

By C. B. LEWIS

Copyright, 1906, by C. H. Sutcliffe

There was a great clattering and outcry among the fowls back of the farmhouse, with one long piercing shriek from a single hen, and Aunt Sally Warner dropped the breakfast dish she was wiping and ran out to see a hawk sailing away with a fat pullet in his talons. She waved her hands and cried "Shoo! Shoo!" but there was no salvation for the victim.

"What is it, aunty?" asked her niece, Miss Nettie Ward, from the city, who had come out to the old farm for a vacation.

"Why, another of them hawks has grabbed another of them chickens," was the reply. "I told pa only last night that he ought to git out and load the shotgun for me. I s'pose that hawks have got as much right to live as other folks, but I'll be snummed if"—

"But he did load the gun, and it's there behind the door," interrupted the niece.

"So it is! What an old goose I am getting to be! Nettie, did you ever fire a gun?"

"Never."

"Then I must show you how to do it. You take it in both hands this way. You draw it up to your shoulder this way. Then you shet your eyes and pull on the trigger with your finger, and the hawk drops dead. A hawk may come while I'm down cellar or upstairs and you are out here alone, and you want to be able to shoot him."

There were only uncle, aunt and Nettie at the farm, and the girl from the city soon wore off the newness and the novelty and became a bit lonesome. On account of this lonesomeness she almost bowed to a young man who passed the gate one evening at dusk and almost bowed to her, and when she went in she asked her aunt who it was.

"I hain't seen no strange young men around here myself," was the answer, "but I understand that the Stevenses, half a mile below us, have got a summer boarder. I guess he's the one you saw."

Things happen suddenly out in the country the same as in the city. Two days after seeing the young man Miss Nettie woke up with the toothache.

She had hardly come downstairs and told of it when the rural mail carrier left a letter for the aunt, which stated that a sister living ten miles away was ill and wanted her to drive over at once. She couldn't drive, and so Uncle Joe must go along. There was room for Nettie to go along, but the toothache kept getting worse. It didn't take her long to decide to stay home and doctor it. She could put on a bag of hot ashes, hold hot vinegar in her mouth and now and then press a wad of cotton batting wet with peppermint essence against the offending molar, and there was hope that she would be all right before night came.

During the long day, if the ache permitted, she could swing in her hammock, climb the cherry tree after the ripe fruit, hunt for hens' eggs in the barn and watch the ducks and goslings in the horse pond.

"There is only two things to look out for," said the aunt when she was ready to drive away. "Keep your eyes out for hawks and tramps. As we haven't seen a tramp for six weeks, I guess you won't be bothered, but them hawks are liable to drop down any time. If one comes, you be sure to shoot it. I've heard that shooting a gun has been known to cure the toothache."

Uncle and aunt had been gone an hour when the toothache ceased, and Miss Nettie piled into her hammock under the pear tree with a book. She was just opposite the kitchen door and only thirty feet away, and just inside the door stood the shotgun. The maid had great confidence that if hawk or tramp came along she would play the part of a heroine.

At 11 o'clock, when the young man who boarded down at Stevens' came past the house with his kodak, he was satisfied from the swinging of the hammock that Mrs. Nettie was reading.

Two hours later, when he had snapshotted an old lop horned cow, a crab apple tree and a brook that seemed to be flowing up hill, he returned to find the hammock so still that there was no doubt in his mind that the occupant was asleep. He had not past the house, walking as slowly as possible, when he caught sight of half the body of a man in an open window on the other side. Whoever it was had come sneaking down through the cornfield.

It was up to the young man to investigate. He started out with the impression that the intruder was a tramp, and he picked up a club, scaled the picket fence and gave a shout. The man in the window heard and drew back. He saw and dropped to the ground and ran around the corner of the house. He ran into the hammock and its sleeping occupant and fell over them and bounced said sleeping occupant out on the grass.

At about the same moment the young man from Stevens', who had started to pursue the unknown, caught his foot and took a roll, and he was so slow in picking the currant bushes out of his curly hair when he did get up that he turned the corner just as the bewildered Nettie had dashed into the kitchen, seized the gun and was ready for hawks.

She had been rudely awakened, more rudely dumped on the grass and stepped on, and in her half awake state she didn't know a hawk from a man until it was too late.

In a cool moment she never could have mastered the mechanism of that old shotgun. Under the momentary excitement she not only fired it, but sent a liberal quantity of bird shot into some one's legs.

She had only heard the report of the gun when she became panic stricken and fled into the kitchen and shut and bolted the door, and for the next three or four minutes she was in a half faint. Then she realized that she had shot a man. She remembered that he had cried out; she remembered that he had fallen on the grass. She wasn't overcome with horror at the thought. On the contrary, she had shot a tramp and was entitled to all praise.

Presently, as Miss Nettie listened with her ears against the door, she heard groans. That meant she had only wounded the tramp. Her heart was touched by those groans. She could not see the man after she had opened the door an inch or two, because he was just around the corner of the house, but she called out to him:

"Are you going away before I shoot again?"

"I—I can't say," was the reply. "I'm afraid I can't walk without help."

"Why not?"

"Because you have shot me in the legs."

"But my aunt told me to look out for hawks and tramps."

"But I am neither one nor the other."

Judging from his voice, he was a gentleman instead, and after drawing a long breath and breathing a prayer the girl stepped out and peered around the corner of the house. That young man from Stevens' was lying on his elbow on the grass. His face was very pale, and there were blood spots on the legs of his trousers. At sight of her he smiled faintly and said:

"My name is Arthur Welbourne. I am stopping with my relatives, the Stevenses. I live in the city and am an artist. If you will pardon me, I will say that I have heard you are Miss Ward. In passing the house while you slept in the hammock I saw a tramp climbing into a window. I gave the alarm, and he escaped. He it was who tumbled over your hammock and awoke you."

"And I thought you were a—a hawk or a tramp and shot you!" gasped the girl as she wrung her hands.

"But fortunately without serious results. All the shot struck my legs, but I may need assistance to get down home."

"But I shan't let you get down home. Here, take my hand and see if you can stand on your feet. Now hang on to my arm and let me get you into the house and on to the lounge. How could I have been such a silly girl? Now, then, you lie down here, and I'll run for Dr. James. I know he lives in the first house above here. I'll bring him right back with me."

She was gone before Mr. Welbourne could protest and was back in half an hour with the good natured country doctor. It took about an hour to pick out the score of bird shot that had been fired into the young man's legs, and during this time Miss Nettie walked up and down in the back yard with tears in her eyes and no care if the hawks came down and took every hen on the place.

The doctor assured her that Mr. Welbourne would live. Mr. Welbourne himself assured her that he was bound to live to make her further acquaintance, and he was taken down to the Stevenses in the doctor's buggy. He limped for three or four days, during which time Miss Nettie and her aunt called twice, and then he ceased limping and returned the calls.

Inside of a week he was something more than a caller. It beats all how fast a girl who shoots a man and the man who is shot by her can get acquainted—very well acquainted. Matrimony and hawks are sometimes shot at with a gun.

The Land of Ducks.

There are more ducks in China than in all the rest of the world. China, literally, is white with these birds, and day and night the country resounds with their metallic and scornful voices. Children herd ducks on every road, on every pond, on every farm, on every lake, on every river. There is no back yard without its duck house. There is no boat, little or great, without its duck quarters. Even in the cities of China ducks abound. They dodge between the coolies' legs. They flit, squawking, out of the way of the horses. Their indignant quack will not unseldom drown the roar of urban commerce. All over the land there are great duck hatching establishments, many of them of a capacity huge enough to produce 50,000 young ducks every year. The Chinese duck is extremely tender and delicate—the best tame duck for eating in the world. Duck among the Chinese is the staple delicacy. It is salted and smoked like ham or beef, and duck eggs are eaten as chicken eggs are in America.

The Oldest Bank Notes.

The oldest bank notes in the world are the "flying money," or convenient money, first issued in China in 2697 B. C. One writer tells that the ancient Chinese bank notes were in many respects similar to those of the present day, bearing the name of the bank, the date of issue, the number of the note, the signature of the official who issued it and its value in both figures and words. On the top of these curious notes was the following philosophic injunction: "Produce all you can; spend with economy." The note was printed in blue ink on paper made from the fiber of the mulberry tree. One of these notes bearing the date 1390 B. C. is still preserved in the Asiatic museum at St. Petersburg.

READING A BABY'S FACE.

Expressions Which May Be Attributed to Physical Causes.

The face of a child is a canvas on which are painted in marked lines the ever varying conditions of its delicate organism.

A writer in Good Housekeeping says that a healthy sleeping child presents an expression of absolute repose, with eyelids completely closed and lips but slightly parted. There may be a faint sound of breathing, but no apparent motion of the nostrils.

Incomplete closure of the eyelids, showing the whites of the eyes during sleep, is symptomatic of many acute and chronic ailments and at least shows that the balance of health is disturbed.

Movements of the nostrils point to difficulty, more or less, in getting breath and are characteristic of all diseases involving the larynx, bronchial tubes and lungs. Contracted brows indicate pain in the head, while a tightly drawn upper lip points to pain in the abdomen.

On general principles, it is asserted that the appearance of the upper third of the face indicates the condition of the brain, the middle third that of the chest and the lower third that of the organs contained in the abdominal cavity.

FOOD VALUES.

Nutritive Qualities Contained in Cheese, Milk and Eggs.

Cheese heads the list as a perfect food when chemically considered. It contains all the elements of a perfect food, but is very rich and concentrated. Cheese is usually eaten raw, but if it were more generally cooked more would be eaten. Milk is a perfect food under some conditions. It is too often considered merely as a drink and causes distress because it is drunk instead of being sipped slowly. Seven eggs contain all the nourishment needed by an adult in one day, as eggs are another perfect food as far as analysis of its elements, but a person could not enjoy an exclusive diet of eggs even if they were served in a great variety of ways. Next to the items mentioned are peas and then beans, while beef is eleventh. For every pound of cheese there would be needed three pounds of the best beef to equal it in nutritive value.

Potatoes are low in nutritive value, but when eaten with buttermilk, as in Ireland, they become a better food, although far from perfect.

A typical dish or example of a good combination of food elements is cheese and macaroni.

A PITHY STATEMENT

MR. J. S. McKEOWN GIVES AN APT ILLUSTRATION.

HIS VIEWS ON VINOL WORTH LEARNING.

THIS IS THE PREPARATION THAT IS BEING MUCH TALKED ABOUT.

A reporter asked Mr. McKeown the same question that hundreds have asked him in the last few days, "Just tell me precisely, please, why Vinol is better than cod liver oil?" Mr. McKeown replied in his genial way, "I can explain to you in a few minutes the advantages of Vinol. Suppose you had never seen a hen's egg. A man who knew of them should tell you to eat three every day. I do not say that you would, mind you, but I am inclined to believe at the start you would make an heroic effort to get away with the whole thing, shell and all. The meat of the egg would be what you needed, the shell rather superfluous. In fact, as a matter of nourishment not quite the thing for your stomach.

"There you are with cod liver oil. In it you have a medicine, or rather in the liver of the codfish there are medicinal elements known to be valuable for certain forms of wasting disease, a great reconstructor. Doctors have administered it for years. They were like the man who had never seen an egg before. They gave it to their patients just as they found it, shell and all. Yes, that is exactly it. The grease was useless and as bad for the stomach, almost, as would have been the shell of the egg. The kernel, or the meat of the remedy, the vital principles that they were after, were contained in it. Science has stepped in and done exactly what the man with the egg might have done—found a way to separate the healthful interior from the worthless husk.

"Now, in Vinol we have all the active medicinal principles of the cod's liver. We have thrown away the useless encumbrances that formerly encloaked it, namely, the objectionable oil and grease. We have taken this extract, placed it in a delicious medicinal wine, and there you are. Patients who have needed cod liver oil and could not take it, have no trouble in taking Vinol. Why, you would enjoy drinking it yourself, so pleasant is it. The medicinal properties of the cod's liver heal damage done by diseases that are of a wasting nature, and the same principles give strength to the weakened digestion and enable the poor sufferer's worn out stomach to digest and obtain nutriment from every-day food. These same principles are also active disease germ annihilators.

"Yes, I am glad to have you come any time that you care to learn anything more about Vinol. It has already proved itself to be a phenomenal success."

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

THE TIGHT BLADE.

How to Open a Knife With a Pocket Handkerchief.

Jimmy could not get the blade of his new knife open. He had tried until the nails of both his thumbs were broken, and then he had worked with a screwdriver and a spike, but he couldn't start the stiff spring.

"Guess you never heard about opening a knife with your handkerchief," said Uncle Nat good naturedly.

"With a handkerchief?"

"Yes, with a handkerchief. When I was a boy that is the way we always did, but the boys of today seem to have forgotten the trick."

Uncle Nat put on his spectacles, drew out his handkerchief and wound it about Jimmy's knife, blade and all. He did it slowly, so that it would be tight, pressing the knife blade into the case apparently harder and tighter than it was before. Jimmy looked on wonderingly. When the winding was finished Uncle Nat held the free corner of the handkerchief firmly between his thumb and finger and gave the knife a sharp little twitch and throw. Of course the handkerchief unrolled rapidly, and when the knife flew out the blade was open.

THE WRAPPED KNIFE.

"There!" said Uncle Nat. "Easy enough, isn't it?"

And Jimmy was able to do the same thing after a few trials, and after that he wasn't troubled with a blade that stuck.

A BIRD'S NEST.

How It Was Saved From Destruction by General Stanley.

Some years ago General David S. Stanley of the United States army was leading a force across the plains. He was laying out the route for a great railroad. There were 2,000 men, 2,500 horses and mules and a train of 250 wagons heavily laden.

One day the general was riding at the head of the broad column when suddenly his voice rang out, "Halt!"

A bird's nest lay on the ground directly in front of him. In another moment the horses would have trampled on the nestlings. The mother bird was flying about and chirping in the greatest anxiety. But the brave general had not brought out his army to destroy a bird's nest.

He halted for a moment, looked at the little birds in the nest below and then gave the order, "Left oblique!"

Men, horses, mules and wagons turned aside and spared the home of the helpless bird. Months and even years after those who crossed the plains saw a great bend in the trail. It was the bend made to avoid crushing the bird's nest. Truly, great hearts are tender hearts, and "the loving are the daring."

Queer English.

A little book called "English as She Is Spoke" was compiled and published a few years ago by a Portuguese named Fonseca. It is not so much talked about as it used to be, but perhaps it may be found at some of the bookstores. It would be worth any one's time and money to get a copy of it, for it is as full of laughs as a kitten is of play. Here is a specimen: "A physician eighty years of age had enjoied of a health unalterable. Theirs friends did him of it compliments every days. 'Mister Doctor,' they said to him, 'you are admirable man. What you make then for to bear you as well?' 'I shall tell you it, gentlemen,' he was answored them, 'and I exhort you in same time at to follow my example. I live of the product of my ordering, without take any remedy who I command to my sicks.'"

Four Tongue Twisters.

Tongue twisting sentences are always good funmakers. Here are four for our young folks to try: 1. She sells seashells. 2. The sun shines on the shop signs. 3. Shave a cedar shingle thin. 4. How much wood would a woodchuck chuck if a woodchuck could chuck wood? When you give these twisters out, make it a condition that they shall be spoken quite rapidly, and you will have lots of fun.

A Homemade Toy.

Get two small wooden balls, paint them in bright contrasting colors and fasten them to each other by means of a strong double cord of rubber. Twist the cord tightly by turning the balls in opposition directions, and then place them on the floor or on a smooth piece of ground. They will at once begin to revolve rapidly, and some pretty and curious figures will be produced.

Just a Word.

There is a well known word in the English language the two first letters of which signify a male, the three first a female, the four first a great man and the whole a great woman. He, her, hero, heroine.

A Sorry Swim.

Three little ducks went out to swim,
But when they came to the river's brim,
I'm sorry to say, it began to rain,
And so they hurried back home again.

Mrs. M.S.W. Aged 35

Presented the following history:— Since childhood she has been subject to periodical headaches, which she regarded as hereditary, as her mother and aunt had suffered similarly without relief. During the past few years she has complained of heart trouble, dyspepsia, constipation, and periods of extreme nervousness; while suffering the attacks of headache she had nausea and vomiting, so she often had to keep her bed for days. Several physicians had been consulted, but no permanent relief was obtained. Finally she was led to have her eyes examined, when a bad form of astigmatism was discovered with oblique axis (which is always a source of eyestrain): the correct glasses were given, to be worn constantly. She began to improve at once, the headaches, and all the other distressing symptoms entirely disappeared. Consultation free. —ALEX. RAY.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

HOCKEY.

The Pea Canners Got Theirs, All Right, All Right.

There was a tremendous crowd in the rink last night to see the Bellevilles and Pictons play. The locals had a good deal at stake in the match, for if they lost it would be, in all probability, the tall timbers for theirs. So they went on the ice prepared to put up the game of their lives. The Pictons were a likely-looking bunch as they skated round and sent in hot shots at their goal-keeper. It looked as though the local lads would have to let out the last link to beat that bunch. As a matter of fact they did beat them, and probably "Chicagoed' them, but of that later on. The famous "Chaucer" Elliott was referee, and he never handled the whistle to better advantage. If any referee in Ontario has anything on "Chaucer" he has not yet hit the pike in the direction of this neck of the woods. The match, too, was as clean a one as anybody could wish to see. The boys knew they must play hockey to win, and that, while they were in the timekeepers' box they were dead to their team. Consequently, the few men ruled off were only minor sinners.

It was not much after 8 when the lads faced each other this way:

Belleville goal.
Boland.
Pepper.
Connolly.
Allen.
Burke McGuire Spangenberg
Williamson Welsh Reid
Benson
Bedborough
Thorne
Croft
Picton goal.

The Pea Canners went off with a rush, and for some minutes pressed the locals hard. The Picton defence was helping their forward line, and were giving the Belleville defence a merry time of it. The checking was close, but some of the Bellevilles did not seem to be playing quite up to form; certainly they did not, in the first half, strike anything like the gait they did in the match with Brockville. The best of players, you know, have off-nights sometimes. It looked very much, several times, as though Picton would score. Bedborough and Benson would get the puck into Belleville territory time and again, but Pepper and Boland were strictly on the job, and the latter showed up as a budding Winchester. The Picton goal-tend, too, had very few flies on him. At last Belleville got the first on a long shot of Connolly's, which went by the whole Picton defence. This seemed to put the Pea Canners on their mettle, and they came back harder than ever. They were pressing Belleville hard when time was called for the end of the first half.

While the boys were off people had time to compare notes. It was certain that, so far, the visitors had had quite as much of the game as the locals. There was hardly any choice between them. To be sure, Spangenberg on the Belleville forward line had made a lot of difference. Without him—well, ask us something easy. One thing was tolerably sure, if some of the locals did not strike their true gait in the second half it was possible the Pea Canners might take the victory home with them.

Out they came again, and the last heat was started.

And now there was a different tale to tell. The Bellevilles came out seemingly loaded up with all sorts of ginger, and were on top of the Pea Canners all the time. The latter boys seemed bewildered, and for a time were doing little but cheerfully getting in each other's way. It looked now, if the locals could keep up the pace, that they must surely win. They poured in shot after shot at Croft, but he seemed to know just where they were coming from, and surely gave a fine exhibtiion of stopping. Finally the puck went up to Belleville ice. Pepper got it, went through the Picton forwards and shot hard from the side of the rink. The shot beat Croft, and the score was Belleville 2, Picton 0. Belleville got another, after Boland had made a neat stop, which looked like a sure-enough goal. The Pea Canners were now up in the air, and the 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th came our way. Spangenberg, Allen, Burke and Connolly showed up strongly, and little McGuire played a splendid game. The Pictons, too, once in a while, woke up with a vengeance and made things very interesting, but they could not hold the local boys in the second half. However, the 7-1 score does not by any means indicate the merits of the two teams, for the visitors, though at times they missed easy passes and bunched in a way most aggravating to their trainer, "Doc" Gilbert, at other times played pretty hockey. Belleville would have beaten them, anyhow, but there would not have been such a jug-handled score had the Pea Canners had a little more of the luck. However, the visitors came near being "Chicagoed," and probably were if the truth were known. Here is how it works out. "Doc" Gilbert, time-keeper for Picton, had a stop watch, while the Belleville timer had an ordinary chronometer. When time was up according to "Doc" the score stood 7—0. The Belleville timer then had four minutes to go. They called the referee over.

"What do you say?" said "Chaucer" to the Picton man.

"I say time's up," said the former star Varsity player.

"And what do you make it?" was the referee's query to Mr. Fish, the Belleville timer.

"I make it four minutes yet to play," said that gentleman.

"We'll play two minutes," said "Chaucer," cheerfully splitting the difference.

So they played two minutes, and the Pea Canners got their lonely tally while there was yet about a minute to play.

Caught in the Net.

It was a clean match, and everybody got his money's worth.

The ladies were out in force, and some of 'em cheered manfully.

Bedborough, of Picton, shaped like a coming star.

McGuire, the local centre, is as good in that position as any junior player ever seen here.

The P. C.'s had a combination, but they were checked too close to get a chance to use it.

Some of the Picton forwards missed more passes than a circus gives away.

Spangenberg's blonde head was in the thickest of the fray, but he looked as though he might have been in better condition.

The crowd didn't do a thing when the score began to mount up, and some budding rhymesters sang:

"What have they done? What have they done?
They've beat the Pictons seven to one."

It was worth the whole price of admission to see "Chaucer" Elliott, the best-advertised sporting man in Canada.

The locals always do most of their scoring at one end of the rink. But then, so long as they do it, what matter?

Considerable money changed hands on the result of the match. One local enthusiast bet $30 that Belleville would win by five goals. His chance looked scaly at the end of the first half.

The officials were: Timers—Picton, "Doc" Gilbert; Belleville, H. A. Fish. Penalty timers—Picton, Mr. Sullivan; Belleville, "Jack" Rathbun. Goal umpires—Belleville, Mr. Turner; Picton, Mr. Tremble.

"Chaucer" handed out eight penalties, as follows: McGuire (2), Allen (2), Pepper, Williamson, Benson (2.)

SPORTING NOTES.

The Toronto Globe says last night's match was the best game ever played in Belleville. That's going some.

Harold Armstrong, the ex-Peterboro player, will replace Shore on the Ottawa team when they meet the Wanderers to-morrow night.

The famous race mare Reckon is dead. She won 33 races for A. H. and D. H. Morris, and was the dam of Accountant, Add, Compute, Sam Phillips, Reckoner and Calculation.

The Montreal papers are not agreed as to whether Currie, the Shamrock goal-keeper, is from Halifax or St. John. McMillan and De Gray are from Cornwall. Hockey material seems to be sought out of town when Montreal teams are looking to add to their strength.

The illness of Mr. W. A. Hewitt, Secretary of the Ontario Hockey Association, has taken a very serious turn, and has developed into a highly dangerous case of pneumonia.

Miss Kerr, considered to be the best lady bowler in Canada, in a practice at the Toronto Bowling Club, rolled four games, with a total of 610, an average of 152 a game. Her high game was 188. Miss Kerr used a large 16-lb. ball, and has more speed than some league bowlers.

The snuffy old Globe can't drop its hypocrisy. Listen to this: "Fredericton, N.B., will have no hockey this winter. The thinly-disguised professionalism of last year's team is responsible. It's always that way, as in the cases of Belleville, Barrie, London and Woodstock. The crooks are sure to kill the game for many seasons after they get their hands on it."

The Ottawa Hockey Club met with a reverse which will probably affect the prospects for this season. While at practice, Arthur Moore, the steady and heady cover-point, had the misfortune to fall, and broke a bone in his right ankle. There is no probability of Mr. Moore playing again this year.

Grim Reaper Cuts Off Man and Wife

MR. A. PITMAN SPEEDILY FOLLOWS HIS BELOVED HELPMATE TO THE TOMB.

On Sunday night last Mrs. A. Pitman died very suddenly from heart disease while waiting upon her husband who was seriously ill. Wednesday afternoon her remains were interred, and twenty-four hours later, Mr. Pitman passed away. A few months ago the deceased had a severe attack of typhoid fever and had only nicely recovered when he was seized with an attack of quinsy, which was the ultimate cause of death. The sick man was greatly depressed by the loss of his devoted wife, and seemed, it is said, to lose desire for life after her sudden and shocking end. Although Mr. Pitman had been a resident of the city for a comparatively short time, he was known to many citizens, and highly respected. The greater portion of his life was spent upon a farm in the township of Thurlow. He had been for years a member of the Methodist Church and was identified with the Tabernacle, being one of its officials. He was a consistent Christian man. In politics he was a Conservative. By the death of the parents, one little girl, Ida, is orphaned. The relatives of the deceased will receive the sincere sympathy of all in the double affliction which they have been called upon to pass through.

Paid For Their Fun And Fast Driving.

Two young men named H. Welsh and Alex. McDonald, said to be strangers in the city, were arrested yesterday afternoon for driving about the city at an immoderate rate of speed. The sporty gents, it seems, came under the eagle eye of Magistrate Flint, who brought about their arrest. They were subsequently allowed their liberty by the Magistrate by contributing $5 each to the city treasury. They were, it is said, driving a horse belonging to a Picton livery stable keeper, who was informed by telephone of the treatment to which his animal had been subjected.

Who'll Be Warden Of Hastings County?

The question, "Who will be Warden of the County of Hastings for 1907?" is a matter that is receiving the attention of not only the taxpayers of the county but many city people who take an interest in county matters.

Had Mr. H. K. Denyes, of Thurlow been elected, there is no doubt that the honor would have gone to him. This year, according to an agreement entered into some years ago, a Conservative is entitled to that position.

One of the oldest and most able members this year is Mr. A. Kirk, reeve of Hungerford, but we are informed that he is not desirous of the position. Such being the case, Mr. S. T. Vandervoort, reeve-elect of Sidney township, may be elevated to the Wardenship.

Died In the Royal Victoria Hospital.

Word was received in the city today announcing the death of Mr. Neil Donovan, which occurred at the Royal Victoria Hospital at Montreal this morning. The cause of death was spinal meningitis. Deceased was unmarried and was a son of Mr. M. Donovan, agent at the G.T.R. freight shed here. The deceased had been for some time engaged as a railway contractor, and had many men working for him. He was well known in the city and vicinity. Mr. Donovan was a member of the Roman Catholic church.

Week Of Prayer.

Week of Prayer services were held last evening in Emmanuel Reformed Church. The rector, Rev. A. M. Hubly was chairman. Rev. R. H. Leitch and ex-Mayor Graham were the speakers, and the subject discussed was "Christian Institutions." There was a goodly number in attendance. At the noon-day prayer meeting today in Bridge St. Church, Rev. R. H. Leitch was chairman.

to customers who had made the rounds of the 20 per cent. discount shops and the reason we sold to them was because we gave better values. This is not mere talk, it is a fact, and we stand ready to give you just as good bargains. Don't for one minute think we are going to sit round like a bump when there is something doin' in the discount line. We are in this business for our health just the same as are the other merchants of this city. And if 20 per cent. discount won't get us our share of health (and business) we will have to make it 30, that's all.

TARIFF AMENDMENTS

Hon. Mr. Fielding Brings Two Down in the Commons.

One Makes Dumping Clause Explicit In Its Application to Articles Otherwise Not Dutiable, While Other Exempts Binder Twine From the Dumping Duty—Petitions Presented Against Duties on Steel and Iron

Ottawa, Jan. 11.—In reply to a question by R. L. Borden in the House yesterday, Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated that he had heard nothing directly from Mr. Hyman. He had learned, however, that his condition of health was very serious, almost critical. He hoped that under the circumstances that the House would not be impatient at further delay.

In Committee on Tariff.

The House went promptly into committee yesterday afternoon and took up the tariff. Mr. Fielding presented an amendment to the dumping clause, so as to make it explicit in its application to articles not otherwise dutiable.

Mr. Fielding said that the dumping duty did not apply to articles manufactured in Canada. It was designed to prevent unfair competition.

Mr. Bourassa thought that the Government was going too far. "I was a moderate protectionist," he declared, "long before this Government was converted to protection. But I only favor a moderate tariff. If the Government is going to swing from free trade to a high protective tariff I am not sure that I can follow them."

R. L. Borden twitted the Government with having changed its position on the tariff.

"We have all changed our minds," Mr. Fielding suggested.

Gerald White, North Renfrew, urged that the manufacturers of cream separators be encouraged by permitting machinery and raw material used in their business to be imported free of duty.

Mr. Fielding promised to consider the matter, and intimated that he might bring down an amendment.

Binder Twine Exempt.

Another amendment proposed by Mr. Fielding was to exempt binder twine from the dumping duty. There is reciprocity just now between Canada and the United States. The Canadian manufacturer feared that the dumping clause might be so construed by the United States custom officers as to keep out the twine from Canada.

W. F. Maclean (South York) pointed out that, if the farmer got any cheaper twine it was not to help him out, but to accommodate some manufacturer. The dumping clause, as now amended by Mr. Fielding, virtually put it in the power of the Government to levy a duty upon any article brought into Canada.

Mr. Clements (West Kent) favored a duty on twine. Had twine been cheaper since it went on the free list? On the contrary, the price had gone up.

Several petitions were presented today by Ontario members, including six by the Minister of Customs, protesting against the duties on steel and iron.

Feeble Statute.

In committee upon a clause in the tariff resolution, providing that the governor-in-council may reduce the tariff upon any article of commerce as to which a combination is found to exist between the manufacturers or dealers thereof, at the expense of the consumers. Mr. Maclean contrasted this feeble statute with the United States. There the Federal legislation punishes with fine and imprisonment any person or corporation who conspires in restraint of trade to control the supply or price of anything imported into the United States. Moreover, the Attorney-General is charged with the duty of breaking up all trusts and combinations by both civil and criminal proceedings. He is authorized to employ attorneys and agents, and $500,000 is placed at his disposal to enforce this statute and the provisions of the recent laws forbidding rebates and discrimination. Therefore, we find, in that country, that powerful men are indicted and punished, and great corporations are fined in enormous sums for violating the Federal laws.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in reply, said that in framing the B. N. A. Act great care had been taken to avoid any question of state rights, and, therefore, instead of having both Federal and state courts, as in the United States, there were provided only the courts whose judges were appointed by the National Government. The executive officers of these courts were provincial officers. It was up to each provincial Attorney-General to enforce the law. The Dominion Government could not interfere, nor could it justly be held responsible for the failure to enforce the law.

Go to Foy.

Replying to Mr. Maclean, the first Minister said that it was the duty of the Attorneys-General in Ontario and Quebec to enforce the law against the G.T.R. "You should go to Mr. Foy," he added.

Mr. Maclean: Very well, I will notify Mr. Foy to-morrow that your Government, with a Railway Minister, a Railway Comminion, and an Attorney-General, is so feeble that I am compelled to go to him, a provincial officer, to enforce the mandates of Parliament against a Dominion corporation.

Dr. Stockton (St. John, N. B.) expressed surprise at the remarkable confusion of ideas that seemed to obscure the mind of the First Minister. True, the B. N. A. Act had been framed so as to avoid all danger from states rights. It had been drawn so as to make a strong central Government. How absurd, then, to say that no federal courts could be created. We had the Supreme and Exchequer Courts and the Admiralty Courts all purely Federal. Any lawyer knew that this Government had the power to enforce the law. Why not give us appropriate legislation?

Mr. Bourassa deprecated the creation of federal courts. He believed that the provincial courts would cheerfully enforce the Federal laws if the cases were brought.

Mr. Borden's View.

R. L. Borden said it might not be necessary to create any new courts, but certainly it was proper for Parliament to provide machinery to enforce the Federal law.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier was not inclined to yield. He said neither of the old parties had ever urged upon the present system.

Mr. Maclean: Well, there is a new party. And the first plank in the platform, will be the "enforcement of law."

The House sat till midnight and made some progress with the tariff schedule respecting agricultural products.

The Opposition members insisted that the farmers were not free traders and they desired a tariff upon agricultural products.

In reply Government supporters denied that the farmers wanted any protection.

Killed by Flying Rock.

Ottawa, Jan. 11.—While engaged in blasting in a mica mine at Kingrange, Que., Wednesday forenoon, William Fleury, a miner, was struck in the head by a flying rock and died from the effects in a few hours. Fleury had put in the blast, ignited the fuse and was retreating.

Painfully Burned.

Hamilton, Jan. 16.—Louis Gill, 159 Cannon street, was painfully burned on his right arm and side yesterday afternoon at the International Harvester Works. He was taken to the city hospital.

Mill Fly Wheel Breaks.

Port Credit, Jan. 11.—Wednesday morning at Craigie's saw mill, with the engine running at full speed, a large hard knot was struck. The jar threw the belts off and the engine "ran away," the fly wheel breaking. One large piece broke through the roof and the others through the sides of the building, wrecking it. John Craigie was close to the engine, but escaped with a shock, which stunned him for a few seconds. Dan Fowler, the engine driver, was also thrown to the ground by the concussion. About $600 will cover the damage.

Sentenced for Theft.

Cornwall, Jan. 11.—Levi Scarboe and Peter Campeau, two laboring men, residing near Avonmore, were yesterday sentenced by Judge Riddell. Scarboe was sent to the Penitentiary at Kingston for three years, and Campeau was given four years in the same institution. They were charged with stealing a robe from W. McLennan's sleigh in a hotel yard at Avonmore.

Same As In Ontario.

Winnipeg, Jan. 11.—An important session of the university council was held yesterday, when it was decided to ask the Government for power to establish a faculty of law. The university will ask this year for $100,000. It is quite possible that the Provincial Government will be asked to take over the university on somewhat the same basis as in Ontario.

Gets Lyell Medal.

London, Jan. 11.—The Geological Society has awarded the Lyell medal to J. F. Whiteaves of Ottawa.

Archbishop Montgomery.

San Francisco, Cal., Jan. 11.—Archbishop Montgomery died yesterday afternoon.

Doctors Admit

That They Can Do Nothing More for Your Stomach Than Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are Doing Every Day.

COSTS NOTHING TO TRY.

According to the expert analysis of government authorities in the United States and Great Britain, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets contain the exact elements provided by nature for digesting food in the healthy stomach.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have saved sufferers from stomach disorders millions of dollars by giving them, in one small 50-cent package, more relief than countless treatments by physicians would bring about at $3.00 per visit.

Perhaps you are afflicted with dyspepsia — or some kindred disease arising from a disordered digestion. It may be headaches, heartburn, palpitation, liver trouble, insomnia, nervous debility. They all have their beginning in a stomach which does not secrete the juices or grind the food which is taken into it.

If so, we urge you to send for a free trial package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. It will cost you nothing and surely will bring us no gain unless you find, after using it, that you need a full-sized package.

There is absolutely no danger in using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. Nothing is contained in them that has not been subjected to the closest scrutiny by the government officials.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest your food without demanding a careful diet. One grain of these Tablets has power to digest 3,000 grains or ordinary food. You can be sure therefore that no matter what your condition, these little tablets taken after each meal will shortly restore your stomach to its normal condition and render it capable of doing its work unassisted.

We withhold the names of hundreds who have written us voluntarily expressing their gratitude to this simple substitute for nature.

Send for trial package to-day. F. A. Stuart Co., 70 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

RUSS REIGN OF TERROR

Col. Patko Andrieff Shot and Killed at Lodz, Russ Poland.

Assassination of the Chief of Gendarmes In the Lodz District—Infantry Patrol Fired Volley At the Assassin, But Missed and Wounded Several Innocent Onlookers—Doubassoff Warned—Assassin Hanged.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 11.—The murderer of Lieut.-Gen. Pavloff, who was killed Wednesday, was tried by court-martial yesterday and sentenced to death. He was hanged last night.

Vice-Admiral Doubassoff, ex-Governor-General of Moscow, and at present a member of the Council of the Empire, has received notification that another attempt upon his life will be made.

Col. Andrieff Shot Down.

Lodz, Russian Poland, Jan. 11.—Col. Patko Andrieff, chief of the gendarmes of the Lodz district, was shot and killed yesterday morning on Poludniowa street.

A passing infantry patrol fired a volley at the assassin, but only wounded several innocent onlookers.

The assassin escaped.

Poludniowa street was closed by troops and the police began making a strict search of all the houses fronting upon it.

M'GILL GOES FOR TRIAL.

"Clear Theft," Says Magistrate Denison In Sending ex-General Manager For Trial—Cockburn Case.

Toronto, Jan. 11.—Charles McGill, former general manager of the Ontario Bank, was sent for trial by Magistrate Denison yesterday on two charges of theft, one of $136,000 and another of $1,150,000. McGill was allowed out on the same bail of $50,000. G. R. R. Cockburn, formerly president, was remanded until Monday.

Acting for Mr. McGill, Gideon Grant made strenuous objections to the New York commission's evidence. He claimed that the commission had been irregularly appointed, that no notice had been sent to his client of the execution of the order, and that the evidence was taken in the absence of McGill and was irregular and improper.

When the case was called Crown attorney Corley asked for a commitment on the theft charge of $136,000.

The magistrate said that the evidence showed that the Ames Co. placed this money in McGill's hands and that some been traced back to him. There was no doubt what McGill took out was a clear theft.

The New York evidence was not read. F. H. Pope, head office clerk, was put on the stand to clear up a couple of points.

The $10,000 item supposed to have gone to Goady & Co. of New York, which firm denied all knowledge of such transaction, Mr. Pope explained by saying that money was in the Ames' account with that firm. Another $15,000 transaction with Cuyler, Morgan & Co., New York, he stated had been put through by Pellatt & Pellatt, instead of being entered in McGill's name.

Mr. Corley then pointed out that the commission had found that on March 10, 1906, a sum of $2,000 had been paid to M. S. McGill.

"Who is M. S. McGill?" asked the court.

"It may be Mrs. McGill; the initials are M. S." answered the witness.

The commitment was then made.

Grain Combine Case.

Winnipeg, Jan. 11.—The investigation of charges of conducting a grain combine against three members of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange came to a close yesterday at the police court, when they were committed to trial on bail to appear at next assizes. The three members are John Love, John McHugh and William Gage.

Old Soul In Young Body.

Minneapolis, Jan. 11.—James Anderson, who died here yesterday, aged 11 years and two months, was, in the opinion of physicians, at least 60 years old, so far as the condition of his vitals determine the age of a man. When 6 years old his hair began to turn grey, his eyesight began to fail, and he walked with the deliberate care of a person who is advanced in years. As a child he was exceptionally bright, but his mental faculties were gradually failing for the last two years, so he was little better than a person in his dotage the last few months.

Pat Clunan Goes Down.

Petreboro, Jan. 11. — Yesterday Magistrate Dumble sentenced Patrick Clunan, president of the Peterboro Turf Club, and temporarily acting as bartender in the Royal Hotel, to the county jail for one month, and in addition imposed a fine of $100, in default of payment of which his sentence is to be extended another month. He was convicted of aggravated assault on an Indian named Richard Cornelius of Indian River.

I am a woman.
I know woman's sufferings.
I have found the cure.

I will mail, free of any charge, my home treatment with full instructions to any sufferer from women's ailments. I want to tell all women about this cure—you, my reader, for yourself, your daughter, your mother, or your sister. I want to tell you how to cure yourselves at home without the help of a doctor. Men cannot understand women's sufferings. What we women know from experience, we know better than any doctor. I know that my home treatment is a safe and sure cure for Leucorrhoea or Whitish discharges, Ulceration, Displacement or Falling of the Womb, Profuse, Scanty or Painful Periods, Uterine or Ovarian Tumors or Growths, also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness, kidney and bladder troubles where caused by weaknesses peculiar to our sex.

I want to send you a complete 10 days' treatment entirely free to prove to you that you can cure yourself at home, easily, quickly and surely. Remember, that it will cost you nothing to give the treatment a complete trial; and if you should wish to continue, it will cost you only about 12 cents a week, or less than two cents a day. It will not interfere with your work or occupation. Just send me your name and address, tell me how you suffer, if you wish, and I will send you the treatment for your case, entirely free, in plain wrapper, by return mail. I will also send you free of cost, my book—"WOMAN'S OWN MEDICAL ADVISER" with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer, and how they can easily cure themselves at home. Every woman should have it, and learn to think for herself. Then when the doctor says—"You must have an operation," you can decide for yourself. Thousands of women have cured themselves with my home remedy. It cures all, old or young. To Mothers of Daughters, I will explain a simple home treatment which speedily and effectually cures Leucorrhoea, Green Sickness and Painful or Irregular Menstruation in Young Ladies. Plumpness and health always result from its use.

Wherever you live, I can refer you to ladies of your own locality who know and will gladly tell any sufferer that this Home Treatment really cures all woman's diseases and makes women well, strong, plump and robust. Just send me your address, and the free ten days' treatment is yours, also the book. Write to-day, as you may not see this offer again. Address:

Six Months In the Mercer

Gertrude Harris, Alias Grace Cameron, Tried and Convicted

Pleaded Guilty to Having Forged and Passed Four Cheques on Four Well-Known Toronto Men—Maggie Harris, Alias Ruth Wilson, Remanded Till Wednesday—Tried by the Magistrate.

Toronto, Jan. 12.—Gertie Harris, alias Grace Cameron, six months in the Mercer.

Maggie Harris, alias Ruth Wilson, remanded until Wednesday.

This is the disposition of the two girls from the country, who became more or less famous through the passing of forged cheques, and in other ways. The court room was crowded.

The girls had no counsel, and when asked whether she would be tried by the magistrate or a jury Gertie said she did not know. "Whichever is the best way, but I want to get it over at once," she said, and pleaded guilty to having forged and passed cheques on W. H. Knowlton, Dr. P. E. Doolittle, Dr. F. Winnett, John Pettigrew and C. W. Coxwell for $15 each.

Maggie is supposed to have been mixed up in the Coxwell and Pettigrew cheques, but claims she did not know what she was doing, as Gertie gave her the cheques in envelopes. Her sister corroborated her.

If Gertie is to be believed, she certainly had an extended acquaintance with men of the "upper ten" of all ages and professions. She had no hesitation in mentioning names, and reeled them off quite freely when in conversation.

Mrs. Elizabeth Jackson, keeper of the house where Gertie Harris lived for a time, was arraigned on the charges of procuring and keep a house of ill-fame. The first charge fell through, but on the second she was sent to jail for 30 days without the option of a fine.

SERIOUS FOR GUROFSKY.

Charge Made "With Intent to Kill"—Magistrate Refused Bail.

Toronto, Jan. 12.—The clan Gurofsky got set back several blocks yesterday in the Police Court, when the case of Joseph Gurofsky, charged with wounding Dominic Tivani Thanksgiving-day was called. Gurofsky asked for a remand on the ground that he had no counsel. "You should have had," was Magistrate Denison's retort. Then Gurofsky explained he was a bank manager, but it didn't save him.

Tivani is still in St. Michael's Hospital, but told about Louis Gurofsky running up the street after him with a revolver in his hand. He took the revolver from Louis and put it in his pocket. Then came Joe flourishing another revolver. Joe shot him in the hip. There was a crowd of Hebrews around. He was afraid for his life and jumped through a plate glass door.

Two other witnesses said they saw Joe shoot Tivani, and when he fell fire at him twice when he was down.

"This is much more serious than I thought," said the magistrate. "I will change this charge to shooting with intent to kill, and commit you for trial."

"What about bail?" asked Gurofsky.

"I will not grant bail, the high court can do as it pleases."

"I am a bank manager and a business man and can give $40,000 bail," declared Gurofsky.

"I don't care how rich you are, you cannot get bail in this court."

Gurofsky was taken across the building to the sheriff's office and detained until 4 o'clock when he was removed to the jail.

At 4.30 H. H. Dewart made an application for bail to Justice Britton, who granted it in the same amount ($10,000) and same sureties as before. Gurofsky was liberated later on.

Italian Stabs Another.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Jan. 12.—Because Raffeleo Luirter said he was a better man than Luigi Allesandro, the latter drove a knife deep into his abdomen. The victim may die. Luigi was taken to jail.

Hollwey Goes for Trial.

Toronto, Jan. 12.—T. W. Hollwey was committed for trial yesterday by Magistrate Denison on two charges of defrauding the University of Toronto out of $575 and $11,300.

Holyhead as Landing Port.

London, Jan. 12.—(C. A. P.)—The Corporation of Holyhead is determined to urge on the British postal authorities the advantages of Holyhead as a port of landing for Canadian and American mails.

A prominent Irish M.P., speaking to the Canadian Associated Press, expressed great doubt of the Blacksod Bay scheme being carried out.

Premier Scott to Go South.

Regina, Sask., Jan. 12.—As soon as the condition of Premier Scott permits he will leave for a southern point, where he will spend some months. It is unlikely that he will be able to take any active part in political affairs during the forthcoming sitting of the Legislature.

Death of Hon. C. C. Colby.

EASTERN DAIRYMEN.

New Officers Are Elected—Mr. Derbyshire Is Honored—Superintendent Putnam on Inspection.

Ottawa, Jan. 12.—The Eastern Ontario Dairymen's convention closed Thursday after a three days' session. The eyes of the dairymen will turn now to the Western Association, which meets at London next week.

The principal outcome of the meetings has been the new work outlined by Supt. Putnam for the better instruction of cheese and buttermakers, and for the better regulation of sanitary conditions. The total appropriation for the work is $42,700, and it is proposed to charge each factory $12 towards this work. The report also recommended that a fine be imposed on any factory owner or manager who knowingly allows milk from tainted sources to enter his factory.

G. H. Ecklin, sanitary inspector of Eastern Ontario, said that more attention would be paid next year to the condition of farmers' premises and wells.

Tobacco In the Dairy.

Prof. Dean of the O.A.C. laid great stress on the necessity of being absolutely clean around the dairy. Our dairy products are becoming of increasing importance, and their utility as food was being recognized more than ever. In this connection, he denounced the use of tobacco by dairymen as being a dirty habit and as destroying the sense of taste so as to impair the judgment of the maker and seller. A. W. MacLaren, M.P. for North Perth, agreed with Prof. Dean that the time for cheap dairy products had passed. He expressed himself as heartily in accord with the movement to bring the western and eastern associations closer together.

Mr. Dargavel, President.

In the election of officers, John R. Dargavel, M.P.P. for Leeds, was elected president; R. G. Murphy of Ottawa was re-elected secretary. The retiring president, D. Derbyshire of Brockville, was presented with a gold-headed cane, and elected honorary president for life. The following is the newly-elected board of directors:

John H. Singleton, Smith's Falls; Neil Fraser, Vankleek Hill; Edward Kidd, North Gower; J. D. McPhail, Russell; John McGregor, Alexandria; Angus Grant, Moose Creek; C. F. Whittaker, North Williamsburg; Levi Patton, Brockville; C. W. Carson, Charlesville; John R. Dargavel, Elgin; D. Derbyshire, Brockville; T. A. Thompson, Almonte; Wm. Guthrie, Perth road; Robert Metzler, Odessa; James Whitton, Wellman's Corners; T. B. Carlow, Warkworth; G. A. Gillespie, Peterboro'; Henry Glendenning, Manilla; G. G. Publow, Kingston; hon. director for Eastern Ontario, D. H. Young, Prince Edward; Morden Bird, Stirling, auditor.

A PEACE MENACE.

German Effort to Maintain Equal Trade Conflicts With Anglo-Russ Negotiations Re Persia.

London, Jan. 12.—The pacific views held in German official circles with regard to the second peace conference at The Hague have further minimized the possibility of international complications as a result of the death of the Shah of Persia.

At the same time the determination of Germany to maintain equal trade opportunity in Persia is noted here as being in direct conflict with the aim of the negotiations pending between Great Britain and Russia for the delegation of spheres of influence in Persia on which the two powers are nearing an agreement. In return for Great Britain's acknowledgment of Russia's preponderating interest in the north along the Russian frontier, Emperor Nicholas will recognize Great Britain's interests in the south to protect the route to India.

This is all Great Britain asks, it being in line with the announcement of Lord Lansdowne, when foreign minister, that Great Britain would take every means in her power to prevent other countries establishing a naval base or fortified port in the Persian Gulf, which would menace her Indian empire.

Officials here are inclined to concur in the German view that any attempt of Germany to secure political or commercial ascendancy in the Persian capital would tend to unite Great Britain and Russia in a common measure of defence.

The desire of the United States and Germany to refrain from urging Russia to fix a date for the assembling of The Hague conference is not shared here. The British Government has sought to secure definite information concerning the date, but thus far without success.

The opinion appears to be strengthening in official quarters that the question of limitation of armaments, however commendable in theory, will not command sufficient support to permit of its being discussed to a finality by the conference. Considerable objection also exists to the reopening of the question of the status of private property at sea, as one of the chief sources of the British naval power is the right to cripple an enemy's merchant shipping, the same as the warships of the United States made prizes of Spanish merchantmen after the declaration of the Spanish-American War.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Cheer up. Two months from next Thursday will be the 17th of March.

• • •

The winter is wearing away very nicely, and what prophets say will be the best summer in Belleville's history is only about a quarter of a year away.

Peterboro Review: Belleville is certainly going to the dogs. An alderman last year had the tax on all canines in the Bay City doubled. The residents resented the law so much that they defeated this particular civic representative at the polls. Alas! On what stupendous issues the fate of an alderman at times hangs.

True enough. And, talking of the dog tax, has the obKNOXious increase lessened the nuisance any? Not a bit. Therefore, the people having spoken, and with no uncertain sound, it is up to the Council to restore the old rates and have the original by-law enforced. Everything would be satisfactory if that were done. The increased tax simply punished innocent people and did not tend to abate the nuisance at all.

Telegrams from Ottawa say "appointments to the Senate still hang fire." Who will not exclaim "No place yet for that dearly-beloved, ambitious son of Thurlow!" Aye! Men may come and men may go, but credulous Than. hangs on forever.

• • •

Vacancies in the Canadian Senate have been numerous, since the "Bay Quinte Boy" affirms that promises were made by Sir Wilfrid and Sir Richard that he should have the seat made vacant after three of them had been filled. Many have joined the great majority, while others have been shelved by appointments to offices of emolument, yet he is left lingering behind in the race and, as the immortal William has it, "Lags superfluous on the stage." His interviews with the man of "sunny ways," and the solemn promises made him suggest certain touching words of Miss Landon. When emerging from the presence of that essence of politeness, Sir Wilfrid, "Than." might well have said,

"Alas, the praise given to the ear
Ne'er was, nor ne'er can be sincere."

• • •

Then, with virtuous indignation, after reflecting upon the many broken promises, his mind might well have run in another direction, and, when thinking of Laurier, he might have exclaimed, with Milton:

"He seemed
For dignity composed and high exploit,
But all was false and hollow."

Fidelity to party, regardless of its deception, led him with Christian fortitude, when falling into a dreamless slumber, to repeat a couplet from Young's "Night Thoughts":

"E'en the best must own patience and resignation are the pillows of human peace on earth."

"Tut! tut!" cried the imp who heard this refrain, "better quote from Lansdowne's "Heroic Love," it is more in character in the present case, and more in accord with your own case. Lansdowne says:

"Patience is the virtue of an ass,
That trots beneath his burden and is quiet."

Not a bit of it. The Thurlow sage is not yet "quiet," like that docile animal so graphically described in the couplet quoted. He partakes more of that mongrel, the mule, and kicks away most viciously, and proclaims from the door steps and about the streets, that the promise still holds good, and that when a certain venerable Senator, who is now enjoying life at an age exceeding 90, joins the great majority, he, the long expectant, shall fill the vacant chair. That, he declares, is beyond a peradventure, for the statesman of "sunny ways" told him so but a few weeks ago.

O, degenerate party, to what depths hath it sunk in its endeavors to appease the appetite of the hanger-on for office!

Is it not a crying shame that the wily and disingenuous Premier should keep his devoted admirer and follower so long in agony? Why not make him happy by fulfilling the promises made, or tell him honestly (if you possess that virtue), that he is not the man for Galway? Don't keep fooling him any longer, or he may make a vacancy before those whose seat he has been promised do. Fear not, Sir Wilfrid, you will not lose his support, no matter how much you may deceive him, you will still have him fawning upon you and exclaiming, with Hamlet—

"I will fight with you upon this theme,
Until my eyelids will no longer wag."

Even then, I will continue to tell the people from the house-top of the promises you made me of dead men's shoes.

• • •

On leaving the presence of the great man of "sunny ways," he cast a last lingering look of disappointment and despair, while the high-toned promiser muttered, as he closed the door, "The d——l go with you."

• • •

Did you notice how old man Hicks, the weather prophet, struck it correctly on January weather?

• • •

"Fair weather" said the probs. And this morning, we had a real old-time blizzard.

An item is going the rounds of the press just now, which might well be read and pondered over by every young Canadian. Here it is:

Young man, how have you used the past year, which has used you as well? It has been good to you in many ways. It has given you health and strength, it has kept you in steady employment at fairly good wages, and generally speaking you have had a pleasant time. Have you made the most of it? That is to say, are you a better man today, than you were at the beginning of last year? Have you improved the time or wasted it — in a word, helped to kill time? Have you cultivated your mind to any extent? Are your morals better or worse? How about your habits? You remember you had a few bad ones you were urged to get rid of twelve months ago. Have you done so? Or have they gripped you more firmer than ever? Outside your daily calling, are you doing anything to justify your existence? Are you trying in any way to make things better for others? Are you really satisfied with your life's work so far? Or are you deceiving yourself with the notion that after a while—not just yet—you will settle down and do your level best to live the life you ought to live, and do what you ought to do for others? We only go through this world once, and life at the longest is but short. So there is not a great deal of time to waste. No one but yourself can answer these questions for you. All you are asked to do is to sit down and try to honestly answer them for yourself. Will you do so.

Hamilton has raised the salaries of its teachers. Which is easy to do if the people can raise the money.

• • •

The inaugural meeting of the new Council takes place on Monday. The debutantes, it is said, will carry bouquets of white carnations.

Can everyone have a chairmanship in the Council of 1907? Well, if any of the new faces which will appear there this year Ald. Starling should be placed at the head of one of the departments. It will be remembered that he served as chairman of Fire, Water and Gas for a number of years in former Councils.

• • •

There is no little speculation among the municipal knowing ones of the city, as to who is to fill the aldermanic chairmanships during the coming year. One gentleman prognosticates the following as likely to be the slate. The Intelligencer's opinion is that whatever is done will be intended for the best. It is, some say, fortunate that there are ten committees, so that every alderman can call himself a chairman:

Executive—Marsh.
Public Works—Panter.
Gas—Green.
Fire—McCrodan or Starling.
Parks—Thompson or Vermilyea.
Printing and Advertising — McCrodan or Thompson.
Water—Starling or Vermilyea.
Market—Burrows.
Industries—Ackerman.
Entertainment (new committee)—Butler.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

SPORTING NOTES.

Picton Gazette: The Junior O.H.A. hockey team, who went yesterday to play a match with the Belleville team, barely escaped with their lives. Score 7-1 in favor of the Belleville team.

What is that—a joke or an attempt to class the Belleville players as savages? As a matter of fact, a cleaner or more gentlemanly game of hockey was never seen in any rink.

A Prince Albert hockey game started at three o'clock in the morning, when the home players got up out of bed and walloped Rosthern, who came in on a late train. Another case of the early bird catching the worm.

The local O.H.A. juniors are scheduled to play in Kingston next Monday. If they win that match they can pull out the district championship. Here's hoping.

Hockey results last night: Peterboro 7, Kingston 3; Varsity 13, McGill 5; Smith's Falls 6, Brockville Invincibles 4.

Jubilee won the free-for-all at Port Perry; best time 2.14 1-4. Minnie Bell captured the 2.25 trot; best time 2.24.

Two Cents a Mile.

Much has been heard lately about compulsory measures looking to the enforcement of an act making a two-cent. per mile rate the maximum on Canadian railways — at least in the eastern sections. The idea looked so tempting to a certain portion of the public that they applauded it without stopping to think whether it was fair or not. It was not to be supposed that the railways would sit idle and silent in the matter, and it is only natural, perhaps, that the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk railway companies have jointly issued in pamphlet form 'a few silent facts in concrete form on behalf of the railways in relation to the proposed two-cent per mile bill.' The public will appreciate this frankness and will study the facts thus presented in the open with a much greater desire to be convinced than if they had met them as anonymous paragraphs in company supporting newspapers. The pamphlet sets forth as an axiom that travel consists largely of pleasure seekers, and proceeds to state that during a third of the year, December, January, February, March, there is very little of such travelling, and that while the passenger earnings are the least, the operating expenses are the greatest. The railways must by law be kept open for traffic, although the expense of operating the passenger service during those months frequently exceeds the receipts. Specially we are told that it cost the Grand Trunk $1.25 to earn $1.00 from its passenger trains in February, 1905, and $1.04 to earn $1 in February, 1906. The Grand Trunk Company says further, that the average cost for the two years past from October to March was about 95 cents of each dollar of passenger train earnings, although the winter weather conditions were comparatively favorable for railway operation. It must be acknowledged that five cents is a very small margin of profit for half the year, and would want a good deal of making up in the summer months.

The general objection to a two-cent rate is, however, that the cost of passenger service has increased enormously within the past few years; wages have increased, fuel costs more passenger cars cost more, baggage cars cost more, sleeping cars cost more, locomotives cost more, cars are fifty per cent. heavier, trains are fifty per cent. heavier, heavier and more expensive rails are used, and so forth. The companies flatly deny the statement of the promoter of the bill that there has been no reduction in passenger rates in fifty years, but, supposing that that were true, the plea is urged that even then they should be commended for not increasing their rates to meet the increased cost of operation, everything which enters into the cost of operating a railway having increased from ten to fifty per cent. Another point of the companies is that it is unfair to expect in a sparsely-populated country the same rates as in a densely-populated one. Concretely it is shown that last year the State of Massachusetts earned from passenger traffic $37,399,209 on 4,962 single track miles, or $7,537 per mile of road, while Canadian railways only earned from passenger traffic $28,959,610 on 20,487 single track miles, or $1,413 per mile of road. On the same basis of population as the Massachusetts railways Canadian railways would have earned last year $154 410,519, instead of $28,959,650. The conclusion of the booklet, reinforced by many examples and useful information concerning railway matters, is that with much larger earnings, and many times the number of passengers carried on United States compared with Canadian railways, the injustice of attempting to force a maximum of two cents per mile on Canadian railways must be clear to every fair-minded person. Such is broadly the case of the railways, and they may be complimented upon the able way in which they have presented it. It is now for experts who take an opposite view to reply to this.

World's End Is To Come In Two Years.

York, Pa, Jan. 10. — It's all over, or soon will be. If you have enough money in the bank or in your clothes for two years, you might just as well quit work and have a good time. Something big is going to happen. In fact the world will come to an end within two years.

Lee J. Spangler foretold the death of President McKinley, Queen Victoria and Mark Hanna.

After an early morning 'try out' at the predicting game he said there would be war between the United States and Spain, England and the Transvaal, Russia and Japan.

The easiest thing he ever did was to tell about an earthquake going to destroy most of San Francisco.

Now he says the stars will fall in 1908; King Edward will pass away as the last King of England; New York will be destroyed by fire; Russia will lose her Czar; Turkey, her Sultan; prominent financiers will hang themselves; earthquakes innumerable will be, many towns will be destroyed; mothers-in-law will be arrayed against daughters-in-law and the world will be destroyed.

What's the use, anyway?

Here is what Spangler prophesied for 1906, only a few of which came true, but he did hit the earthquake in California and the eruption of Mount Vesuvius.

The dissolution of Russia.

The overthrow of Turkey.

The assassination of the Sultan of Turkey.

The prevention of three wars by President Roosevelt.

A protracted race war in the South.

Destructive spring floods in the United States.

A destructive eruption of Mt. Vesuvius.

The activity of Mount Pelee and Popocatapetl.

Volcanic eruptions in all parts of the world.

The eruption of many volcanoes now supposed to be extinct.

Great loss of life at sea by storms.

Destruction of two Western cities by cyclones.

Earthquakes in all parts of the world.

Destructive earthquakes in California and the Philippines.

Rebellion in Spain.

Great disturbances all over Europe.

Spangler said further that the summer of 1906 would be hot and sultry throughout the temperate zone with extensive death rate.

That the United States would continue as a world power and the leader of other nations.

That Pennsylvania was to have an administration of the people and that discoveries of corruption would be made which would drive some of the guilty to suicide.

That God would wreak terrible vengeance upon the Russians for the massacre of the Jews.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

FEW PEOPLE KNOW HOW USEFUL IT IS IN PRESERVING HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

COSTS NOTHING TO TRY.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics, in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says, "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

"Do you regard yourself as a reformer?" asked the friend.

Your Doctor

Can cure your Cough or Cold, no question about that, but—why go to all the trouble and inconvenience of looking him up, and then of having his prescription filled, when you can step into any drug store in Canada and obtain a bottle of SHILOH'S CURE for a quarter.

Why pay two to five dollars when a twenty-five cent bottle of SHILOH will cure you as quickly?

Why not do as hundreds of thousands of Canadians have done for the past thirty-four years: let SHILOH be your doctor whenever a Cough or Cold appears.

SHILOH will cure you, and all druggists back up this statement with a positive guarantee.

ANCIENT EMBALMING.

Not Only People but Animals Were Mummified in Egypt.

Myrrh, which was fabulously supposed to be the tears of Myrrha, who was turned into a shrub, was a plant of handsome appearance, with spreading, fernlike foliage and large umbels of white flowers. It was found principally in Arabia and Abyssinia. In early times the perfume distilled from it was greatly in requisition for embalming.

Herodotus gives a detailed account of the ancient mode of embalming, which is perhaps more instructive than pleasing. After the body had undergone much preparation, which, to spare your feelings, will not be described, it was filled with powdered myrrh, cassia and other perfumes. It was then steeped in natron, a strong solution of soda, for seventy days. After this it was wrapped in bands of fine perfumed linen, smeared with aromatic gums.

Not only people were thus embalmed, but the crocodiles of Lake Moeris, which, after their mummification, were decorated with ornaments and jewels and laid in one of the subterranean passages of the great labyrinth with much pomp and display. The sacred cat, ichneumon and other cherished animals devoutly worshiped by the Egyptians were embalmed with scrupulous and fanatical care. On days special to the memory of the dead the mummies were newly sprinkled with perfume, incense was offered before them and their heads anointed with fresh oil—in the same spirit as we lay new blooms upon the graves of our dead.

WHISTLER AS A TEACHER.

A Genius Who Showed Difficulty In Imparting His Knowledge.

Whistler was certainly a genius, but he showed some difficulty in imparting his knowledge. His criticisms were often foggy and uncertain, and he hardly ever found words in which to express himself. It was almost an impossibility to develop without becoming a slave and copying him in every way. With a majority of the students this was a dangerous method. If one came with a spark of originality it was extinguished immediately by the dominating personality of the master. He could see art only from his own standpoint, and he insisted on all of us using the same palette and the same brushes as himself and on our seeing all objects with his eyes. The result to an ordinary outsider was ridiculously monotonous.

I well remember a Frenchman who wanted to join the class coming to view some of the studies and then remarking, with an amused smile, "Vous avez beaucoup des petus Wheestlairs!" This was perfectly true of the majority, but there were a few matured men who hardly carried out Whistler's formulas as regards the palette and method, but who, owing to their more independent attitude, profited much by the criticisms.—Century.

Voting in Paris.

"In Paris only one-fifth of the voters go to the polls and cast their ballots," said an American who has lived in Paris as a business man for several years past. "This is not because they cannot vote, but because they do not care to. Everybody in the city is interested in politics, but when the time to vote comes few care to go to the polls. The man who wins is most often the man who promises everything. For instance, in my district last time a man was elected who promised to put a new shed on the market. I know of another deputy who was kept in office fifteen years because he promised to add an extra sardine to the daily rations of the soldiers. There are so many soldiers that that made a big difference. They did not get the sardine, but he continued to promise and kept office."

Man and Art.

In ancient times there stood in the citadel of Athens three statues of Minerva. The first was of olive wood and, according to popular tradition, had fallen from heaven. The second was of bronze, commemorating the victory of Marathon, and the third of gold and ivory—a great miracle of art in the days of Pericles. And thus in the citadel of time stands man himself. In childhood, shaped of soft and delicate wood, just fallen from heaven; in manhood a statue of bronze, commemorating struggle and victory, and, lastly, in the maturity of age, perfectly shaped in gold and ivory—a miracle of art!

Temper.

Temper itself is not a bad quality. It is not to be destroyed, as we sometimes say. Without temper a bar of steel becomes like lead. A man without temper is weak and worthless. We are to learn self control. A strong person is one who has a strong temper under perfect mastery. There is a deep truth here—that our mistakes and our sins, if we repent of them, will help in the growth and upbuilding of our character.

The world is like a staircase—some go up and others come down.—Italian Proverb.

Indigestion, constipation, some and go like rent and tax day and other sorrows, if you take Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea, the greatest remedy known to mankind. 35 cents, Tea or Tablets.—D. M. Waters.

A Simple Matter if Proper Attention Is Given to Details.

The making of the unlined shirt waist or blouse is a very simple matter if proper attention is given to the little details. It is most important that the pattern be laid on according to the thread of the material, especially in wash fabrics. Shirt waists are usually unlined, although those of silk and flannel are sometimes made with a lining.

If the shirt waist closes in the front, the right edge is generally finished by a box plait stitched on each edge. Buttonholes are worked through the center of this plait and buttons sewed to the left side, which is hemmed or finished by a lap. French seams are used, and the gathers are put in at the waist line according to the perforations in the pattern. The belt and peplum that is now used to finish the lower edge do away with any unnecessary fullness below the waist and give a trim appearance and smooth fit over the hips.

The making of the sleeves is usually considered by the amateur as the most difficult part of the waist. First the sleeve lining must be accurately cut and basted, care being taken that the corresponding notches come together, and then tried on to see that the elbow is in the right position. After the seams are stitched and pressed they should be bound with the seam binding. An interlining of crinoline about two inches wide should be placed in the lower edge. In sewing the sleeve in the armhole hold the waist so that the sleeve is toward you and bind with a bias strip of the lining.—Philadelphia Press.

A WIFE'S INFLUENCE.

The Effect of a Woman's Attitude Toward Her Husband.

"It seems to me that comparatively few wives understand the scope of their own influence. They are, as a rule, much more occupied by the influence on themselves of the husband's attitude," says Mary Stewart Cutting in Harper's Bazar. "A woman may be utterly disappointed, cast down, even tearful, because, after a day of toil, through all the tedious, dragging, wearisome details of which she has been upheld by the thought of her husband's home coming at night, he is himself tired, taciturn, oblivious of her. She may excuse, she may pity, she may sympathize, but the fact itself takes away just so much motive power of her own—takes away some necessary exhilaration that is the lubricating oil in those cogwheels of continuous effort. Yet this very woman will not realize the effect of her own attitude on her husband—how much of his motive business power is taken from him for the day because the hours in which he should have been rested and cheered have been filled with complainings and lamenting over situations which were not his to cope with and problems which he cannot work out."

THOUGHTS FOR GIRLS.

Your mother is your best friend.

Tell the pleasantest things you know when at meals.

Do not expect your brother to be as dainty as a girl.

Have nothing to do with girls who snub their parents.

Exercise and never try to look as if you were in delicate health.

Introduce every new acquaintance to your mother as soon as possible.

Enjoy the pleasures provided for you by your parents to the fullest extent.

Most fathers are inclined to overindulge their daughters. Make it impossible for your father to spoil you by fairly returning his affection and devotion.

Do not quarrel with your brother, do not preach to him, and do not coddle him. Make him your friend, and do not expect him to be your servant or let him expect you to be his.

Coronation Braid.

A group of women around a shop window were admiring a table centerpiece of great beauty. They pronounced it a most perfect specimen of laid work when one discovered that it was made with coronation braid in the pattern of loose sprays of wheat ears tied with a ribbon, a loop of the braid forming each kernel, with long stitches taken at the point. The ribbon was outlined with the braid couched long. The long space between the rows of braid was filled with cross stitch set closely together, as in shallow work. The whole could be done rapidly, but was as satisfactory as if days had been spent in setting stitches closely together. This braid can be adapted to other flower forms and leaves in an effective manner. The use of it is a legitimate way of shirking, which the most conscientious needle worker would approve.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Bloomer Trousers.

For the mothers who do their own sewing here is a method of making the bloomer trousers for small boys. One does not like the idea of an elastic in the bottom of the leg, as in order to hold it in place securely it must necessarily be tight enough to interfere with the circulation and to be very uncomfortable, especially in hot weather. Instead, finish the bottom with a band, comfortably loose, and in each seam sew a tape, in the other end of which make a buttonhole. The tapes are made the proper length so when those at the outside leg seams are buttoned to the side buttons of the waist and the others buttoned to the center front button the trousers are held securely in place, with no danger of slipping down, and the little man is comfortable.

Cut this out and take it to R. Templeton & Co.'s drug store and get a free sample of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. For biliousness and constipation they are unequalled. They improve the appetite, strengthen the digestion and regulate the liver and bowels.

You can tell a good deal about a man by the things that appeal to his sense of humor.

A man makes allowances for his faults, even though his wife may be one of them.

Set this day's work first and you shall not be ashamed if it should prove to be your last.

Why not get a better clerk—if the present one don't "make good?" Want-advertise for one.

There is nothing more pleasing than praise if it is honest and you believe you have earned it.

It's no use fussing about keeping the faith if you cannot keep your friends.

A Proven Cure For Indigestion

A healthy stomach does two things. 1st—gives up enough gastric juice to digest food—and 2nd—churns food, by means of its muscular action, until digestive juice and food are thoroughly mixed.

Thousands have been cured of Indigestion and Dyspepsia by "Fruit-a-tives" alone.

An unhealthy stomach is either too weak to properly churn the food or it does not give up enough gastric juice to make digestion complete.

Then you have Indigestion—Heartburn—Distress after Eating—Sour Stomach—Headaches—and finally chronic Dyspepsia.

"Fruit-a-tives" cure Indigestion and Dyspepsia because they give you a healthy stomach.

"Fruit-a-tives" actually strengthen the muscles of the stomach—increase the power of the churning movement—and also enable the stomach to excrete sufficient gastric juice to completely digest every meal.

"Fruit-a-tives" also cure the Constipation and Biliousness with which so many Dyspeptics suffer.

"Fruit-a-tives" are intensified fruit juices, combined with tonics and antiseptics—and are an infallible cure for all Stomach Troubles. Try them. 50c. a box—6 for $2.50. At all dealers or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

TIMELY TOPICS.

A SONG OF UNDOING.

(New York Times.)

I've pulled a million weeds or more and still they keep on growing;
I've shovelled off a block of walk and yet it keeps on snowing;
I breathed a lot of air in now — my lungs are such a bother,
No sooner is a breath gone out than
I take in another;
I put my foot down there just now—
what wisdom is there in it?
To walk I have to pick it up—a dozen times a minute;
It seems to me in all the world there's only trouble brewing
And half the time I spend is in undoing what I'm doing.

I might as well not go to bed, for think how great the blessing
Should I avoid the trouble both of dressing and undressing.
The tie that cost me such a lot of effort to make pretty
I must undo again to-night — now, isn't that a pity?
I fill my bin quite full of coal—a task
it was to earn it,
And then — what mockery it is — I have to go and burn it.
And all the winter days are spent in making ice from water
Which melts right back again as soon as the spring days get hotter!

I often wonder what's the use! A dollar bill—I make it,
And then no sooner is it made than
I must go and break it!
The maid who spreads my bed so smooth with not a cover crumpled Comes back another day to find the sheets and pillows rumpled!
My heart goes beating red blood out
—no sooner sets it going
Than it comes straightway back again! O, what a sorry showing Does human effort make, I vow! It's not at all uplifting
I've quite a mind to quit outright and let the world go drifting!

Many persons will be surprised to learn that the potato is used in France in the manufacture of imitation meerschaum pipes and "marble" billiard balls. After the potatoes are peeled they are kept for thirty-six hours in an 8 per cent. solution of sulphuric acid. They are then dried and pressed hard enough for use in making pipes. Under strong pressure they become solid enough to be turned into billiard balls.

Printers' ink is now being used by a number of cities that believe in advertising as a lever to lift them out of obscurity and stagnation. The city of Des Moines, Ia., is one of the latest to join the ranks of the advertising communities, its merchants having raised a substantial sum for a co-operative campaign, to cover a period of several years, with a view to informing the rest of the world as to its advantages as a place of residence and a centre of business activity. An experienced advertising man has been engaged to direct the expenditure of the appropriation, which will be largely devoted to newspaper advertising.

Pimples Stopped In 5 Days.

EVERY POSSIBLE SKIN ERUPTION CURED IN MARVELLOUSLY QUICK TIME BY THE NEW CALCIUM TREATMENT.

SEND FOR FREE SAMPLE PACKAGE TO-DAY.

Boils have been cured in three days, and some of the worst cases of skin diseases have been cured in a week, by the wonderful action of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. These wafers contain as their main ingredient, the most thorough, quick and effective blood cleanser known, calcium sulphide.

Most treatments for the blood and for skin eruptions are miserably slow in their results, and besides, many of them are poisonous. Stuart's Calcium Wafers contain no poison or drug of any kind; they are absolutely harmless, and yet do work which cannot fail to surprise you. They are the most powerful blood purifier and skin clearer ever discovered, and they never derange the system.

No matter what you suffer from, pimples, blackheads, acne, red rash, spots, blotches, rash, tetter or any other skin eruption, you can get rid of them long before other treatments can even begin to show results.

Don't go around with a humiliating, disgusting mass of pimples and blackheads on your face. A face covered over with these disgusting things makes people turn away from you, and breeds failure in your life work. Stop it. Read what an Iowa man said when he woke up one morning and found he had a new face:

"By George, I never saw anything like it. There I've been for three years trying to get rid of pimples and blackheads, and guess I used everything under the sun. I used your Calcium Wafers for just seven days. This morning every blessed pimple is gone and I can't find a blackhead. I could write you a volume of thanks, I am so grateful to you."

You can depend upon this treatment being a never-failing cure.

Just send us your name and address in full, to-day, and we will send you a trial package of Stuart's Calcium Wafers, free to test. THE WILD BALSAM APPLE.

Its Seed Holders Are Suggestive of Lace Purses.

In the brooks of autumn in certain places many little lacelike bags may be seen drifting along with the current or stranded by the shore. They are the inner coats or bodies of the wild balsam apples (Echinocystis lobata) which have dropped from the vines overhanging the stream and now float lightly away with their large seeds.

The green prickly bag of the balsam apple itself began to form in late summer, and by autumn it has withered and faded to a pale straw color. We may see the trailing vines with their shrunken pods decorating the brookside bushes far into the winter. The outer coat of the pod gradually rots away, and the inner bag or seed carrier is now released and exposed as a delicate, webby network of tough fibers. A thin skin or membrane fills up the space between these meshes, but that also falls away through the action of water and the winter storms until only the ball-like tissue of the "purse" is left. These little purses, being extremely light and buoyant, float far and wide over the submerged swamp lands in late autumn, carrying the seeds with them and so planting the vine in new situations. If, however, we take these seeds home with us and plant them there, Mother Earth will suitably reward us in the following year with vines of our own. They will spring up and spread rapidly until all the stone walls and garden fences are decorated with the tracery of their stems and star shaped leaves.

GOLD AND THE SEA.

Why the Metal Is Shipped In Bars Rather Than In Coin.

"When the banks ship gold across the Atlantic," said a banker, "they prefer to ship it in bars rather than in coin. It loses less that way."

"It loses less?"

"Yes, sir. If $1,000,000 in gold coins is shipped across the sea it is only $999,800 on its arrival. It loses from twelve to fifteen ounces, about $200, through abrasion, through knocking about with the motion of the waves. The sea makes gold lose weight, you see, the same as it does human beings. Gold bars lose less. In fine weather they will only lose about $100 to each million. In the ugliest weather they don't lose over $150, whereas in like conditions gold coins have been known to lose $300. As gold shipments of $10,000,000 often occur, to make these shipments in gold bars instead of gold coin is a saving of $1,000 or more. It is odd to think when you cross in one of those gold laden ships that every wave that hits the boat clips off 10 to 15 cents from its golden cargo."

Cruel, but Necessary.

The Eskimos dread the winter and take early precautions to provide against famine. As the season approaches the great herds of reindeer migrate southward, and the walrus or the seal are all that remain for food. When an in wind is blowing the walrus is easily found on the outer edge of the ice packs. When it is blowing off the shore, however, the ice packs sail out to sea with the walruses on them. The natives then class their numbers in a list from the strongest to the weakest. The food that is in store is divided up, the weakest having the smallest quantity, the strongest the largest. Thus the mightiest hunters have strength to provide for the others. It is a cruel system, but nevertheless a necessary one. If all were weak, all would die; if some are strong, they will save many of the weak.

The Largest Pipe.

What is described as the largest pipe in the world is valued at £8,000 and is counted as one of the most remarkable pieces of carving in existence. The pipe is made of one solid piece of meerschaum and represents the landing of Columbus. There are twenty-four figures in the scene, each one four inches high. The carver who executed this masterpiece is dead, and, as the demand for this sort of work has nearly died out, it is practically impossible to find a man to duplicate it.—London Telegraph.

Mouth Ulcers.

Little ulcers that appear in the mouth from time to time are exceedingly annoying and painful. An old fashioned household remedy is alum, the powder or crystals being applied to the yellow center. But this is a bitter, nasty dose. A physician has prescribed the use of a saturated solution of potassium chlorate, applied every two hours. "Saturated solution" means as much potassium chlorate as can be dissolved in a certain amount of water.

Lepers and the Law.

The Norman-English laws enacted that a leper had neither power to sue in any court nor to inherit property. During his lifetime he was permitted to enjoy the usufruct of any property in his possession at the time he was "found guilty," so to speak, of leprosy, but all rights of disposition over it be lost.

CHAPTER XXIV.

CONSTANCE EMORY and her mother, waiting quietly in their home, heard the cheers when the noise from Dan's shrieking engine reached the crowd of desperate men on the square. Then presently they heard the rattle and clash of the fire engines as they were dragged through the street and were aware that the relief train had arrived, but it was not until the doctor came in some time long after midnight that they knew who had been the savior of the town.

"It's all over, dear. The fire is under control," he said cheerfully, addressing his wife. "I guess we can go to bed now and feel pretty sure we won't be burned out before morning."

Constance put down the book she had been trying to read and rose tiredly and stiffly from her chair beside the table.

"Then the train did come, after all?" she said.

"Yes, but not a moment too soon. I tell you we can't be grateful enough. I've been with Oakley and his father. That's what kept me," he explained.

"Oakley!" Constance cried in amazement. "You don't mean"—

"Yes. Didn't you know that it was Oakley and his father who brought the relief train? The old man is dead. He was killed on the way. It's a miracle that either of them got through alive. Hadn't you heard?"

Constance put out her hands blindly, for a sudden mist had come before her eyes.

"Father, you don't mean that Mr. Oakley has returned to Antioch—that he is here now?"

"Yes, it seems no one else would come. Oakley was in Chicago when he first heard of the fire and started immediately for Buckhorn, where he found the relief train. Oddly enough, he found his father there too."

"Then there was something to the old man after all," said Mrs. Emory, whose sympathies were as generous as they were easily aroused.

"A good deal, I should say. He must have known that he was coming back to arrest and almost certain conviction."

Constance's glance searched her father's face. She wanted to hear more of Oakley. Her heart was hungering for news of this man who had risked his life to save them. All her lingering tenderness, the unwilling growth of many days, was sweeping away the barriers of her pride. "Mr. Oakley was not hurt?" she questioned breathlessly, pale to the lips.

"He is pretty badly shaken up, and no wonder, but he will be all right in the morning."

"Where is he now?" she asked.

Her father turned to her.

"Oakley— You look tired out, Constance. Do go to bed. I'll tell you all about it in the morning."

"Where is he now, papa?" she questioned, going to his side and clasping her hands about his arm.

"Down at the shop. They carried his father there from the train."

"Why didn't you have them bring him here?" said Mrs. Emory quickly. "After this I won't listen to a word against either of them. I would like to show the town just how we feel in the matter."

"I suggested it, but Oakley wouldn't hear to it. But don't worry about the town. It's gone wild. You should have seen the crowd on the platform when it saw Oakley in the engine cab. It went stark mad."

Again Constance's eyes swam with tears. The strike, the murder of Ryder, the fire, had each seemed in turn a part of the tragedy of her life at Antioch, but Oakley's return was wholly glorious.

Her father added, "I shall see Oakley in the morning and learn if we can be of any service to him."

A little later, when Constance went to her own room, she drew forward a chair and seated herself by the window. Across the town, on the edge of the "flats," she saw dimly the long, dark outline of the railroad shop, with its single tall chimney. She thought of Oakley as alone there keeping watch at the side of the grim old murderer who had so splendidly redeemed himself by this last sacrifice.

Great clouds of black smoke were still rolling over the town, and the woods were still blazing fiercely in the distance. Beyond her window she heard the call of frightened birds as they fluttered to and fro in the dull red light, and farther off, in the north end, the muffled throbbing of the fire engines.

If she had had any doubts as to her feeling for Oakley these doubts were now a thing of the past. She knew that she loved him. She had been petty and vain. She had put the small things of life against the great, and this was her punishment. She tried to comfort herself with the thought that she should see him in the morning. Then she could tell him all. But what could she tell him? The time had gone by when she could tell him anything.

It was almost morning when she undressed and threw herself down on her bed. She was disconsolate and miserable, and the future seemed quite barren of hope or happiness. Love had come to her, and she had not known its presence. Yes, she would tell Oakley that she had been little and narrow and utterly unworthy. He had cared for her, and perhaps he would understand. She fell asleep thinking this and did not waken until her mother called her for breakfast.

"I am waiting for your father. He has gone down to see Mr. Oakley," Mrs. Emory said when she entered the dining room. Constance glanced at the table.

"Is he going to bring Mr. Oakley back with him?" she asked nervously.

"He expected to. I declare, Constance, you look worn out. Didn't you sleep well?"

"No, not very. I wonder if they are coming?"

"You might go look," said her mother. And Constance hurried into the parlor. She was just in time to see her father enter the gate. He was alone. Constance flew to the front door and threw it open.

"He wouldn't come?" she cried breathlessly.

"He's gone."

"Gone?"

"Yes, a train was made up early this morning, and he has returned to Buckhorn— Why, what's the matter, Constance?"

For Constance, with a little gasp of dismay, had slipped down into a chair, with her hands before her face.

"What is it, dear?" he questioned anxiously. But she gave him no answer. She was crying softly, unrestrainedly. It was all over. Oakley was gone, and with him went her only hope of happiness. Yet more keen than her sense of pain and personal loss was her regret that he would never understand that she respected and admired him as he deserved.

"I am sorry, Constance, but I didn't know that you especially wanted to see him," said the doctor awkwardly, but with a dawning comprehension of what it all meant. She made no answer.

"What is it, dear?" he repeated.

"Oh, nothing. I wanted to tell him about something, that is all. It doesn't matter now." She glanced up into his face with a sudden doubt. "You didn't see him; you are quite sure he went away without your seeing him; you are not deceiving me?"

"Why, of course, Constance, but he'll come back."

"No, he won't, papa," shaking her head sadly. "He's gone, and he will never come back. I know him better than you do."

And then she fled promptly upstairs to her own room.

This was the nearest Constance came to betraying her love for Oakley. She was not much given to confidences, and the ideals that had sustained her in her pride now seemed so childish and unworthy that she had no wish to dwell upon them, but whenever Dan's name was mentioned in her presence she looked frightened and guilty and avoided meeting her father's glance.

It seemed, indeed, that Oakley had taken final leave of Antioch. A new manager appeared and took formal charge of the destinies of the road. Under his direction work was resumed in the shops, for the strike had died a natural death. None of the hands was disposed to question the 10 per cent cut, and before the winter was over the scale of wages that had been in force before the strike was inaugurated was voluntarily restored. The town had no criticisms to make of Johnson, the new manager, a quiet, competent official; the most any one said was that he was not Oakley. That was enough. For Dan had come into his own.

Early in October there was a flutter of excitement when Turner Joyce and his wife left for the east to be Oakley's guests. When they returned some weeks later they had a good deal to say about him that Antioch was frankly curious to hear.

He had taken his father to Burton, where his mother was buried. Afterward he had joined General Cornish in New York.

While abroad the financier had effected a combination of interests which grouped a number of roads under one management, and Dan had been made general superintendent of the consolidated lines, with his headquarters in New York city. The Joyces were but vaguely informed as to where these lines were, but they did full justice to their magnitude, as well as to the im-

she might hear from Oakley. She even thought the Joyces might bring her some message, but none had come. Dan had taken her at her word.

She had made no friends, and, with Ryder dead and Oakley gone, she saw no one and finally settled down into an apathy that alarmed the doctor. He, after some deliberation, suddenly announced his intention of going east to attend a medical convention.

"Shall you see Mr. Oakley?" Constance asked, with quick interest.

"Probably, if he's in New York when I get there."

Constance gave him a scared look and dropped her eyes. But when the time drew near for his departure she followed him about as if there were something on her mind which she wished to tell him.

The day he started she found courage to ask:

"Won't you take me with you, papa?"

"Not this time, dear," he answered.

She was quiet for a moment and then said:

"Papa, you are not going to tell him?"

"Tell who, Constance. What?"

"Mr. Oakley."

"What about Oakley, dear?"

She looked at him from under her long lashes, while the color slowly mounted to her cheeks.

"You are not going to tell him what you think you know?"

The doctor smiled.

"I wish you would grant me the possession of ordinary sense, Constance. I am not quite a fool."

"You are a precious," she said, kissing him.

"Thank you. What message shall I give Oakley from you?"

"None."

"None?"

"He won't want to hear from me"—shyly.

"Why not?"

"Because he just won't, papa. Besides, I expect he has forgotten that such a person ever lived."

"I wouldn't be too sure of that. What was the trouble, Constance? You'd better tell me, or I may say something I shouldn't."

"Oh, you must not say anything"—in alarm—"you must promise."

"Constance, what did Oakley say to you that last day he was here at the house?"

Constance's glance wandered meditatively from her father's face to the window and back again, while her color came and went. There was a faraway, wistful look in her eyes and a sad little smile on her lips. At last she said softly: "Oh, he said a number of things. I can't remember now all he did say."

"Did Oakley tell you he cared for you?"

Constance hesitated a moment, then, reluctantly:

"Well, yes, he did. And I let him go, thinking I didn't care for him," miserably and with a pathetic droop of her lids, from which the smile had fled. "I didn't know, and I have been so unhappy!"

"Oh!"

Constance left the room abruptly.

When he reached New York the first thing the doctor did was to look up Oakley. He was quick to notice a certain constraint in the young man's manner as they shook hands, but this soon passed off.

"I am awfully glad to see you," he had said. "I have thought of you again and again, and I have been on the point of writing you a score of times. I haven't forgotten your kindness to me."

"Nonsense, Oakley. I liked you, and it was a pleasure to me to be able to show my regard," responded the doctor, with hearty good will.

"How is Mrs. Emory and Miss Emory?"

"They are both very well. They were just a little hurt that you ran off without so much as a goodby."

Oakley gave him a quick glance.

"She is—Miss Emory is still in Antioch?"

The doctor nodded.

"I didn't know but what she might be in the city with you," Dan explained, with evident disappointment.

"Aren't we ever going to see you in Antioch again?" inquired the doctor. He put the question with studied indifference. Dan eagerly scanned his face. The doctor fidgeted awkwardly.

"Do you think I'd better go back?" he asked, with a perceptible dwelling on the "you."

The doctor's face became a trifle red. He seemed to weigh the matter carefully, then he said.

"Yes; I think you'd better. Antioch would like mightily to lay hands on you."

Dan laughed happily.

"You don't suppose a fellow could dodge all that, do you? You see, I was going west to Chicago in a day or so, and I had thought to take a run on to Antioch. As a matter of fact, Cornish wants me to keep an eye on the shops. They are doing well, you know, and we don't want any falling off. But, you understand, I don't want to get let in for any fool hysterics," he added impatiently.

Notwithstanding the supposed confidence in which telegrams are transmitted, Brown, the day man at Antioch, generally used his own discretion in giving publicity to any facts of local interest that came under his notice. But when he wrote off Dr. Emory's message announcing that he and Oakley were in Chicago and would arrive in Antioch the last of the week he held it for several hours, not quite knowing what to do. Finally he delivered it in person, a sacrifice of official dignity that only the exigencies of the occasion condoned in his eyes. As he handed it to Mrs. Emory he said:

"It's from the doctor. You needn't be afraid to open it; he's all right. He'll be back Saturday night, and he's bringing Mr. Oakley with him. I came up to see if you had any objection to my letting the town know."

Mrs. Emory saw no reason why the knowledge of Oakley's return should be withheld, and in less than half an hour Antioch, with bated breath, was discussing the news on street corners and over back fences.

That night the town council met in secret session to consider the weighty matter of his reception, for by common consent it was agreed that the town must take official action. It was suggested that he be given the freedom of the city. This sounded large and met with instant favor, but when the question arose as to how the freedom of the city was conferred the president turned, with a slightly embarrassed air, to the member who had made the motion. The member extunately Antioch had no city keys to deliver. The only keys that by any stretch of the imagination could be so called were those of the courthouse, and they were lost.

Here an appeal was made to the Hon. Jeb Barrows, who was usually called in to straighten out any parliamentary tangles in which the council became involved. That eminent statesman was leaning dreamily against a pillar at the end of the council chamber. On one of the cards he had already penciled the brief suggestion, "Feed him and have out the band." He handed the card to the president, and the council heaved a sigh of relief. The momentous question of Oakley's official reception was settled.

When Dan and Dr. Emory stepped from No. 7 Saturday night the station platform was crowded with men and boys. The brass band, which Antioch loved with a love that stifled criticism, perspiring and in dire haste, was turning the street corner half a block distant. Across the tracks at the railroad shops a steam whistle shrieked an ecstatic welcome.

Dan glanced at the doctor with a slightly puzzled air.

"What do you suppose is the matter?" he asked unsuspiciously.

"Why, man, don't you understand? It's you!"

There was no need for him to say more, for the crowd had caught sight of Dan and a hundred voices cried:

"There he is! There's Oakley!"

And in an instant Antioch, giving way to wild enthusiasm, was cheering itself black in the face, while above the sound of cheers and the crash of music the steam whistle at the shops shrieked and pealed.

The blood left Oakley's face. He looked down at the crowd and saw Turner Joyce. He saw McClintock and Holt and the men from the shops, who were, if possible, the noisiest of all. He turned helplessly to the doctor.

"Let's get out of this," he said between his teeth. The crowd and the noise and the excitement recalled that other night when he had ridden into Antioch. As he spoke he swung himself down from the steps of the coach, and the crowd closed about him with a glad shout of welcome.

The doctor followed more slowly. As he gained the platform the Hon. Jeb Barrows hurried to his side.

"Where is he to go, Doc?" he panted. "To your house or to the hotel?"

"To my house."

"All right, then. The crowd's spoiling the whole business. I've got an address of welcome in my pocket that I was to have delivered, and there's to be a supper at the rink tonight. Don't let him get away from you."

Meanwhile Dan had succeeded in extricating himself from the clutches of his friends and was struggling toward a closed carriage at the end of the platform that he recognized as the Emorys'.

In his haste and the dusk of the dull October twilight he supposed the figure he saw in the carriage to be the doctor, who had preceded him, and called to the man on the box to drive home.

As he settled himself he said reproachfully:

"I hope you hadn't anything to do with this."

A slim, gloved hand was placed in his own, and a laughing voice said:

"How do you do, Mr. Oakley?"

He glanced up quickly and found himself face to face with Constance Emory.

There was a moment's silence, and then Dan said, the courage that had brought him all the way to Antioch suddenly deserting him:

"It's too bad, isn't it? I had hoped I could slip in and out of town without any one being the wiser."

"But you can't," with a little air of triumph. "Antioch is going to entertain you. It's been in a perfect furor of excitement ever since it knew you were coming back."

"Well, I suppose there is no help for it," resignedly.

"Where is my father, Mr. Oakley?"

"I guess we left him behind," with sudden cheerfulness. He leaned forward so that he could look into her face.

"Constance, I have returned because I couldn't stay away any longer. I tried to forget, but it was no use."

She had withdrawn her hand, but he had found it again, and now his fingers closed over it and held it fast. He was feeling a sense of ownership.

"There he is! There's Oakley!"

"Did you come to meet me?" he asked.

"I came to meet papa."

"But you knew I was coming too."

"Oh, no!"

It was too dark for him to see the color that was slowly mounting to her face.

"Constance, I don't believe you," he cried.

"I was not sure you were coming," Constance said weakly.

"You might have known that I'd come back—that I couldn't stay away."

"Don't you think you have been a long time in making that discovery?"

"Well, yes, but when I saw your father"—

"What did papa say to you?" with keen suspicion in her tones.

Constance freed her hand and, shrinking into a corner, covered her face. She had a painful realization of the direction those confidences must have taken between her father, who only desired her happiness, and the candid Oakley, who only desired her love.

"Was there any use in my coming? You must be fair with me now. It's too serious a matter for you not to be."

"You think I was not fair once?"

"I didn't mean that, but you have changed."

"For the better, Mr. Oakley?"

"Infinitely," with blunt simplicity.

"You haven't changed a scrap. You are just as rude as you ever were."

Dan cast a hurried glance from the window.

"Constance, we won't have much more time to ourselves; we are almost home. Won't you tell me what I have come to hear—that you do care for me and will be my wife? You know that I love you. But you mustn't send me from you a second time without hope."

"I shouldn't think you would care about me now. I wouldn't care about you if you had been as unworthy as I have been," her voice faltered. "I might have shown you that I, too, could be brave, but I let the opportunity pass, and now, when every one is proud"—

"My darling!"

"But I do care. I care a great deal, for I love you just as I have loved you from the very first."

She put out both her hands.

"If you had only looked back when you left the house that day you told me you cared"—

"What, Constance?"

"I was at the window. I thought you'd surely look back, and then you would have known"—

"My darling!"

The carriage had drawn up to the Emorys' gate.

Dan jumped out and gave Constance his hand. Off in the distance they heard the band. Constance paused and rested her hand gently on Oakley's arm.

"Hark! Do you hear?"

"I wish they'd stop their confounded nonsense," said Dan.

"No, you can't stop them," delightedly. "Antioch feels a sense of proprietorship. But do you hear the music, Dan?"

"Yes, dear. It's the band."

"Of course it's the band. But do you know what it is playing?"

Oakley shook his head dubiously. She gave his arm a little pat and laughed softly.

"It might be difficult to recognize it, but it's the bridal march from 'Lohengrin.'"

"If they stick to that I don't care, Constance."

And side by side they went slowly and silently up the path to the house.

THE END.

The Ruby.

There are four degrees of merit in the ruby class. The first is the deep blood red oriental ruby—the "cochineal red"—pure, suggestive, without admixture of the brown or violet. The second is the spinel, almost as beautiful as the oriental, but a shade less rich, less supreme in color. The third is the balas, a rose red ruby, valuable in proportion to its depth of tint and esteemed perfect only when it attains a certain size and weight. A small pale balas ruby is of very meager value. The fourth is the almandine, or rubicele, of a yellowish red, oftentimes tinged with brown. The Brazilian topaz is not infrequently made to pass for balas ruby. It is heated in a crucible filled with sand, which drives off the yellow and fills in the rose red tint of the balas ruby. Garnets, too, have often done duty for rubies, and many a writer has confounded garnets, rubies and carbuncles all in a heap together.

WOMAN'S WORLD

COUNTESS OF CARLISLE.

The Peeress Who Is President of the World's W. C. T. U.

Lady Rosalind Frances, countess of Carlisle, president of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance union, is also president of the British Woman's Temperance association and has been for many years an aggressive temperance worker and one of the leading members of the Woman's Liberal Federation of Great Britain, of which organization she was president for several terms. While Lady Carlisle is active in all movements for the betterment of the status of her sex, temperance is her greatest cause, and she it was who led and directed the recent crusade against the employment of women in England as barmaids.

The Countess of Carlisle is the youngest daughter of Lord Stanley of Alderly and in 1864 was married to the Earl of Carlisle of the Norfolk and Howard families. The earl and countess have five sons and five daughters and reside at Palace Green, Kensington. The countess is ably supported by the earl in all her philanthropic measures.

THE COUNTESS OF CARLISLE.

The history of the work of Lady Carlisle would be the history of the woman's suffrage movement in England up to the present time. She has done more than any other woman to create what is now of considerable political importance—the Woman's Liberal federation—and she is constantly agitating for the rights of her sex. She is a great favorite with all who know her, and she combines with social prominence and personal ability and charm the quality of being a joyous fighter.

Buying the Dining Room Table.

The incident was an amusing one, but the old lady's advice was good, and it was accepted, says the St. Joseph Gazette. She was not talking without her book, as the old saying has it.

"Don't buy that square table for the dining room, young people," she observed pleasantly, addressing the couple who were evidently preparing for the great event of their lives. The salesman of the furniture warehouse looked on with just a flicker of a smile hovering about his lips. "They call them 'square,' but they are usually oblong, you know," she added, with a sagacious nod.

"Why not buy a square table?" ventured the future bridegroom, entering into the spirit of the thing.

"I'll tell you," responded the old lady decidedly. "Of course, you are beginning in a small way. Oh, don't be ashamed of that! We commenced in a small way, but we worked steadily, and we are in a large way now, as I hope you will be one day. Well, in a small house you have small rooms. You find that you cannot have a big table. If you have a square one you find it awkward when you have more than two visitors. There are two sides and two ends to your square table, and so that's all right for four persons, but if there are three or four visitors what then?"

She paused almost in triumph. The young people waited for her to answer her own question.

"You get two persons on each of the two sides and you feel crowded at the side, while those at the end have really more room than they require. It's inconvenient. Then, again, the corners seem to divide you into groups, so to say. Chimney corners may be social enough, but tables corners are not. If you are in a big place, with a big table, it is quite different, but in your little house you will find it just as I say.

"Therefore buy an oval table. There are no corners and you all sit side by edge, where people sit, is increased. You have a little less space for placing dishes, but you can easily have those on a side table. You can't seat a guest at a side table when you are only a small party.

"A round table would be better? No. Round tables are usually not so firm on the legs, and to get a good sized table requires more width than you are likely to get in your small house. Take my advice!"

Bathroom Wall Paper.

It has been said that a well equipped bathroom is the hallmark of respectability, and the color and condition of a bathroom's walls go a long way toward making or marring that equipment. Blessed is the housekeeper who can afford to have her walls tiled from floor to ceiling! For less favored mortals, who put up with tiling and paper, wainscoting and paper, or even paper all the way, that paper is of paramount importance. Some persons like [illegible] paper. Others say that its place is the kitchen, not the bathroom, but whatever your preferences along this line make the color light. Get a glazed paper, and if from lack of wainscot or tile it must stand the splash of water, give it a coat of white varnish. Avoid elaborate patterns. A white background is always good. Designs of long stemmed, long leaved flowers, running lengthwise, are effective, especially when carried over the ceiling. Confine yourself to blues, greens or purples in the coloring of your designs and you will find the effect cooler, cleaner and more suggestive of the water.

Style and Comfort.

How many rooms there are, correct and beautiful, which fail of being lovable! Everything is perfect. Some "period" has been carried out faultlessly by a professional interior decorator of big reputation, with the result that the room has style and distinction, is coldly, correctly exquisite or magnificent, and yet no one would voluntarily choose that room to live in. No one would deliberately elect to spend a delightful afternoon in it with a novel. No one would dream of repairing to it for the purpose of being unmitigatedly lazy. The fact is art and comfort are not synonymous terms by any means. Many an artistic room is uninteresting, cold and characterless because it bears no stamp of personality, yet correct style and comfort can and ought to go hand in hand.

The Sleeve Pattern.

Before altering a sleeve pattern the arm should be measured from the arm scye to the bend and thence to the wrist; also from the back of the arm to the point of the elbow and thence to the wrist. Then measure the pattern and make the alterations. If the sleeve is too long between the top of the arm and the elbow place a tuck through the pattern. If it should be too long between the elbow and the wrist place a tuck there also, making the sleeve the required length. If, on the contrary, the pattern should be too short cut it through just where it is necessary, either above or below, allowing for space to give the desired length.

Sunday Dyspepsia.

"Sunday dyspepsia—that is what you have," said the doctor, smiling.

"Sunday dyspepsia?"

"Yes, and it is not a rare complaint either. It is due to this bad habit of eating foolishly and gluttonously on Sunday. Through the week you eat like a sensible man—a moderate breakfast early, a light luncheon and a good, substantial dinner at the end of the day. But on Sunday you eat a heavy breakfast at 10 or 11. At 1 you sit down to an enormous dinner, stuffing yourself without appetite, and at 6:30, when you are really hungry, you eat light, unsatisfactory food, like Saratoga chips and lettuce sandwiches—in a word, a Sunday supper. The results of this change for the worse, made once a week by millions of men, is Sunday dyspepsia, an ailment for which I always prescribe a 6 o'clock Sunday dinner."—New York Press.

Self Respect.

There is no one thing so necessary for one's real advancement in life as a thorough self respect. You must think well of yourself, or others will not respect you.

Stomach and bowel troubles make children cross and sleepless, and a dose of Baby's Own Tablets soon cures the trouble, the child sleeps soundly and naturally, and wakes up bright and smiling. Mrs. J. Every Nurse will tell you "Invalids require nourishment that's easily digested, for in cases of sickness the gastric juices are so weakened they cannot act properly on ordinary foods."

Some stimulation is also required, but it must be stimulation without reaction. Tea, coffee, spiritous drinks and similar preparations, are stimulants—stimulants that react.

Beef tea and meat extracts are also stimulants, but with this difference, they don't react. Yet while they have stimulating properties, they are practically devoid of nourishment.

"Bovril" not only stimulates but nourishes as well, for in it the nourishing qualities of beef, fibrine and albumen are fully preserved.

To-morrow's International Sunday School Lesson.

MAN MADE IN THE IMAGE OF GOD—GOLDEN TEXT: "GOD CREATED MAN IN HIS OWN IMAGE."

In our last lesson we studied the making of the world and its inhabitants, gradually growing from lower to higher, till we came to the highest animals on the sixth day. It required all this previous preparation of earth and sky, of vegetable and animal life, before the world was prepared for the highest and noblest of earthly created creatures.

Gen. 2: 4-7. In the first story of creation we have the general statement of the work of God on the sixth day, that God made man. But in a second story we have a detailed account of his creation.

Gen. 1: 26, 27; 2: 7. On the second half of the sixth day, the last and greatest act of creation. 26. And God said, Let us make man. The us may be the plural of dignity such as rulers use in their public proclamations, implying some connection with the State; but in addition probably Dillmann's explanation is correct: "To the Hebrew who names God in the plural, God is the living personal combination of a fulness of energies and powers. . . . . 'We' seems to be here employed because the matter now in hand is the communicating to men the fulness of the divine powers." "We have to admit that God the Father is comprising Himself either with the Son and the Spirit, or with celestial spirits." Man, "in the collective sense." The beginning of the human race, the first man. In our image, after our likeness. "Image and likeness, two words of nearly the same import, are used to express the thought more fully and strongly than could be done by any single term." "This kindness cannot refer to physical likeness, because God is a spirit, and no physical likeness can exist of God. The references to God in this chapter prove that there was in the mind of the writer no low view of God, as having a human form. Man's soul is like God, a spiritual personality with intellect, memory, reason, self-determining will, conscience, emotions, moral and religious faculties, immortality."

It is because of this likeness that man can know God, and God can make Himself known to man.

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." (Gen. 2, 7.)

God formed his body of the dust of the ground. Note that it does not say how God formed man out of the dust; it simply states the fact. When wise men say "that clay is taken and moulded into the form of a man," "a clay figure," like that in the Greek story of Prometheus, who out of clay forms the human body, and gives life to it by means of a spark stolen from the gods, or their story of life given to Pygmalion's ivory statue—they simply read into the narrative what [illegible], as I used to when a boy. The bodies of men as well as of animals are to this day formed out of the dust as really was the body of the first man; for they "consist" of the very same elements as the soil which forms the crust of the earth." All that we eat is made of the dust of the earth, and the same elements as the dust, derived from the air.

His living soul was created in man by God. 27. So God created man. He formed his body, but he created his spirit, made in the image of God. He put into man something that was not in the world before.

(Gen. 2: 7.) Breathed into his nostrils the breath of life. This means more than the inbreaking of aniin the case of animals, it would seem that in it is meant to consist the specific pre-eminence of man over the animals, that which in vs. 26-27 is called the image of God, i.e., that by this inbreathing, affecting man personally, is meant the communication, not merely of the physical, but, at the same time, of the mental vitality of man, the communication of the spirit."

Male and female created he them, both alike are made in the image of God, both alike are His children. How He made them is told in the second story. (Gen. 2: 18, 21-24.) It was not good that man should be alone. None of the animal creation, not even the highest ape, was near enough to him to be his companion, and the mother of the new human race. No man could develop into his best while alone. Either it would be necessary to create a woman in the same way as Adam was created, or in some other and better way to supply the needed companion.

While Adam was in a deep sleep the Lord God took one of his ribs, and from it made or rather built up, a woman, bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh.

Vs. 28-31. 28. And God blessed them, by giving them children, and dominion, and noble work and food. It would be a blessing, a happiness to live. The joy of God himself was bestowed upon his children. Be fruitful. As God delighted in his work of creation so that "the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy" (Job 38: 7), so he would have his children blessed in filling the earth with people. If it was good for them, it was good to have the whole world filled full of happy and holy beings enjoying the good things he has made. It was also a blessing to them, for children are a great blessing in a family. Their presence cultivates every virtue and adds to every true joy. Family life is best also for the children. And have dominion over the fish . . . and . . . every living thing. These are by nature subordinate to man: and by his higher nature man would have the power to benefit the lower animals, supply them with food and care, and give them a larger usefulness and a higher and happier life than they could have without man. This is true of all well-cared-for domestic animals to-day. "Man's relation to the beasts is that of Providence," says George Adam Smith. Every true ruler must rule for the good of the governed. The evolution of animals is greatly hastened by the skill of man. And subdue it. "Bring it under cultivation, master all its forces, possess themselves of its resources, subject it and all that it contains to their use. This, man is gradually learning to do in the advancement of knowledge and the progress of science and the arts."

Marvellous as has been man's control over the forces of nature, beyond seer's vision, or poet's imagination, yet man has even now attained to but a small portion of the treasures of his kingdom, a few grains from the harvest, a few drops from the measureless ocean. But as he regains the image of God, he will gain his dominion over all nature. For it is written on the history of the world that only so fast and far as man becomes filled with the spirit of Christianity does he hold dominion over animals, or make the earth his servant. And it is well that it is so, for, if a savage race could wield the powers of civilization, it would be as dangerous as for children to play with firearms, or dynamite, or electrical machinery.

"What an education for the race has been this labor of subduing the earth! How it has developed reflection, stimulated invention, and quickened the powers of combination, which would otherwise have lain dormant! Hence arises the right of property, the origin and bond of civil society; and thus all the blessings of society and of civilization and government are due to the divinely implanted impulse, 'Fill the earth, and subdue it.'"

This command, the impulse to dominion, and to subduing the earth, was even more essential to the earliest man than it is to-day

Gen. 2: 1-3. The condition and means by which man can best realize his mission and character as the child of God. This story belongs to the first chapter, and the division into chapters should so have included it.

2. And on the seventh day God ended (finished, completed) his work of creation. The world was done, as far as creative energy was concerned. "Against the introduction of new species in coming time science has little to urge. . . . Science has made known that the highest species next to Man, that is, the brute Mammals, have already passed their maximum; hence, the rest of time remains for the culmination of the only higher type, that of Man. And, as this type includes now but one species, we have reason for expecting no new species in the future. . . . A different species of Man higher than existing Man is not a possibility." His work. "When the name work is given to God's six days' creation human work is ennobled to the highest conceivable degree, as being the copy of this model." He rested on the seventh day. He rested as creator. From that time till to-day God has been doing in his large way what he would have his children do, in their small sphere, on the Sabbath. He has been guiding and developing, teaching, training and caring for his creation both material and spiritual. While the material has not been neglected, but has gained in almost equal upward progress with the spiritual, the great work of God has been, and is, for man, the moral, intellectual and religious progress of man, toward the completed kingdom of God, the highest ideal for the individual and the race.

3. And God blessed the seventh day. Made it a blessing to man, one of the greatest blessings he ever bestowed, "endued it with a treasure of grace flowing forth from the rest of the Creator." "This institution, though, like other institutions, capable of abuse, has, nevertheless . . . . operated on the whole with wonderful efficiency in maintaining the life of a pure and spiritual religion." And sanctified it. "Hallowed" it. Set it apart for sacred uses. "Make it a holy day, taken out from among the common days, and devoted to God, having a special relation to a holy God."

The Late Dr. Lapponi.

DEATH HAS REMOVED A DISTINGUISHED PHYSICIAN AND A MAN OF RARE COURAGE.

In the death of Dr. Lapponi, physician to the Pope, a personage has been removed from life's scene who was scarcely less known throughout the world than the pontiffs whom he ministered unto. He was a wonderful man as well as a distinguished physician.—Ottawa Free Press.

It may be added that Dr. Lapponi was a man of rare courage. He had no fear of that bugbear known as professional etiquette. When he found something good in a medicine he did not hesitate to say so to the world. He proved this when he wrote the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., strongly endorsing their celebrated Pink Pills for Pale People as a cure for anaemia (bloodlessness) and certain nervous disorders. In the interests of the thousands who suffer from anaemia, nervous disorders and kindred troubles, it is worth while republishing Dr. Lapponi's letter, as follows:

"I certify that I have tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in four cases of the simple anaemia of development. After a few weeks of treatment, the result came fully up to my expectations. For that reason I shall not fail in the future to extend the use of this laudable preparation, not only in the treatment of other morbid forms of the category of anaemia or chlorosis, but also in cases of neurasthenia and the like.

(Signed), Dr. Giuseppe Lapponi,
Via dei Gracchi 332, Rome.

The "simple anaemia of development" referred to by Dr. Lapponi is of course that tired, languid condition of young girls whose development to womanhood is tardy, and whose health, at the period of that development, is so often imperilled. His opinion of the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills at that time is of the highest scientific authority, and it confirms the many published cases in which anaemia and other diseases of the blood as well as nervous diseases have been cured by these pills, which, it need hardly be mentioned, owe their efficacy to their power of making new blood, and thus acting directly on the digestive and nervous system. In all cases of anemia, decline, indigestion, and troubles due to bad blood, and all affections of the nerves, as St. Vitus' dance, paralysis and locomotor ataxia, they are commended to the public with all the greater confidence because they had the strong endorsement of the great physician who has so recently passed away.

Cleaning a Library.

To clean a library properly one should have a real reverence for books. After the furniture is all removed from the room and the floor has received the attention to be given it, then turn to the books. Take one shelf at a time. Wipe each book as it is removed from the shelf. Have a small hair dust brush and with this brush the tops, sides and bottom of the books. Be very particular to replace the volumes in the proper order. Nothing exasperates a book lover more than to have well arranged shelves mixed up by house cleaning methods.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When the tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Men and Women Unanimous About It.

Many women weep and wail and refuse to be comforted because their once magnificent tresses have become thin and faded. Many men incline to profanity because the flies bite through the thin thatch on their craniums. It will be good news to the miserable of both sexes, to learn than Newbro's Herpicide has been placed upon the market. This is the new scalp germicide and antiseptic that acts by destroying the germ or microbe that is the underlying cause of all hair destruction. WOMAN'S WORLD

MRS. M. C. STEVENSON.

She Collects Archaic Relics For the Government.

Mrs. Mathilde Coxe Stevenson is one of the clever women in the employ of the United States government in its departments at the national capital, and the particular work in which she is engaged, while of a very interesting nature, demands talent and ability of a high order.

Mrs. Stevenson collects archaic relics for the United States national museum. She accompanied her husband most of the time for thirteen years while he was collecting data in connection with the Zuni Indians. Together they visited many of the Pueblo tribes and were initiated into the organizations of the Indians in order that they might become perfect in their knowledge of Indian life. Since the death of her husband she has been connected with the bureau of ethnology at Washington and is regarded as one of the most valued members of the corps. She knows the Rocky mountains quite well and is acquainted with all the western tribes of Indians.

MRS. MATHILDE COXE STEVENSON.

Health and Beauty.

With the exception of those who directly inherit some physical disorder, every woman is allowed to start life with all the machinery of her system in perfect working order. She begins the life journey well equipped with all she needs of health and strength—beautiful skin and hair, bright eyes, white teeth. But, as evening comes, how often does she find those good things fading. Shadows are creeping into her face. Why must the brightness and charm go so soon?

It is not that they must. They go because she has wasted her life dower. She has carelessly allowed it to go. With her glorious inheritance from nature she could have lived through all these years without disturbing one charm, only adding to the innocent thoughtlessness of youth the grace and dignity of matured womanhood—advanced womanhood.

The practical side of health and beauty is the care one takes of natural gifts, the free, inimitable beauty that nature planned and for which there is no substitute. It is far easier to keep one's beauty than to restore it. The rule to keep it is but one—proper living. In this age, as in every other where beauty was taken into account, there is plenty of opportunity to abuse and waste one's gifts, and women usually seize it. Besetting every path are temptations of idleness and carelessness—that is, to be idle and careless in looking to one's physical needs. Very often, by the way, these are crowded out by the stress of other matters—business, household, pleasure.

What, then, is proper living? Here is the formula, the simplest thing in the world and the hardest to follow: Regularity of living, early to bed and early to rise; regular meals and good, wholesome ones, neither too much nor too little; regular daily exercise, enough to set the blood leaping through the veins; a daily bath, fresh air, sunshine, faithful care of the hair, skin and teeth, no matter how tired one may be, and, last, a patient, cheerful heart in spite of the clouds that sometimes obscure the way. This is the formula and is to be used all day long and every day in the year.—Philadelphia Record.

Straw Matting.

Opinions differ concerning straw mattings on floors. Some housekeepers contend that it gives a house a cool, clean look, and so it may in summer and when it is new, but the musty odor that clings to it always is extremely disagreeable to some people. Added to this, the dirt, which does not show on straw matting and gives it a superficially clean look, all sifts through. The experienced housekeeper knows that it is there, for she is wise in detecting the smell of dust. In fact, after a straw matting has been laid some time it is not hygienic as a floor covering. One housekeeper who moved into a house when the retiring family had generously left two apparently new mattings had them taken up because she preferred the good hardwood floors underneath to be uncovered. At least half a pailful of dirt was taken from each room, which to the casual eye had appeared in neat condition.

The economy of straw mattings is questionable. If you have an old and poor floor that cannot be repaired sufficiently to be stained and varnished or painted and you cannot afford to lay a new floor, then straw matting comes in as a makeshift. If the furniture is light and the matting is not to receive hard usage, it will last fairly well, but a careless servant may move a bed, or bureau roughly and break the straws, which will soon give way to make a hole that cannot be repaired. Matting is not suitable for a boy's room, where nothing is so good as a bare floor and rugs. The finest kinds of mattings are better when sewed together in breadths as wool carpets are sewed, but the heavier and the cheaper sorts are not conveniently treated in this way. When matting is cut to fit corners or diagonal places in the floor, cover it with carpet tape or, lacking this, with a strip of cambric of the same color. This prevents raveling or using an extra number of tacks.

The Secret of Hairdressing.

The reason why the majority of women who have to depend on their own exertions in the matter of dressing their hair becomingly usually obtain such disappointing results does not, after all, spring so much from a want of knowledge of the subject as a fatal parsimoniousness in the amount of time they devote to it night and morning. Hair to look well must receive a maximum of attention, and the fact is too often ignored that the necessary time spent on this important matter of the toilet is never thrown away, as far as looks are concerned, the present fashions making more stringent demands than ever on the amateur hairdresser.

The Ideal Duster.

The process of dusting as generally carried on would be almost as much honored in the breach as the observance. No good housekeeper should own that pretty abomination known as a feather duster, the gay flirting about of the same merely displacing the dust, which quickly settles elsewhere. A soft chamois skin, not too large, soaked in cold water and then wrung out, is the ideal duster. It can be used on the finest woods, leaving a clear, bright surface. After every piece of furniture has been wiped with the moist chamois the rooms may be considered really dusted.

Invalid Gifts.

"You must have had faith in my getting well," said the convalescent brightly, "or you'd never have brought me something pretty to wear," and immediately she tried the dainty lace collar on. That set the visitor a-thinking. She had brought that particular sort of gift simply from a desire to take something that was out of the ordinary. But if it really suggested getting well and getting out, why, there was much more subtlety in the choice of gifts that might be taken into account when dealing with invalids.

Naming it "spring water" doesn't make it safe to drink.

¶ Spring water, as a rule, is good pure water, and fit to drink—at the spring. But it may not be so when you get it. ¶ Many things can happen—do happen—to much spring water, long before you pour it into a glass. Some of them are things you wouldn't like to know about. ¶ Some bottlers of spring water bring it long distances in tanks. This simply invites bacteria to come and multiply in the water. ¶ Some spring waters are stored in containers a long while before they are bottled. Then the water gets flat and insipid. ¶ Things happen in the bottling house, too, that don't do the water any kind of good. ¶ The safe way for you, and the only way for a bottler who cares about purity, cleanliness, quality, is to do the bottling where the spring flows, as we do with

Presented the following history: —Since childhood she has been subject to periodical headaches, which she regarded as hereditary, as her mother and aunt had suffered similarly without relief. During the past few years she has complained of heart trouble, dyspepsia, constipation, and periods of extreme nervousness; while suffering the attacks of headache she had nausea and vomiting, so she often had to keep her bed for days. Several physicians had been consulted, but no permanent relief was obtained. Finally she was led to have her eyes examined, when a bad form of astigmatism was discovered with oblique axis (which is always a source of eyestrain): the correct glasses were given, to be worn constantly. She began to improve at once, the headaches, and all the other distressing symptoms entirely disappeared. Consultation free. —ALEX. RAY.

Choir Caused Row

Windsor, Ont., Jan. 11. — Recently Rev. O. H. McGowan, pastor of the B. M.E. Church here, had trouble with his choir, and had one of the members fined in police court for disturbing his services. His opponents in the congregation appealed to Bishop Washington, who ordered Mr. McGowan to remove to Brantford. The latter refused to leave Windsor, claiming the bishop could not, under the discipline of the church, take such action until charges had been made and a hearing had before the minister of the district. Bishop Washington consequently has withdrawn the order and will bring the matter up at the next conference.

To-day's Market

Owing to the inclement weather, the market to-day was rather slimly attended. In consequence prices were high. Fresh eggs sold readily at 38c and in some cases 40c per dozen. Butter was scarce, and 30c per pound was the ruling price.

Dressed poultry was also scarce, and commanded good prices. As high as $1.25 was paid for chickens by the pair. Geese, ducks and turkeys were proportionately dear.

Board Of Education Wound Up Business.

CLEANED UP THE SLATE LAST NIGHT AND SANG "GOD SAVE THE KING."

The Board of Education held a regular meeting last evening, for the purpose of winding up the business for the past year. The following members were in attendance: Messrs. J. F. Wills, Chairman; J. H. Anderson, B. Mallory, W. C. Reid, H. Naylor, U. M. Reid, G. A. Bennett, B. Walker, I. Diamond, W. S. Morden, L. P. Hughes, Col. Ponton and Rev. A. L. Geen.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Mr. A. H. Colquhoun, Deputy Minister of Education, acknowledging the communication from the Board, notifying the Department of the appointment of Mr. J. C. Morgan as Inspector for the City of Belleville.—Received and filed.

From James A. Collins, requesting that, as he had been expelled from the High School for a misdemeanor, his expulsion be expunged from the records and he be placed upon the same footing as the other boys.

The Finance Committee recommended the payment of the following accounts:

J. W. Walker	$46.77
Downey Coal Co.	99.82
Bell Telephone Co.	40
Pringle estate	1.75

On motion the Board went into committee of the whole on reports, Mr. Hughes in the chair.

The Finance Committee's report was adopted without discussion.

ENQUIRIES.

Col. Ponton said a local paper had stated that the new Inspector had met the Board when he came to the city to take the Inspectorate. He (the speaker), as a member of the Board, had not been so notified.

Mr. Wills said the report was not true. The Inspector simply met the teachers on the day the schools were opened after the holidays.

Col. Ponton asked if the Chairman of Supplies had been requested to obtain a memograph for the transmission of the examination papers.

Mr. Morden said no request had been made to him for such an article.

OTHER MATTERS.

Col. Ponton suggested that the matter of placing savings banks in the school be laid over until the meeting of the new Board, which was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Walker, seconded by Mr. Bennett, the request of the boy Collins was granted.

Mr. Bennett stated that the boys implicated in the High School trouble had paid their proportion of the costs necessary to make the repairs.

A motion prevailed to supply a memograph for the High School.

A VALEDICTORY.

Mr. I. Diamond asked permission to address the Board and consent was given him. He referred to the fact that he had been for 31 years a member of the Board, having first been elected in the year 1875. His life had always been mingled with schools, as for years he was a teacher in the Public schools. He had never lost interest in the schools of Belleville and he hoped he never would. Although he was now leaving the Board he would continue to take an interest in the education of the children. His associations with the Board had been most pleasant.

Mr. Wills said he expressed the views of the Board in stating that the retirement of Mr. Diamond as a member was regretted. He, however, hoped his influence in school matters would still be felt in the city.

Col. Ponton moved, seconded by Rev. A. L. Geen, that this Board expresses its regret at parting with Mr. I Diamond, who has served faithfully as School Trustee for upwards of 31 years, and desires to record their public recognition of his efficient services in connection with the Octavia Street School.

The mover and seconder of the motion spoke in reference to Mr. Diamond's long service upon the Board, and regretted that he was leaving.

The motion was carried by a standing vote.

HAS A BANK ACCOUNT.

Mr. Wills stated that he had received a statement showing that on Dec. 31st last there was to the credit of the Board in the bank $2,352.84. He also stated that he had received a letter from Dr. Oronhyatekha, which granted permission to Mr. J. C. Morgan to act as School Inspector for the city.

After the reading of the minutes and the singing of the National Anthem the Board adjourned sine die.

IN THE MATTER OF HEALY FALLS POWER.

AN INFLUENTIAL DEPUTATION WAITED ON THE GOVERNMENT YESTERDAY — SQUATTER HAS CAUSED DELAY.

Toronto, Jan. 12.— A deputation representing the Northumberland-Durham Power Co. waited on Hon. Frank Cochrane and Hon. Adam Beck yesterday afternoon to request an extension of time for the performance of work on the power development at Healey Falls. The Ontario Government owns the lower portion of the rapids, the Dominion Government the upper portion, and the company the middle reaches. A squatter on the Provincial portion delayed the acquisition of this property until three days after the time when construction work should have commenced. The Dominion Government has not yet consented to the use of the upper portion of the rapids, but the company hopes to procure this privilege shortly, the delay arising from the desire of the Dominion Government first to receive the engineers' report on the Grand Valley Canal System, which is expected to be ready next month.

Connor, Clarke & Monds, engineers, reported that it would be a criminal waste of money to develop the lower section of the rapids alone, and recommended that the whole power be developed together.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell saw the Government during the week, and was asked to arrange a deputation of the prominent men of the lake shore district, the present visit being the result.

The deputation was informed that the general policy of the Government, whatever disposition should be made of the present application, would be in accordance with the terms of the new uniform lease, under which all future grants of waterpowers will be made. Control of rates is included among these conditions. The deputation was assured that nothing was intended in any way detrimental to the success of the enterprise. The matter will be taken up at a meeting of the Council next Tuesday.

Those in attendance were: Capt. A. E. Bywater, president of the Reform Association, and a foremost taxpayer; M. B. Morrison, M.L.A., West Hastings, P. J. O'Rourke, proprietor The Advocate, and president Conservative Association; J. M. Hurley, ex-M. P., from Belleville; H. C. Hunt, secretary-treasurer, Belleville Hardware Co., representing Sir Mackenzie Bowell, president of the company and of the Northumberland-Durham Power Co.; Ald. Green representing the City Council, Belleville; E. C. S. Huycke, K. C.; Frank M. Field, T. B. Lapp, Cobourg World, Cobourg; H. T. Brush, president, Standard Ideal Bath Co., Robert A. Mulholland, president Durham Conservative Association; J. F. Clark and J. A. Culverwell, Cobourg, secretary of the company.

Mayor-Elect Munson, president of the Conservative Association, Cobourg, telegraphed that he would use every effort to assist the company, and hoping that the obstruction of Brighton people would not be allowed to hinder the deputation. W. J. Crossen, Crossen Car Co., Cobourg, also wired his co-operation. Col. Harry A. Ward, M.P., wrote from Ottawa that illness prevented his attendance, but he would assist in the endeavor to secure from the Dominion Government the facilities desired.

All those mentioned in the deputation with the exception of Messrs. Morrison, O'Rourke and Green, are directors of the power company. They are about equally divided in political affiliation.

The first hydro-electric power commission was in session yesterday, and made progress with the fourth report on the waterpowers of the province, this section embracing the Ottawa Valley.

Address to Retiring S. S. Superintendent

PLEASING INCIDENT AT HOLLOWAY ST. CHURCH LAST SUNDAY.

The following address, which explains itself, was presented at Holloway St. Church Sunday School last Sunday afternoon;

W. J. Magrath;

Dear Bro.,—Seeing that in the providence of God your residence is to be in the far away West, and you having seen fit to place before us your resignation as Superintendent of Holloway St. S. S., on behalf of the officers, teachers and scholars of Holloway St. Sabbath School, permit us to approach you at this time expressing our sincerest appreciation of your devotion, self-sacrifice and generosity, given so cheerfully to our church work in general and our S. S. in particular. Here your faithful presence, generous hand and hopeful vision has added to the enthusiasm that has lifted burdens and left lofty ideals, which we are now appreciating; and must associate you and your family with, and while these tangible evidences remain with us, appreciation is written deep in our hearts as well as on memory's tablet. Be assured our regret and loss at your temporary or continued absence from us, will be mingled with our prayers for God's best blessing to accompany you and yours, making you a blessing in that newer part of our great Dominion. We will not forget our dear superintendent away out in Edmonton, and that as God's providence points you there, the voice of Jesus will say "Feed my lambs," "Feed my says. It is enough, come up higher, and enjoy the rest and reward of my people and we shall meet "In the sweet by and by."

Signed on behalf of the School.

GEO. WOODLEY,
A. E. BAILEY,
C. M. GILL,
J. G. VANDUSEN.

On a unanimous and spontaneous vote of the School, Mr. Magrath was made honorary superintendent.

Mr. Magrath responded in a very feeling and suitable way and accepted continuous relationship.

R. J.'s Big Undertaking.

Mail and Empire: Mr. Graham, Belleville, Ont., has taken an option on property, at Halifax, N.S., as a site for a hundred thousand dollar cold storage plant. The intention is to conduct a sheep ranch in King's County and a big orchard in King's or Annapolis, the whole to be under control of the same company which would ship to the English market. It is proposed to locate a similar plant at St. John.

Little Greta Madden Had Painful Mishap.

FELL OFF SLEIGH AND TORE FLESH FROM LOWER PART OF FACE.

Greta Madden, five-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Madden, residing on Albion street, yesterday afternoon met with a distressing accident.

It appears that the little one was riding on a hand sleigh down a hill near her parents' residence, when she lost control of the sleigh and was thrown off. After falling from the sleigh Greta for some distance slid along the icy hill and the flesh on the lower part of her jaw was virtually torn off exposing the bone.

As quickly as possible after the accident a physician was summoned and the injuries attended to.

A number of stitches were required in order to replace the loose flesh in its proper position.

The little one, although suffering much, bore the operation well and no serious results are anticipated.

Boy and Rifle Made A Bad Combination

CLAUDE GODFREY, A 13-YEAR-OLD NORTH HASTINGS BOY, DEAD WITH A BULLET IN HIS BRAIN.

On Sunday morning last, says the Bancroft Times, Claude Godfrey, aged thirteen years, son of Marshall Godfrey, of the Monk Road, shot himself dead with a 22 calibre rifle.

How the accident occurred will probably never be known, as the boy was alone in the house at the time, his mother being absent at a neighbor's, and an older brother was at the stable. The latter heard the report of a rifle and ran to the house, only to find his brother dead on the floor. The ball struck him in the corner of the left eye and lodged in the brain. Death must have been instantaneous.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"AROUND THE CLOCK."

The above attraction played to a large house at the Carman last night, and the play, with its clever principals, its chorus of pretty girls and fine stage settings, pleased everybody hugely. Of the cast Sallie Stembler as Mrs. Wilson proved herself the possessor of a very true contralto and her acting was finished in every particular. Billie Ritchie as Smith, the man in a continuous state of jag, provoked fits of laughter whenever he appeared and he was ably seconded by Rich McAllister as Perkins, the bell boy with a penchant for mischief. Tom Wilson, "a lawyer sometimes, a liar all times," and Hank Wilson, Tom's uncle from the woolly west, also filled their parts very creditably. Of the other characters Algie Abbott, the Englishman who had married for money, and Mrs. Abbott, his jealous wife, delighted the audience, while Susie, the pretty maid, was coy, indeed. George Hall as Deacon Mayfield, appeared only once but acquitted himself with credit in his part.

Some very catchy songs were rendered during the play, of which "Idaho," a cowboy song, "Playland," in which Miss Stembler was heard to advantage, and a topical song by Billie Ritchie, Rich McAllister and C. F. Cardon were perhaps the favorites.

While the play was good all through, it was the third act that deserved special mention. When the curtain rose for the second scene of the act, the interior of a London music hall was disclosed with a stage, boxes and an audience and a performance.

Taken as a whole, "Around the Clock" was a distinct success.

"THE VILLAGE PARSON."

"The Village Parson" will be strongly in evidence during the coming engagement at the opera house on Wednesday, January 16th. It is a drama constructed on possibilities, these being linked with the fact that each part seems to have been written for the artist who is engaged to play it, so carefully has the company been selected. The play is considered one of the most powerful and interesting of the present day. It may be second only to that beautiful drama, "Human Hearts," but general belief has been expressed that it should be placed first. The interest gradually increases as the play proceeds, and there is not a flagging moment or a weak character. "The Village Parson" requires an elaborate production, and in this, the management have been strongly cognizant to provide the entire scenery for each act. Plan opens Monday morning.

Death Of a Noted Prince Edward Man

The death of Mr. J. J. Ward, of Consecon, which sad event occurred on Tuesday last, removes a figure well known throughout the county. He engaged in various kinds of business—farming, fruit dealer and for a time ran an evaporator in Consecon. He married a daughter of Mr. Peter Burr, of Bloomfield, to whom were born several children. Deceased was much respected.

The man with a headlight growing on his face is pretty sure to be on the wrong track.

EXPORT DUTY ON POWER

Not to Exceed $10 Per Horse-Power, But May Be Remitted.

Hon. Mr. Aylesworth's Bill Read in the House—Minister Explains Government's Aims, and W. F. Maclean Says Bill Is An Improvement On the Fitzpatrick Bill of Last Year—Canned Meats Inspection.

Ottawa, Jan. 12.—Hon. A. B. Aylesworth yesterday afternoon in the House presented his bill to regulate the exportation of electric power. He explained that it was, in the main, a reprint of the bill presented at the last session by Mr. Fitzpatrick.

It requires a license from the Governor-in-Council for the exportation of electrical energy, natural gas, petroleum, etc.

The Governor-in-Council is authorized to impose an export duty not to exceed $10 per horse-power, but this duty may be remitted if the power company complies with the conditions of its license respecting the supply to be furnished the home market and the prices to be charged therefor.

He feared that the power companies might regard this bill as an unwarranted invasion of vested rights, but he assured them that the Government aimed at nothing more than a reasonable preservation of the great natural advantages at Niagara Falls for the use and benefit of the people of Canada. There was no reason why a large amount of the energy generated at Niagara Falls could not be sold to good advantages in this country.

W. F. Maclean (South York) said that the statement made by the Minister of Justice vindicates the wisdom of the House in postponing the Fitzpatrick bill of last session. The measure as then introduced gave a virtual monopoly to the existing power companies. They were exempted from the operation of the bill.

The present measure is apparently better, and the speaker sincerely hoped that it would thwart and not facilitate, the exportation of electric power. There was danger of a merger—a great international combine—to control Niagara power. Personally, he favored such legislation as would prohibit any exportation of power to the United States.

Canned Meats Inspection.

The House went into committee upon Mr. Fisher's bill to provide for inspection of canned meats, fruits and other food.

Mr. Smith of Wentworth, while not objecting to frequent inspections, pointed out that the bill provided for a duplication of work now done by the Provincial Government. Before the present bill was further proceeded with, opportunity should be given to the canners to express their opinion upon its provisions.

Mr. Alcorn (Prince Edward County) said that as the representative of a county in which there were 13 canneries, he seconded the request for a postponement until those interested could be heard.

A. T. MacLaren (Perth) urged the Minister to give an opportunity to deputations to be heard on the subject.

No Protests.

Mr. Fisher said that he had taken precautions to have the first reading before the Christmas recess, so that members could have printed copies of the bill to enable them to consult their constituents upon its provisions. He had heard no protest against the bill, but had decided to give deputations a chance to be heard.

Mr. Wilson (Lennox and Addington) observed that on asking for a half-dozen copies of the bill he found that only two were available.

David Marshall (East Elgin) urged upon the Minister the importance of providing that the packer's name must be on the can.

Mr. MacPherson (Liberal)—British Columbia) strongly objected to the requirement of dating the can in the case of salmon. No chemical reaction could possibly occur in a sealed tin of salmon.

Mr. Gunn (South Huron) corroborated Mr. MacPherson. Salmon improved with age.

Inspect the Can.

Mr. Blain (Peel) thought that it was no less important to inspect the can itself than it was to inspect its contents. Did the bill provide for this?

Mr. Fisher admitted that the bill in this respect was deficient. He would give it consideration.

Mr. Marshall said the inspection of cans was more important than inspection of their contents.

Mr. Smith (Wentworth) objected to dating the cans.

Mr. Blain insisted that it was idle to safeguard the contents of the can, if the can itself was not inspected.

Dr. Barr (Dufferin) observed that if canned goods did not deteriorate after five or six years' canning, why this objection to dating the cans? But if canned goods did deteriorate, when was it? The canners seemed to be strangely reticent on that point.

Mr. Lancaster (Lincoln and Niagara) opposed the bill in toto.

Mr. Alcorn (Prince Edward County) submitted that the unsanitary conditions of canned goods as a rule arose from unsuitable cans.

Mr. Marshall said that the cans could not be inspected. The sheet tin would have to be inspected. Yet there was trouble from poor tins. The English people would not take our canned peas and beans; our exports were not what they should be.

Mr. Blain insisted that an inspector could tell whether a can was properly coated with tin as well as he could inspect the tin plate.

Break In P. E. I. Cable.

Mr. Martin (Con., P. E. I.) under the new rule, gave notice of motion to adjourn, and twenty members, all Conservatives, rising to give assent, he called the attention of the House to the fact that owing to a serious break in the submarine cable, telegraphic communication was interrupted, perhaps indefinitely, between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. He urged the Government to establish Marconi stations.

Mr. Fisher, acting Minister of Public Works, had just heard the news. He promised earliest consideration.

Corn Goes on Free List.

In the evening the House devoted some hours to the tariff. Some members of the Opposition objected to the low duty on cheese, but Mr. Fielding pointed out that the Canadian cheese industry was highly prosperous.

Mr. Elson (Middlesex) complained that the Canadian tariff, as proposed by the Government, did not at all equal the American duties against the Canadian farmer. He advocated the admission of barbed wire free of duty.

Mr. Perley (Con., Quebec) asked for higher protection for the farmers, and Mr. Lancaster (Lincoln and Niagara) protested against corn being on the free list.

Dr. Barr also spoke against the principle of admitting corn free.

Messrs. MacKenzie, McIntyre and other Government supporters took the contrary view.

The Finance Minister said that no farmer had asked the tariff commission for the restoration of the duty on corn.

The item went through and the new tariff on oatmeal was under discussion when the House rose after passing the first 56 items of the first schedule.

The report of the Minister of Justice upon the penitentiaries of Canada was tabled.

Tobacco Fire Is Fatal.

Lancaster, Pa., Jan. 12.—A fire which started in the tobacco warehouse of S. R. Moss & Co. here yesterday caused a loss estimated at $1,000,000. Both were taken to an hospital, where Beam died.

Although Mr. Snider has had little campaign experience, he is looked upon by members of the party as one man who can awaken to life some of the Conservative associations throughout the province which have been growing more or less dormant, and get the party stalwarts into line.

He will have his headquarters in the Crown Life building, Queen and Victoria streets, and will have a permanent staff of assistants.

He will take up his duties at once.

WORST PINCH TO COME

End of the Chinese Famine Misery Cannot Be Foreseen.

Nearly Half a Million Refugees In the Camps In the Vicinity of Tsingkiangfu, of Whom 30 Per Cent. Show Signs of Distress and 10 Per Cent. Acute Suffering — Women Cook Leaves and Twigs.

Shanghai, Jan. 12.—Capt. Kirton, the foreign relief commissioner on the famine camp at Tsingkiangfu, describes the refuge camp consisting of mat sheds arranged in rectangular group in street formation two miles long and a mile wide

In other camps in the vicinity of Tsingkiangfu, of nearly a half million refugees, 30 per cent. show signs of distress, and among 10 per cent. the suffering is acute. The roads are thronged with rice peddlers. Women tear up the roots of grass for food, and also are cooking leaves and twigs.

The efforts of the officials are confined to attempts to persuade the people to return to their homes. Some of them comply, but more arrive than depart. One hundred thousand men are absolutely idle.

Though it would not be difficult to organize relief works, none has yet been started. If the inaction continues there will be a gigantic problem to face. The end cannot be foreseen. The worst pinch has not yet been felt.

TWENTY LOSE LIVES.

Hot Celluloid Explodes and Room Is Filled With Fire at Strassburg, Germany.

Strassburg, Germany, Jan. 12.—Twenty persons were killed yesterday by the explosion of a vat of boiling celluloid in a bookbindery at Gaispolsheim owned by an English firm, Houdart & Co.

The flaming liquid was thrown over rooms where many men and women were at work and caused such instantaneous ignition of everything with which it came in contact that all the exits were cut off.

Some of those who escaped from the burning rooms were terribly scalded.

340 PERISH IN TIDAL WAVE.

Dutch East India Islands Devastated With Great Loss.

The Hague, Jan. 12.—A tidal wave has devastated some of the Dutch East Indian Islands south of Achin. The loss is great.

According to a brief official despatch, three hundred persons perished on the Island of Tana, while forty others are known to have been drowned at the Island of Simalu.

Drowned In the Feeder.

St. Catharines, Jan. 12.—The 10-year-old son of Henry Williams, colored, of Marshville, was drowned by breaking through the ice on the canal feeder. The lad's young sister and his father who went in after him were both saved with difficulty.

Killed By Limb of Tree.

Stratford, Jan. 12.—John Carr, aged 61, while pruning trees, was struck on the temple by a falling limb, rendered unconscious and died yesterday. A wife and four children survive.

CERTAIN OF VICTORY.

His Holiness the Pope Comforts French Catholics In An Encyclical.

Rome, Jan. 12.—The Osservatore Romano yesterday published the text of an important encyclical addressed by the Pope to the French Catholics.

In this document the Pontiff said that his chief object in addressing the faithful in France was to comfort them in their sufferings, which he felt deeply. There was, however, great consolation in the fact that the Catholics of France were united.

The French Government's declaration of war was not only against the Christian faith, but against all spiritual ideas.

The French Catholics must be prepared for all sorts of trials, but they were certain of final victory. This meant the maintenance of their union with the Holy See, which was of the greatest importance, as shown by the efforts of the enemies of the church to dissolve the union.

Contrary to the statements made on the subject, the church did not desire a religious war, involving violent persecutions, as she did not desire to see her children suffering.

In False Position.

London, Jan. 12.—(C.A.P.)—Goldwin Smith, writing to The Manchester Guardian, says the Newfoundland quarrel with the British Government is one of a series, all arising from a continuance of a false relation between the mother country and her adult offspring. Indifference or carelessness with regard to these matters cannot with any show of justice be imputed to the British Government.

P. E. I. Cut Off.

Halifax, N. S., Jan. 12.—The cable connecting Prince Edward Island with the mainland is broken, and the island has now been without cable communication for about a week.

Submarine Boat Sank.

Cherbourg, Jan. 12.—The submarine boat Algerian sank at her moorings here during the night. There was no one on board.

Ottawa, Jan. 12.—The Railway Commission has passed an order providing that the reports of any person or persons appointed by the board to enquire into railway accidents or casualties are privileged and not open to the public.

Mayor of Vancouver.

Victoria, B. C., Jan. 12.—Ald. Alexander Bethune defeated the former City Clerk McGuigan for the mayoralty by 650. Barrister J. F. Bird, formerly of Toronto, was elected an alderman.

Strathcona Has Faith.

Subscribes Half a Million Dollars to Blacksod Scheme.

Robert Bickerdike, M. P., Appointed Canadian Representative of British Syndicate—Will Go to Ottawa at Earliest Possible Moment to Interest Sir Wilfrid and Ministers to the Extent of a Million Dollar Subsidy.

Montreal, Jan. 14.—Mr. Robert Bickerdike, M. P. for St. Lawrence, has accepted the position of Canadian representative of the British syndicate, which has been formed for the purpose of promoting a 25-knot steamship service between Blacksod Bay, Ireland, and Halifax.

It is understood that Lord Strathcona, the Canadian High Commissioner, when approached in London, declared that they must have boats equal to the very best on the New York route, and although he had no money to throw away he had so much faith in the enterprise that he would become interested personally to the extent of half a million dollars.

Mr. Bickerdike said that he had already prepared a large amount of data and would leave for Ottawa in order to have the matter brought officially to the attention of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his Ministers at the very earliest possible moment.

Eastern Members Solid.

"Do you think the matter will be brought before Parliament this session?"

"I think it will, the eastern members are all solid for the scheme, and all in fact realize that the time has come to act and act with energy and patriotism in the matter."

The large subsidy asked for being referred to, Mr. Bickerdike declared that Canada is a great deal better able to give $1,000,000 to-day than three-quarters of a million ten years ago, especially when the project is a 25-knot service.

Discussing the railway end of the question, he said that all lines must have the same advantages. The C.P.R. and I.C.R., he added, are already at Halifax, and the Grand Trunk Pacific and Canadian Northern are rapidly making for that port.

Losing No Time.

London, Jan. 14.—The lord mayor of Dublin has received a deputation regarding the Blacksod scheme.

CAPT. MILLOY DEAD.

Formerly Manager of the Niagara Navigation Co.

Paris, Jan. 14.—Capt. Donald Milloy, one of the oldest lake navigators, died Saturday morning at his farm, Oak Park.

He was formerly manager of the Niagara Navigation Co., and captain and owner of the Chicora when that vessel was brought to Canada after service as a blockade runner.

He was owner of Milloy's wharf, Toronto, and well known to everyone engaged in the lake traffic. He was unmarried.

Finances For the Quarter.

Ottawa, Jan. 14.—The financial statement for the Dominion for the six months ending Dec. 31, 1906, shows an increase in the revenue of $6,000,000 over the same six months of the previous year. The following are the figures:

	1905.	1906.
Customs	$22,428,759	$26,110,734
Excise	7,058,684	8,094,004
Postoffice	2,660,000	2,929,863
Public works ..	4,220,685	4,722,[illegible]
Miscellaneous .	1,509,039	2,857,959
Total	$37,877,167	$44,634,716
	1905.	1906.
Expenditure ..	$25,747,695	$26,655,166

To Report on the Douks.

Calgary, Jan. 14.—Rev. John McDougall, the pioneer missionary, has been engaged upon a special mission among the Doukhobors in Saskatchewan for several months. Some of the Doukhobors, a small minority, have declined to become naturalized, and they have insisted upon leading the communistic life and no other. The greater part have settled down, but the remnant have proved so unyielding that arrangements are in progress by means of which they will be enabled to lead this life. This is the work upon which Mr. McDougall has been asked to report.

May Subpoena Strathcona.

Ottawa, Jan. 14.—It is said that when the public accounts committee meets on Tuesday an effort will be made to subpoena Lord Strathcona to give testimony respecting the North Atlantic Trading Co.

It is rumored that the Bourassa party will support the Opposition in this matter, and a general discussion of the immigration policy may show more dissent than is suspected among Sir Wilfrid Laurier's followers in Quebec.

The Speech From the Throne.

Toronto, Jan. 14.—At the coming opening of the Legislature the address in reply to the speech from the throne will likely be moved by W. K. McNaught, M.P.P. for North Toronto, and will be seconded either by W. A. Preston, the newly-elected member for Port Arthur and Rainy River, or Alexander Ferguson, M.P.P. for Cardwell.

To Transport Fish.

Ottawa, Jan. 14.—Hon. L. P. Brodeur has begun negotiations with the Intercolonial and other railways, with a view to the prompt transportation of fish from the provinces by the sea to the upper provinces at reasonable rates.

King Oscar Recovering.

Stockholm, Jan. 14.—King Oscar is steadily convalescing and walks about his apartment.

THEY WILL LIQUIDATE.

Insurance Companies Quit Rather Than Pay 'Frisco Losses.

Hamburg, Jan. 14.—At two stockholders meetings held here Saturday of the Trans-Atlantic Fire Insurance Co. and the North German Fire Insurance Co., resolutions to dissolve and liquidate were approved unanimously.

It was announced from Hamburg that a local court had decided that the North German Fire Insurance Co. must pay the losses which it incurred as a result of the San Fracisco earthquake of last year, and that the Trans-Atlantic Fire Insurance Co. should reimburse two English companies which had reinsured San Francisco risks with it for loses already settled.

ON ATLANTIC LINER.

Montreal Man Creates a Scene and Is Put In Straight Jacket.

New York, Jan. 14.—All the Atlantic liners which arrived yesterday reported an unusually rough voyage.

Among the first cabin passengers on the St. Louis was A. Brazeau of Montreal, buyer for a Montreal house, who has been for two months in London and Paris. Saturday night during dinner, he suddenly created a scene and was put in a strait jacket. He will be kept on board the St. Louis until friends arrange for his removal. Mr. Brazeau suffered an attack of mental depression and thought that attempts had been made upon his life.

Proposes New Canon.

Montreal, Jan. 14.—Dr. L. H. Davidson of this city has given notice that at the approaching meeting of the Anglican Synod of Montreal, he will ask that canon No. 11, "for the election of a coadjutor bishop," be repealed and be replaced by a new canon. It is said that the adoption of this canon will prevent a repetition in the future of the uncertainty which at present surrounds the legality of Bishop Carmichael's succession to the see.

Archbishop and Primate.

Toronto, Jan. 14.—The House of Bishops of the Anglican Church in Canada meets at St. Alban's Cathedral, in this city, on Wednesday, to elect the Primate of all Canada, and also the metropolitan of the eastern ecclesiastical province of Canada. His Grace Archbishop Matheson of Rupert's Land will preside. The proceedings at St. Alban's Cathedral will be private.

Motorman Gets Damages.

London, Jan. 14.—At the winter assizes John Harris, motorman on the Springbank section of the London Electric Railway, obtained a verdict of $1,500 against the company for injuries received in a collision on the night of Aug. 23 last.

Now Out of Politics.

Vancouver, B.C., Jan. 14.—Joseph Martin, K.C., has sold his paper, The Guardian, and will stick to his profession of law. The paper has been going for only two weeks, but has a fair following. Mr. Martin says he is out of politics.

Barque Safe.

San Francisco, Jan. 14.—The barque Big Bonanza, which it was feared had foundered with all on board off the coast of Oregon, crept into this port Saturday afternoon under her own sail.

Once In Montreal.

London, Jan. 14.—Dr. Storey, principal of the Glasgow University is dead. In the fifties he was assistant minister at St. Andrew's, Montreal.

Daily Intelligencer.

TIMELY TOPICS.

The Mayor's speech at the inaugural meeting of the Council to-day bears out the contention which The Intelligencer has always advanced, namely, that His Worship is an eminently practical man. His address is full of suggestions which, if carried out, cannot help but redound to the welfare of the city.

The suggestion in regard to the House of Refuge is particularly apropos, and it is sincerely to be hoped that some such arrangement as His Worship suggests may be brought about. Another suggestion which should commend itself to thoughtful people is the one which recommends that in future no goods should be purchased for the city except on the order of the chairman of the committee in whose department the goods are needed.

• • •

And, come to think of it, the Mayor is to be commended about as much for what he did not say as for the things he did say. He indulged in no flowery or bombastic periods, and advocated nothing which, while it might please a few "kite flyers," would be looked at askance by the conservative majority of the ratepayers. However, this was only to be expected, for His Worship has had many years' experience in which to get into touch with the true state of affairs in this city. And then, again, he never qualified for membership in that class of people who "rush in where angels fear to tread."

• • •

The school book question is commencing to bob up as a real live topic. The reported intention of the Government to undertake the distribution of the books is, perhaps naturally, being opposed by the booksellers, but there is no doubt that it would make a hit with the average citizen who has no axe to grind. School books at cost was one of the popular cries before the last general provincial elections. It is just as popular with the great mass of the electorate now.

• • •

His old friends in this city will be pleased to hear that Mr. J. E. Alcock, formerly of Belleville, now of Kenora, Ont., led the aldermanic poll in that thriving town at the recent elections. The woods are full of successful Belleville boys. Congratulations to Ald. Alcock.

The report of the 40th annual general meeting of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, which appears elsewhere in this paper, is one which should be extremely gratifying to the shareholders of that institution which can justly claim to be among the leading financial concerns of Canada, if not the world. That this claim would be no idle boast is proven by the fact that the Bank of Commerce now has a paid-up capital of $10,000,000. Its earnings last year were $1,741,125, being $370,000 more than the year before. The large sum of $500,000 was added to the rest, which now stands at $5,000,000. These figures are eloquent, and speak volumes for the management of the bank.

The Hamilton Herald comes out a winner. It was prosecuted for libel. It published a statement which was sent to it, to the effect that a "bridge tender" had been "rotten-egged." This turned out not true, and the Herald made an apology. This did not satisfy the offended official and he entered an action for damages. Justice Clute told the jurors that they had to decide whether the article was written with malice, if it was written in good faith, if reasonable care had been taken to find the truth of the story and if ample apology had been made. If so they should find for the defence, which they did, throwing the costs upon the plaintiff. Moral: Don't prosecute a publisher unless you have a good case.

An elector declared the other day that "Alderman Butler had gone back on Alderman Starling, which Alderman Starling should resent: that these two gents sought aldermanic honors, as representatives of the bachelors of the city, and that Alderman Butler, immediately after being declared elected, hied off to Father Twomey and got married." Topics suggests that Alderman Starling can easily have his revenge upon his brother alderman, by following his example and getting married himself, and let the other city bachelors look out for themselves.

The report of the Imperial Life Assurance Company, presented at their annual meeting held in Toronto on the 9th inst., is one which should highly please the policyholders. The report, which appears in another column, shows that the applications for new business during the past year amounted to $3,217,961, and that the new policies issued were $2,930,562. The increase from premiums amounted to $717,997.95. The death claims were below the average, amounting to only $70,150. An important feature of the report shows that the expenses of conducting the business during the past year was less by $39,057.23 than that of the previous year. It will also be seen that the assets of the Company amount to $3,332,882.28, largely invested in mortgages realizing 5.79 per cent. The surplus earned during the year was $142,233.32, after paying profits to policy-holders and dividends to shareholders. These figures show a success which no company in Canada, or on the continent, has attained in the short period of nine years, and is one of which all Canadians can well be proud. It is also gratifying to know that Canadians are investing their means at home, instead of in foreign countries.

Many happy returns of the day to our old friend Allan T. Petrie, who to-day celebrates his 87th birthday. Mr. Petrie has the proud distinction of being the oldest living born Bellevillian. He is, considering his advanced age, in fairly good health and The Intelligencer hopes that he may live long to unfold tales of bygone days to his hosts of friends in this city.

Burglars Abroad In The City Last Night.

RESIDENCES OF ALD. ACKERMAN AND Mr. J. M. HURLEY, Ex-M.P., DESPOILED BY THIEVES — ROBBERY TOOK PLACE WHILE PARTIES WERE AT CHURCH.

During the early part of last evening burglars made a haul at the residences of Ald. Ackerman and Mr. J. M. Hurley, ex-M. P., Fishery Inspector, both of which houses are adjacent to each other on Queen street.

In both cases an entrance to the premises was effected by forcing a door in the rear, and it was evident that the marauders had made a complete survey of the interior of the homes, ransacking drawers, etc., in search of valuables.

At the time the occupants of the houses were attending church, and when they returned some evidences were not wanting of what had taken place during their absence.

At Ald. Ackerman's place the burglars contented themselves with taking some jewellery, amounting in value to about $50. Many papers were strewn about the floor and some were also found by the police outside of the premises. No doubt the thief or thieves anticipated finding some papers that might have been of value, but evidently they did not secure any.

At Mr. Hurley's place a much larger haul was made, as jewellery and silverware was taken amounting to over $200. Some valuable cutlery, such as knives and forks, spoons, etc., were taken. In this case, as in Ald. Ackerman's, a search was made amongst papers which were throw promiscuously about the floor.

The police were notified of the burglaries as soon as the inmates arrived home and were soon upon the spot but up to the present they give out no clue as to the culprits. It is generally believed that it was the act of local parties, who not only knew the premises but were aware the occupants were absent at the time.

It has since been learned that at Mr. Hurley's place the thieves did secure a sum of money but not a large amount.

SPORTING NOTES.

Wanderers beat Ottawa 4-2 on Saturday night, before 7000 people. The game was very rough, and three players are now in the hospital. Thirty men were ruled off, the judge of play was assaulted, and there was something doing all the time. So far as hockey was concerned, the Wanderers outplayed Ottawa.

The local Juniors play in Kingston to-night. Good luck go with em.

A Small Fire.

On Saturday afternoon, by the upsetting of a lamp in ex-Ald. Paterson's apartments, in the upstair premises on the corner of Front street and Victoria avenue, a serious fire was narrowly averted. As it was, some curtains, the carpet and other articles in a room were destroyed, but by prompt attention on the part of Mrs. Paterson the blaze was soon extinguished, and before any alarm was sounded. One of the ex-Alderman's children was responsible for the upsetting of the lamp.

DISCRIMINATING LADIES.

Enjoy Using Herpicide on Account of Its Distinctiveness.

The ladies who have used Newbro's Herpicide speak of it in the highest terms, for its quick effect in cleansing the scalp of dandruff and also for its excellence as a general hair-dressing. It makes the scalp feel fresh and it allays that itching which dandruff will cause. Newbro's Herpicide effectively cures dandruff, as it destroys the germ that causes it. The same germ causes hair to fall out, and later baldness; in killing it, Herpicide stops falling hair and prevents baldness. It is also an ideal hair dressing, for it lends an aristocratic charm to the hair that is quite distinctive. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

A Yankee Talks On Niagara Falls Power.

Major-General Greene, of Buffalo spoke before the Empire Club, Toronto, on Thursday, on the subject of Niagara Power. General Greene is a recognized authority on the question, is President of the Niagara Construction Company and of the Ontario and Niagara Power Company.

The Globe says it is an open secret that the Ontario Power Company hopes to be able, through the Hydro-Electric Commission, to sell a big block of its Niagara power to the municipalities of Ontario. It is understood that under certain conditions the company might even build the necessary transmission lines. General Greene, it will therefore be seen, is not a visionary. Among other things in his address to the Empire Club, he said,

"It is not alone in manufactures that cheap power will prove advantageous, but also in lighting, possibly in heating, and certainly in many domestic uses, not alone in the great cities, but in the villages and on the farms. I believe the day is not far distant when practically every house in Ontario within two hundred miles of the Niagara River will be lighted by electricity supplied by the power of the great cataract. It will be running the sewing machines, the churns, the ice cream freezers, the ventilating fans, the house pump, the knife cleaner and sharpener, the dish washing machine, the clothes wringer and other parts of the laundry, and a host of other domestic utensils not yet invented, but much thought about at the present time by a multitude of inventors."

Proceeding, General Greene reviewed the Niagara power situation both from the American and the Canadian standpoints, pointed out the immense economic value of cheap power to the industrial and domestic life of this Province, and declared his belief that the people on both sides of the line would secure the preservation of all the scenic beauties of the Falls, and at the same time regulate the development and production of power in the interests of the public as a whole.

He also dwelt at some length on the outlook for the rapid development of Canada into a great nation, rivalling the United States in area, population and wealth. He believed the consolidation of Canada with the British Empire would be an important factor in that growth, and deplored the hitherto mistaken attitude of the United States in regard to trade relations with this country.

Neil Donovan's Funeral.

The funeral of the late Neil Donovan took place from the residence of his parents, on the Canifton road, yesterday afternoon at 2.30 to St. Michael's Church, where services for the dead were conducted by Rev Father Twomey. At second mass, yesterday morning Mrs. Kennedy, formerly Miss Pearl Fanning, sang with much effect an offertory solo entitled "O Holy Night."

Holloway Street,

"A Christian's Atmosphere," was the subject discussed last evening by the pastor, Rev. R. H. Leitch, and a large congregation was present. His text was from Philippians, 4th chapter, and 8th verses:

> "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

During the service Miss Watson sang feelingly and sweetly a solo, entitled "My Lord and I."

Chapped Hands

Wash your hands with warm water, dry with a towel and apply Chamberlain's Salve just before going to bed and a speedy cure is certain. This salve is always invaluable for sore nipples, itching piles and skin diseases. To be had at R. Templeton & Co.'s drug Store.

GRUB STREET IN NEW YORK.

A Gastronomic Assignment and the Fate of an Epic.

A story is told of a poet who came to the metropolis with a completed epic. This found no acceptance, so after cursing the stupidity of the public and the publishers he took to writing "Sunday stuff." Soon the matter of fact attitude of the workers around him, with the practical view of the market he acquired, led him to doubt the literary value of the work he had done in the sentimental atmosphere of his native place.

Frequently a commission to write a column of humor a week came to him, and he cut his epic into short lengths, tacked a squib on each fragment and eventually succeeded in printing it all as humor at a price many times larger than the historic one brought by "Paradise Lost."

Another newcomer brought unsalable plays and high notions of the austerity of the artistic vocation. Three months after his arrival he was delighted to get a commission to write the handbook a utilitarian publisher proposed to sell to visitors seeing the metropolis. This commission brought not only a fair payment for the manuscript on delivery, but involved a vital secondary consideration. The title of the work was "Where to Eat In New York," and its preparation made it necessary for the author to dine each evening for a month in a different cafe at the proprietor's expense.—James H. Collins in Atlantic.

Be a Man.

According to the order of nature, men being equal, their common vocation is the profession of humanity, and whoever is well educated to discharge the duty of a man cannot be badly prepared to fill any of those offices that have relation to him. It matters little to me whether my pupil be designed for the army, the pulpit or the bar. Nature has destined us to the offices of human life, antecedent to our destination concerning society. To live is the profession I would teach him. When I have done with him it is true he will be neither a soldier, a lawyer nor a divine. Let him first be a man. Fortune may remove him from one rank to another as she pleases. He will always be found in his place.—Rousseau.

Hats In Parliament.

A member of parliament must never stand up with his hat on even if he has only risen to speak to the man behind him. Coming in, going out or speechifying he is always hatless, and he is sometimes hatless when sitting down. Thus if the speaker mentions a bill the member is responsible for he lifts his hat. If his name is mentioned in a speech he lifts his hat. Even if he happens at those times to be bareheaded he must seize a hat, put it on, then lift it.

Tobacco Smoke and Flowers.

A remarkable effect of tobacco smoke on the color of flowers may be seen in the case of the field scabi, named botanically Knautia arvensis so frequently on the hills and commons from August till October. If its purplish blue blossoms, which form nearly globose heads, are held in the smoke of tobacco, their color will soon turn to a bright green, about the same color as the leaves.—Exchange.

The Dangerous Part.

"See here," feebly complained the victim after the accident, "I thought you said it was perfectly safe to go up in that old elevator?"

"Well," replied the elevator man, "so it was safe to go up. You see, the dangerous part of it was comin' down."

VINOL, THE COD LIVER PREPARATION WITHOUT OIL.

CAUSES A SENSATION IN MEDICAL CIRCLES

NOT ONLY IN AMERICA, BUT IN EUROPE.

"Good news goes fast," said Mr. J. S. McKeown yesterday, talking to a reporter about that wonderful Vinol, concerning which so much is heard nowadays. "Why, you know that besides being talked about, many of the prominent papers in America are devoting more or less space to this wonderful discovery. See here, what do you think of this?" Whereupon Mr. McKeown produced an article from the Lancet of London, England.

The Lancet is the greatest medical publication in the world, and anything appearing in its columns is considered as indisputable evidence "Let me read this to you," said Mr. McKeown. "I won't bother you with much of it, but here is enough to show you what the great men of the old world think of Vinol," whereupon he read the following:

"Recent investigation has led to the isolation of several distinct bodies in cod liver oil, notably amongst which are the alkaloids. These principles have been tested faithfully, and the results form the subject of an exclusive report by Gautier and Mourgues in the Journal de Pharmacie, who concluded that the combined active principles of cod liver oil act as powerful stimulants of nutrition and assimilation, and show definitely the nature of the principles to which the oil owes its valuable medicinal properties.

"And the best part of all this is," continued Mr. McKeown, "it is not only the physicians that are enthusiastic, but the people who are taking the remedy. It does not take but a minute for any one who is obliged to take cod liver oil to find out that Vinol is deliciously palatable. It does good so much more quickly, and accomplishes the desired end in a much more marked manner than cod liver oil in its crude or emulsified form was ever able to do. Oh, yes, of course I consider the success of Vinol as assured. How can it be otherwise, — a discovery that has revolutionized the form and made it practical to prescribe the greatest known medicine for all wasting diseases.

"Just think what it means—getting all the benefits in a concentrated form, and no more nauseating, vile-smelling grease. Yes, come any time you would like to see me. I am always glad to see you about Vinol, and I find out more to say in its praise every day."

ROLLING THE DISK.

A Favorite Sport With the Boys of Northern Italy.

In northern Italy rolling the disk is a favorite sport with the boys, and there is no reason why our own boys might not indulge in the pastime. In Orrieto the boys and young men whittle out round disks of light wood, varying in size from three inches across to eight inches. The smallest sizes are rolled by children of five or six years, the largest by tall youths and young men. The disk is slightly rounded at the edges by whittling, and in throwing or rolling it a tough string from five to nine feet long is used. The string has a loop tied in one end. To roll the disk this loop is slipped over one or two of the fingers of the right hand. Then, beginning at the other end, the string is wound snugly around the edge until the disk rests in the hollow of the hand. After the disk has left the player's grasp he draws back the string with a strong, even pull.

ROLLING THE DISK.

It is surprising what a difference the use of the string makes in the speed of the disk and the distance to which it will go. Rolled from the hand in the ordinary way it will travel only a short distance, but with the string an Orvieto boy can send a large disk spinning up a steep grade on an ordinary macadam road nearly 400 feet. The boys of Orvieto never roll this toy down hill, as it would be too much trouble to chase it or to make new ones when the old ones are lost.

An interesting experiment can be made with the disk. After winding the string hold the disk wrong side up, so that the string comes to the hand from the top instead of the bottom. When thrown in this manner the disk, almost as soon as it reaches the ground, darts back toward the thrower, precisely like a billiard ball which has received a downward stroke on the underside to set it revolving toward the player.

A disk can be most conveniently cut from a two inch plank after tracing a circle of the proper size, which should not be above eight or nine inches.

Scared by a Yell.

Wild beasts as well as human beings are bewildered by the unexpected. A man who was hunting in Africa went out with a party of natives one day to kill a leopard that had been preying on the goats of the village. They found a place where the beast had been lying in the grass, and while the natives spread out and formed a ring around it the hunter got his gun ready. After awhile the leopard came out of the long grass, and the hunter fired at it, but only wounded it severely enough to make it wild with rage. With a great bound, it sprung on the man and bore him to the ground, holding him there with its paws on his breast and its snarling mouth close to his face. His nerves completely upset by the peril of his position, the hunter broke into a loud yell of horror. The leopard, evidently bewildered by this wholly unexpected outburst, leaped back from the man and ran off at full speed.

Origin of Games.

Chess, the most ancient and intellectual of games, is generally supposed to have originated with the Hindoos, and its age is about 1,000 years.

Billiards is claimed by some to have originated in the far east, while others declare the game can be traced to the English and that it is a first cousin to the game of bowls. The first person to give form and rule to the game was Henrique Devigne, who lived in the reign of Charles IX.

Football came into England with the Romans and is older than the English national game of cricket. It is played in many parts of the world, having been one of the most popular games with the Greeks.

Polo has from prehistoric times been a favorite game in the eastern countries, the Persians, Turks and Tartars engaging in the pastime with great zeal. In China and Japan there is a game closely resembling the Persian sport, but going by a different name.

Heat From Ice.

If anybody should tell you that a man can sometimes make a piece of ice serve in place of a match to light his cigar you would be likely to think that he was fooling you. Yet that is exactly what a college professor once did while out skating with a party of his students. None of them, it seems, had a match, and as he was determined to light his cigar, he cast about for some means of producing fire. Suddenly it occurred to him that he might use a piece of ice as a lens or sun glass, and he succeeded. It is said that Professor Tyndall, the famous scientist, when a teacher in the Royal Institute of London, often set fire to little heaps of powder by focusing the rays from an electric arc light by means of a piece of ice.

Oysters Scarce

Owing to a strike among the shuckers at Christmas, oysters have been very scarce. Since that time we were not able to get our supply. Now that they have gone back to work again, our supply is coming more regularly and we will be in a position to fill our orders with the finest oysters obtainable.

Our trade is large and you run no risk of getting stale goods.

ON WORK.

(Chicago Record-Herald.)

Some men work for honor,
Some men work for fame,
But they take the money
They may justly claim.
And are glad to get it,
Just the same.

Some men labor daily,
Urged by gainful lust,
Some because the doctors
Tell them that they must.
Some because they cannot
Buy on trust.

Some men work for others
Who are near and dear;
Some men work for art's sake,
So it would appear.
Some displaying courage,
Some in fear.

Some men labor nobly
For the public good,
Some because the Bible
Tells them that they should;
But if no one had to
No one would.

Lack of men at Cannes, France, is becoming almost fatal to the composure of the fair element. For instance, a young woman exclaimed the other day: "Why can't some kind society syndicate send us a trainload of men for a Christmas present? Cargoes of girls are forever being shipped to America and expressed to the West to supply the demand of lonely men for wives. Why won't somebody despatch some men to Cannes? Not for husbands, though—not by any manner of means, as they are useless and in the way—but just for playmates, to dance with, automobile with, golf with and lawn tennis with. As it is there is nothing doing but your old poker and bridge."

More than five hundred German women have joined the "Anti-Caste" Club, lately organized in Hamburg, the object of which is to "knock down those social and artificial barriers between classes which prevent free intercourse." The leaders of the movement are ladies of the highest position in Hamburg, belonging to ancient patrician families. Members of the club pledge themselves to give and accept invitations to and from all acquaintances irrespective of social position and not to hinder or oppose the marriage of any one of their families with a person of lower degree on that ground. In Germany this caste spirit is developed to an extraordinary extent, and the action of these Hamburg women has been bitterly opposed.

FOUND DEAD WITH GAS ON.

Englishman, Out of Funds and Averse to Work Ends His Life.

Toronto, Jan. 14.—Walter E. Young, aged 35, who has been boarding with William Watkins, 139 John street, was found dead in his room Saturday morning with the gas turned fully on. He arrived from Liverpool on March 13 last. Since coming to Toronto he has not worked, but appeared to have what money he required. He never received any mail at the house. His hands show he has never done any hard work. There was no money found in his possession.

El Paso, Tex., Jan. 14.—Running at high speed a Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific passenger train, bound for Chicago, dashed into an open switch at [illegible] early yesterday. Five persons were killed and eight injured, none fatally.

DRESS HINTS.

In sewing up a skirt stitch from the bottom up and it goes with, not against, the bias.

For sewing on buttons stitch twice down the hem and sew buttons on this stitching, and they will not tear out the cloth.

Very popular shades rarely last more than one season, and the woman of moderate purse, therefore, tries to select what will not be a marked color after another year.

Shirt waists that are made with a yoke across the back will last much longer, and those that have no yoke and are giving way can be mended by shaping a piece for a yoke and stitching it on.

Just as a black dress is useful, so is a black hat, which will go with all the colors whose range it is so difficult to gauge nowadays. Unless a woman can afford a hat for every gown she does well to have a black hat for those gowns which her other hats do not seem to suit.

A Baking Hint.

Did you know that a common iron spider is a fine baking pan for many things? If you want a perfectly round cake that will rise high without running over and bake perfectly, try baking it in an iron spider. The thickness of the iron prevents the cake from burning on the bottom, and you can lift the spider by the handle much easier than you can handle a cake tin. This may sound old fashioned, but if you try it you will never bake your round cakes in anything else. Then, if you want a good thick pie of a "Brown Betty," there is nothing better than the iron spider for this. Covered with another skillet of the same size it makes a fine meat roaster, and it is much better than a granite pan for baking puddings or scalloping corn or potatoes.

Buttermilk and the Skin.

Buttermilk as a cosmetic and general beautifier is highly recommended by certain persons who have experimented with the use of this fluid. After any outdoor sport or a late dance, when the body needs refreshing, the buttermilk bath is the thing, says one of these enthusiasts. But to produce really significant results one must bathe in it nightly, first wetting the body all over thoroughly and letting the milk stay on a few minutes, then carefully drying it by patting with a soft towel. The effects are refreshing in the extreme. For removing tan and sunburn in summer and chapping and roughening in winter there is nothing quite so good as washing the face in buttermilk, according to the experience of this experimenter.

Labor Men and Millionaires.

Chicago, Jan. 14.—Mrs. Potter Palmer's mansion, in Lake Shore Drive, Saturday night, was the scene of a conference of labor leaders and millionaires, all of whom were received in person by Mrs. Palmer. The National Civic Federation explained to employers and employes the aims of the organization and its efforts to place the two classes of industrialism on a common plane of thought and action. More than 500 guests and delegates attended the meeting in the art gallery of the mansion. The principal speakers were August Belmont and ex-Mayor Seth Low of New York, W. S. Stone, grand master of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers; Daniel J. Keef, president of the International Longshoremen's Union, and W. D. Mahony, president of the Amalgamated Association of Street Railway employes.

Panama Canal Tenders.

Washington, Jan. 14.—Proposals opened by the Canal Commission Saturday for the entire construction of the Panama Canal show that the lowest proposal, that of William J. Oliver of Knoxville, Tenn., and Anson M. Bangs of New York City, who offered to do the work for $6.75 per cent. of the estimated cost falls even lower than had been hoped. Granting that the estimate of $140,000,000 for the construction of the canal is accurate, the remuneration of the Oliver-Bangs combination would be $9,450,000 were it awarded the contract. The tenders ranged from 6.75 per cent. to 28 per cent. There were four bids. Mr. Bangs was the contractor for the Soo lock.

Railways Boost Wages.

Chicago, Jan. 14.—Western railroads Saturday decided to grant increased wages to locomotive engineers, aggregating between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000 annually. The increase will affect about 18,000 engineers on all the railroads west of Chicago.

Philadelphia, Jan. 14.—Mrs. Irene Steel of Chicago identified as her husband's the few fragments of clothing belonging to J. Rollo Steel, who exploded a bomb in the Fourth street National Bank last Saturday.

KITCHEN WALLS.

An Economical Finish Which Is Easily Kept Clean.

A practical and inexpensive treatment for kitchen walls is to rub successive coats of oil mixed with varnish into the walls until they are a pretty light brown shade. The first coat makes them a light yellow; then each successive coat turns it a darker brown. This can be continued until the walls are a light chocolate in color.

The varnish added to the oil produces a surface which can be washed and even scrubbed, if necessary, and one that steam will not discolor. With this wall it is effective to paint the woodwork white—three coats of common white paint and then a finishing coat of white enamel. This makes a smooth, shining finish, which easily is kept clean with a cloth wrung out of skim milk. After this treatment it will appear as smooth and shining as when first put on.

It is possible to make the walls any color one prefers by adding a little dry coloring matter to the oil and then stirring the varnish in afterward. Add the coloring matter with a light hand, trying the oil from time to time on a piece of board, so as not to make the coloring too pronounced. It is better to run the risk of not adding enough and so be obliged to add another coat than to apply one coat that is unpleasantly dark.

This treatment of the walls is far more satisfactory than using wall paper covered with a coat of shellac, so it can be wiped down with a damp cloth from time to time, or oilcloth, which also would admit of wiping down with a cloth wrung out of ammonia water. These last, not being a part of the walls themselves, afford an opportunity for the odor of cooking to linger longer than is pleasant, while they also afford a lurking place in which the insect fraternity may thrive. The day has passed when the rear of the house is relegated to the background, and today the housekeeper exhibits her spotless kitchen with pride.

AN ODD CHAIR.

This Practical Device Is Made of Two Chintz Covered Boxes.

The quaint chintz covered chair, with its big brass nails and flowered ruffles, that is shown in the illustration answers for china closet and kitchenette besides. This wonderful affair is nothing more than two boxes put together, one for the back and one for the seat. The bachelor girl opens a door like a writing desk in the back, and there is everything she wants, from dishes to vinegar and pepper and salt. If you are not too inquisitive she will tell you that another chintz covered affair in the corner with the fern sitting on it is an icebox.

AN INGENIOUS CHAIR.

Artistic? Well, rather. And very practical.

Antique Furniture.

So much antique furniture is in use at the present time that a few suggestions as to its care may not come amiss. Wipe each piece carefully with a damp chamois skin, rinsing out the chamois frequently to remove every particle of dust, and give particular attention to the carvings. These may be gently brushed with a soft brush, such as is used in burnishing silver, dipped in lukewarm water in which a little soap has been dissolved. After drying the wood carefully rub in a little linseed oil and polish with a soft cloth. This treatment applies only to mahogany and oak furniture. A very good dressing for black walnut and ebony is made from half a wineglassful each of olive oil and vinegar and a spoonful of alcohol. Linseed oil with a little turpentine added is also a very satisfactory dressing. If there is much carving on the furniture the wood may be cleansed with paraffin before polishing.

Thread.

Many sewers err in using too coarse cotton both on the machine and in hand sewing, and sometimes it is so coarse that the cloth will tear away from it. The thread should be chosen with regard to the thread or fabric of the goods and the object of the work. For buttonholes and sewing on buttons a coarse thread is needed; for gatherings, medium coarse; for stitching on the machine, fine, and for hand hemming, finer still. Many sewers will find that No. 80 will be better where they have been using No. 60. Keep the workbasket always well supplied with all commonly used numbers of cotton and plenty of needles of all sizes, different darning needles, millinery and glove needles.

Floor Borders.

To make a floor border for a rug that is laid on bare boards take old newspapers and paste down one by one until the floor is covered. Let them dry, then paste down another layer. When again dry put on a layer of good wainscoting and paste well all round. When dry go over with a good coat of varnish, and you will have a nice warm covering for your floor and one that looks as well as floor linoleum. This is a cheap method, and it wears well. When required to be cleaned wipe off with a damp cloth.

When Annie Played Gooseberry

By Ethel Barrington

Copyright, 1906, by Homer Sprague

Blackberries hedged the road on either side as it wound higher and higher toward the Berkshires. Here and there some belated strawberries, tiny specks of crimson in the grass, joined their fragrance to the invigorating breath of the pines. From an unpainted barn came the persistent click-clack, thud-thud of a loom, where Miss Lettice was weaving yards of carpet from little balls of colored rag. A voice sharp enough to the verge of displeasure startled her.

"Will you finish tomorrow, sister?"

"I—it doesn't hardly seem possible"—

"'Twas promised. 'Pears to me you're uncommon slow. Surely you're not such a fool as to be thinking o' William Henderson and such nonsense at your age."

Miss Lettice's hand involuntarily sought the fastening of her bodice, but the faint crackle of the secreted paper was too imperceptible to reach Mrs. Allen's ears.

"The letter was delayed. He's going away tomorrow"—

"Lettice Howard, he's no man for you. We settled that years ago. I'm ashamed for you—that you so much as think on him now."

"He's free again"— Miss Lettice spake deprecatingly.

"Free, is it? If he wasn't good enough for you when he was young, a widower with three children certainly ain't no gain." With a toss of the head Mrs. Allen recrossed the road to her cottage.

Miss Lettice sat miserably uncertain, her hands idle in her lap. She forgot the loom and Mrs. Harris, who was counting on the finished carpet. Her thoughts were with the curly headed lad from whom her sister had separated her because he failed to settle in the town where he was born, but, like a rolling stone, was forever wandering, apparently gathering little of this world's goods. Now he had returned and wanted to see her. It seemed a cruel prank of fate to have joined forces with her sister and in the form of delayed mail prevent their meeting. A tear gathered beneath her lashes, but before it fell a pair of warm arms wound themselves around her neck.

"Aunt Lettice, you're in love, in love! Don't ask me how I know, because you are. You don't listen to what folks are saying, and as to the carpet"—

"Yes, dear, the carpet." Miss Lettice seized the shuttle and sent it flying through the shed of warp threads. Her feet mechanically worked the treadle shifting the heddles; then with the batten she bent the woof of rag into place again and again.

"We can't talk through that noise," she remarked plaintively.

"My dear, there is nothing"—

"There is, you darling. Come, 'fess up. I'm not to be put off. It's fellow sympathy." The crimson deepened in the laughing face, and with soft wheedling she gained the desired confidence, and Miss Lettice surrendered her letter.

It was in no sense a love letter, yet it was the nearest approach that the spinster had ever received. Possibly she read between the lines:

> Dear Lettice—I am visiting my brother Joe till Wednesday. I want so much to see you. If I'd be welcome send me word. Yours, as ever, WILLIAM.

"I—I only got it last night"—

"It's too late to write now," her niece hurried on, "but you must go to Chatham to see him. Make believe you're shopping. Jennie's going tomorrow. I'll have Rob ask her to stop for you."

"Sister would never listen. Besides, it's not the carrier's day."

"She's making a special trip for Rob's mother. Just to think"—the girl rose excitedly—"it must be ten years"—

"Twelve."

"And you've cared all this time! Oh, Aunt Lettice, how could you bear it? Mother's good as she can be, only she's had so much trouble it's made her a little hard. Do as I say and I'll play gooseberry for you. After breakfast come over here, as usual. About 10 walk down the road till the carrier overtakes you, then to Chatham with her and to Joe Henderson's, ask for William and you'll have hours together. Jennie will pick you up on her homeward trip. You'll be back to supper. Mother need never know unless you choose to tell her."

"But the carpet! If she doesn't hear the loom she'll come over to find out what's wrong."

"Leave that to me. I've got to think, but I'll fix it somehow."

During supper Mrs. Allen glanced anxiously at her sister's flushed cheeks and untouched plate. With the morrow William would be gone, then Lettice would return to her normal self.

Later, when Annie wandered down the road with Rob, the moonlight showed their heads very close together, while now and again the girl broke into a ripple of mischievous laughter. Watching, the mother felt a pang of jealousy. Rob was a good match, yet she dreaded the day she must yield her daughter to another, and tonight the time seemed very near. She went several times to her room for forgotten trifles, and each time there showed a line of light beneath her sister's door.

"Seems to me you're a long time getting to bed," she admonished.

"I—I'm most ready," came the reply. If Miss Lettice's voice sounded less even than usual Mrs. Allen was not herself sufficiently calm to notice.

As was customary in the morning Miss Lettice betook herself to the barn, and the working of the loom broke familiarly on the quiet air. Shortly after 10 Mrs. Allen, attracted by the rumble of wheels on the road, saw that the carrier was making an extra trip. She spoke of it to Annie, who came in hot and tired to noonday dinner.

"Call your aunt," she continued. "The pork will be cold. I got it specially to tempt her. She's eaten nothing these two days."

"Rob's mother invited her"— began Annie nervously.

"What for?" Mrs. Allen turned sharply, dish in hand.

"She has some rags for carpet weaving. Rob told me about it."

Mrs. Allen sniffed, disgruntled. "Your aunt had to go traipsing off without telling me. Besides, there's none too much daylight to finish Mrs. Harris' piece."

In the afternoon she was too busy preserving to notice Annie's absence or give thought of her sister, but when the last jar of jelly was sealed she caught up her sunbonnet and crossed the road to relieve Lettice.

As she entered the barn the glare from the outside sunlight blinded her, but even when that passed she doubted her own sight. Rob was working the loom while Annie, rosy and tender, hung over the back of his chair. Miss Lettice was nowhere to be seen, but the carpet was completed. Even as she entered Rob threw down the shuttle and caught Annie around the waist.

"Now, my reward!" he cried, his lips seeking hers lovingly.

"Annie!" At Mrs. Allen's cry the young people turned, but Rob did not release the girl.

"Mrs. Allen, she's promised—that is, with your approval. I love her. I'll be as good to her as I know how."

"Say yes, mother. I'm so happy"—

There was a painful silence before Mrs. Allen reluctantly gave consent; then her bitterness sought an outlet.

"Where is your aunt?"

"The carpet's done," explained Rob cheerfully.

"Done, is it? By whom?"

"Mis' Allen, Mis' Allen"— The carrier drew her horse up at the barn and on Mrs. Allen's appearance thrust a note into her hand and hastened on.

"Daughter, did you know of this?" Mrs. Allen's voice shook as she passed the paper to the girl, who read aloud:

> "Sister, don't be angry. I just had to see William, and he could not bear that we should part again. I'm very happy.
> LETTICE HENDERSON.

"She's married, mother dear. Now it's done won't you be glad too?"

But Mrs. Allen turned and walked silently over to the cottage.

"It's a bit rough on her losing you both the same day," admitted Rob, drawing the girl's hand into his, "but we'll make it all up to her in the future."

The Telltale Cloak.

In the old days men and boys wore rather long cloaks in the winter time. They were black and were lined with very bright and showy Scotch plaids. One winter's night when I was starting to church to square a crime of some kind committed during the week I hid my cloak near the gate and went off and played with the other boys until church was over. Then I returned home. But in the dark I put the cloak on wrong side out, entered the room, threw the cloak aside and then stood the usual examination. I got along very well until the temperature of the church was mentioned. My mother said:

"It must have been impossible to keep warm there on such a night."

I didn't see the art of that remark and was foolish enough to explain that I wore my cloak all the time I was in church. She asked if I kept it on from church home too. I didn't see the bearing of that remark. I said that was what I had done. She said:

"You were in church with that red Scotch plaid outside and glaring? Didn't that attract any attention?"

Of course to continue such a dialogue would have been tedious and unprofitable, and I let it go and took the consequences.—From Mark Twain's Autobiography in North American Review.

Fish Stories.

It is constantly said that fishermen greatly exaggerate the size of the fish that are lost. This accusation, though most frequently and flippantly made, is in point of fact based upon the most absurd arrogance and a love of slanderous assertion that passes understanding. These are harsh words, but they are abundantly justified.

In the first place, all the presumptions are with the fisherman's contention. It is perfectly plain that large fish are more apt to escape than small ones. Of course their weight and activity, combined with the increased trickiness and resourcefulness of age and experience, greatly increase their ability to tear out the hook and enhance the danger that their antics will expose a fatal weakness in hook, leather, line or rod. Another presumption which must be regretfully mentioned arises from the fact that in many cases the encounter with a large fish causes such excitement and such distraction or perversion of judgment on the part of the fisherman as leads him to do the wrong thing or fail to do the right thing.—"Fishing and Shooting Sketches," by Grover Cleveland.

His Reason.

"Halfback Smashum says that football players should not be allowed to wear head protections."

"On what does he base his argument?"

"Why, he is out of the game with a lame foot, the result of kicking one of his opponents on the nose gear."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

WANTED, A MAN

By Martha McCulloch-Williams

Copyright, 1906, by E. C. Parcells

Orestes Magin stood twirling his red mustache, his eyes downcast, his heart beating like a trip hammer. Well might it beat fast! He had just asked Squire Malcom for his daughter. The squire was a choleric person at the best of times, but this morning his humor was fiendish. Orestes, of course, did not know that.

There was a reason for the mood, slight, to be sure, but any reason was sufficient when the time came for one of the old gentleman's rages. He was nearly as proud of his melon patch as of his daughter and felt it a personal insult if anybody else presumed to have melons earlier. Yet here were those miserable Dawsons, outlanders, city bred at that, sending him a melon fully ripe with their compliments and all because he had laughed at Dawson and his gardener when they had talked to him about a certain extra early kind.

Now, it would be quite ten days before he could return the sending.

"Want my girl, eh? Isn't there something else? Don't be mealy mouthed. Ask for my eyeteeth or the farm and all the money I've got in bank!" he roared at poor Orestes, who stood nervously shifting his feet. "By George, sir, I'm amazed at your moderation! Of course I've raised Edith just a-purpose to see her throw herself away. Don't interrupt me, sir! I know all you're going to say—you love her and don't care a bit that she'll have more money than any other girl around. I've heard that from better men than you are. I tell you, as I've told them, she's not for any such cattle. I want her myself yet awhile. When I give her up it's going to be to a man. Be off with you now, sir, and don't let me see you here again—not unless you're willing to swear there shall be no more of this nonsense."

"I'm going," Orestes said hoarsely, turning half about. "But what you call 'this nonsense' is going to last—with me and with Edith, too, I believe. We'll wait a year to let you come to a better temper. But I'm going to see her across your gate every little while. I won't ever set foot on your land again, though, unless you ask it."

"Do you think I'll have such scandalous behavior?" the squire shouted. A hand fell over his lips. Edith had crept up behind him.

"Unless you will have it I shall go with Restes right straight off," she said, with a set of the mouth and a lowering of the brow that made of her her father's daughter. In suffocating anger that forbade speech the squire waved the pair away. Edith would not go. She held out her hand to Orestes, saying: "I'll be at the gate tonight. We'll settle things there." Then as the young fellow strode off she fetched cool water to bathe the squire's head, fanned him and made him sit under the grapevines, saying no word to him until he had come to a semblance of reason. When she saw his head droop thoughtfully and his cane make faint plunges into the turf she whispered: "Don't fret yourself sick, father. You know you can't really say anything against Restes. He's as good as he's ugly."

"He's a molly coddle, brought up at his granny's apron strings," the squire interrupted.

"Then I like molly coddles, and I've been brought up to know men," she said, running away to see about dinner. The squire looked after her with a scowl that softened at last to a sigh. He thought the world of her. Love was indeed at the bottom of his scorn for poor Orestes.

Fate had hard lines ahead of the squire. Edith went duly to the gate every Wednesday evening at sundown and spent an hour there in earnest talk with her sweetheart. Even the squire could not bring himself to ignore Orestes completely when they met, but he never went beyond the gruff nod all the three Sundays before he was laid by the heels. Obstinacy—of man and beast—brought that about. Blicky, the buggy mare, took occasion to balk just at the top of the lane hill, and, instead of humoring her by walking up what remained of the rise, her master sat tight and tried to make her pull him. The result was much backing, kicking and at last an upset vehicle and a broken leg for the squire with the prospect of spending a month at least flat on his back.

He roared and raged if by any chance Edith was out of his sight. For two weeks she did not see Orestes, but when the third Wednesday came she put on her bonnet with the air of a person not to be gainsaid. At the door of the squire's room she paused to say: "If you want anything, father, ring your bell—it's right there at hand—and Sally will come in. You'd better ring it every little while, else she'll go to sleep. I hate going, but there is no other way—not unless you"—

She stopped tentatively, her eyes wistful. The squire glared at her, his eyes full of fury. "So! This is your notion of duty," he said thickly. "Very well. Go your gait! I'm old and helpless, but there are a few things I can do."

"Yes, you can ring for Sally and scare her out of her wits," Edith said, trying to laugh as she walked away. At the doorstep she was tempted to go back, but the thought of Orestes waiting so patiently at the roadside was too much for her.

The squire lay for ten minutes tensely brooding, his face drawn and lined. Then he sat up and began recklessly to hitch himself out of bed. Within reach were the crutches which he was to essay tomorrow. Once he put out his hand to the bell, but drew it back, muttering: "No! By the Lord, I'll do it all myself! I'll show them they can't run over me—not quite." Then, still muttering and mumbling, he wrapped himself in his dressing gown, reached for the crutches and swayed and staggered across to the door.

The squire sat down heavily upon the second step of the broad stairway and began craftily going up backward. He lifted himself from tread to tread, then drew the crutches after him. By some whim he had kept his desk and all his papers in the big south chamber that had been his wife's. He was going there now. If he lived to come back from it, he would leave behind a new will, one that would come near to disinheriting his rebellious child. It would do more than that. It would set forth her rebellion, her neglect of him, in such fashion as to shame her, here where honor to parents was so vital a part of decency.

Painfully, with set teeth and agonized twinges, he won to his goal and sat in front of the opened desk. He found the will readily and tore it through angrily, then wrote upon the biggest fragment, "This is the work of a neglected father."

But all this had taken time, and dusk was falling rapidly.

He snatched up a fresh sheet and began to write, but the racing darkness was too quick for him. Before he was half through he stopped and looked about him, full of thwarted, impotent rage. He flung out his hand and struck it against a taper which had lain there so long he had forgotten it. By its feeble light he finished the new will and signed his name with a heavy, scrawling flourish.

Slowly, heavily, he got up and tried to steady himself while he put the crutches in place, but a sharp twinge made him stagger. He lost balance and fell prone, overturning the lighted taper and bringing it in contact with the contents of an open drawer. They blazed up merrily. In a wink the whole room was ablaze. As he lay helpless he saw the flames lick at the carvings on top of the desk. Then indeed the squire groaned aloud and dragged himself to the open window.

A wall of fire was behind him, before him a fall of almost twenty feet! To swing out and drop down below meant certain death even if he had strength for it. He shouted, but nothing came of it. Sally was really fast asleep in the cool back yard. He shut his eyes and thought of Edith's mother. In the great extremity there came a flash of comfort—when he was dead both wills would be burned, and Edith, his only child, would have everything. He ought to have been angry, but somehow he could not be. The mounting flames made his own wrath look poor and tame. He had given up and was waiting for the end when straight through the wall of fire there burst a slim figure, sheeted and blackened, but moving like the light itself. In a wink it had torn off the wet blankets protecting it, swathed the squire in them and was bearing him out to safety regardless of the flames that leaped at its own head. Once through the door other arms laid hold on him and helped to bear him down the stairs. When he came to himself fully he was stretched on the grass at a safe distance, while neighbors and farm folk fought the fire to a finish.

The squire lay very still, but kept his eyes on one slim scorched figure that led all the rest. When the danger was past he raised himself on his elbow and said, pointing to the slim leader: "Daughter, I take back everything. You've chosen a man."

Bancroft's Answer.

I have just heard a good mot—it is not more than a mot—of Bancroft, the American historian, who is now United States minister at Berlin. Loftus, our ambassador there, thought, I suppose, that the Yankee was a fair and would be an easy butt for the shafts of his peculiarly refined wit, so attacks him before a hundred listeners on some public occasion with "In God's name, Mr. Bancroft, why don't you Yankees send your representatives to court like Christians, in a proper uniform, instead of turning them out all dressed in black, like so many undertakers?"

Whereto Bancroft replies: "Really, Lord Augustus, I am surprised that you, as ambassador of the queen of England and with those keen powers of penetration for which you are so generally distinguished, should have failed to perceive that we could not be more appropriately dressed than we are at European courts, where what we represent is the burial of monarchy."—From Letters of Lord Lytton.

Shoplifters In Bookstores.

"Ours is one business in which there are no women shoplifters," said a bookseller yesterday. "We are troubled with shoplifters, but they are all men. Women don't seem to have any time for book stealing. It's remarkable how many thefts we detect in the course of a week. Visitors who look prosperous enough to buy whole libraries are often caught abstracting a twenty-five cent book. I figure that this is due to the great temptation. You see, in bookstores callers are given the run of the place and are at liberty to examine the stock at their leisure. A man picks up some little volume he may want, and, seeing no one at hand, the temptation to get something for nothing is too much for him. He slips the coveted article into his pocket, but we have wary salesmen, and most such offenders are tripped up. Then they have to pay for the purloined volumes and are warned that more serious consequences will follow any repetition of the shoplifting."—Philadelphia Record.

If you knew what the drug cures contain, and their ultimate effect on the system, you would discard them at once and take Zutoo, which is harmless as

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE

Report of the Proceedings of the Annual Meeting of Shareholders

TUESDAY, 8th JANUARY, 1907.

The fortieth annual meeting of the Shareholders of the Canadian Bank of Commerce was held in the banking house on Tuesday, 8th January, 1907, at 12 o'clock.

The President, Hon. George A. Cox, having taken the chair, Mr. F. G. Jemmett was appointed to act as Secretary, and Messrs. Aemilius Jarvis and W. M. Alexander were appointed scrutineers.

The President called upon the Secretary to read the annual report of the Directors, as follows:

REPORT.

The Directors beg to present to the Shareholders the fortieth annual report, covering the year ending 30th November, 1906, together with the usual statement of assets and liabilities.

The balance at credit of Profit and Loss Account brought forward from last year was	58,871.76
Net profits for the year ending 30th November, after providing for all bad and doubtful debts, amounted to	$1,741,125.40
	$1,799,997.16
Which has been appropriated as follows:
Dividends Nos. 78 and 79, at seven per cent. per annum	$ 700,000.00
Bonus of one per cent.	100,000.00
Written off Bank Premises	341,434.73
Transferred to Pension Fund (annual contribution)	30,000.00
Subscription to San Francisco Relief Fund	25,000.00
Transferred to Rest Account	500,000.00
Balance carried forward	103,562.43
	$1,799,997.16

The entire assets of the Bank have as usual been carefully revalued, and ample provision has been made for all bad and doubtful debts.

Last year we were able to show earnings which were the largest in the history of the Bank. This year we have again made satisfactory progress, our net earnings amounting to $1,741,125.40, or about $370,000 more than last year. In view of these handsome profits, your Directors decided that the time had come to increase the annual distribution to the shareholders, and, in addition to the usual dividend at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, they have declared a bonus of one per cent. making a total distribution of eight per cent. for the past year. After providing for this increased distribution and for the annual contribution to the Pension Fund, we have been able to write $341,434.73 off Bank Premises, and to add $500,000 to the Rest, which now stands at $5,000,000, or 50 per cent. of the Paid-up Capital.

In April last a terrible calamity overtook the City of San Francisco, where we have a large and important business. Having regard to our long connection with San Francisco through the Bank of British Columbia, your Directors thought it only fitting that we should express in a tangible manner our sympathy with the sufferers, and they accordingly voted $25,000 as a contribution to the Relief Fund.

In accordance with an agreement made in the early part of the year, this Bank took over, as on the 1st of June last, the business of the Merchants' Bank of Prince Edward Island, which gave us new branches at Charlottetown, Summerside, Alberton, Montague and Souris, all in Prince Edward Island. The branch which that Bank had at Sydney was amalgamated with our own branch there. The six months' experience which we have had with our new business gives us every reason to be satisfied with the purchase.

In addition to the offices thus acquired the Bank has opened during the year new branches at the following points: In Alberta, at Bawlf, Crossfield, Gleichen, Leavings, Stavely, Stony Plain, Strathcona and Wetaskiwin; in Saskatchewan, at Canora, Humboldt, Kamsack, Langham, Lashburn, Radison, Vonda, Wadena, Watson and Weyburn; in Manitoba, at Norwood, and at Alexander Avenue, at Blake street and at Fort Rouge, Winnipeg; in Ontario, at Fort William, Kingston, Latchford, Lindsay, Ottawa (Bank street), Parry Sound and Wingham, and at Parkdale, and at 197 Yonge street, in the City of Toronto; in Quebec, at West End, Montreal, and in the City of Quebec; in the United States, at the corner of Van Ness and Eddy streets, San Francisco. The branches at Sackville, N.B., and Canning and Lunenburg, N.S., have been closed. Since the close of the bank's year branches have been opened at De Lorimier, Que., and Innisfree, Alta.

It is with deep regret that your Directors record the death of their late colleague, Mr. W. B. Hamilton, who for nearly twenty-two years had been a Director of the Bank. Until his health began to fail Mr. Hamilton was rarely absent from the meetings of the Board, where his long experience in business made him at all times a wise and prudent counsellor. To fill the vacancy the Directors elected the Hon. W. C. Edwards, of Rockland.

An Amendment to the By-laws will be submitted for your approval, increasing the number of Directors from twelve to fourteen.

In accordance with our long-established practise, the branches and agencies in Canada, the United States and Great Britain, and the various departments of the head office of the Bank have been inspected during the year.

The Directors have again pleasure in recording their appreciation of the efficiency and zeal with which the officers of the Bank have performed their respective duties.

Toronto, 8th January, 1907. GEORGE A. COX, President.

GOD MADE MANIFEST

HOW ALMIGHTY'S MERCY AND POWER TRANSFORMS.

BURDENS FALL TO FAITH

Mystery of the Man Born Blind Used By the Divine Man, Christ Jesus, For the Teaching of the Multitude In the Wonderful Ways and Methods of God In Dealing With His Children.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1907, by Frederick Diver, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 13.—In this sermon the preacher shows how even our heaviest burdens and afflictions may be transformed into blessings through divine mercy and power to those who ask in faith. The text is John ix, 3, "That the works of God should be made manifest in him."

There is something very consolatory to me in the fact that the character sketches of the Old and the New Testaments do not deal entirely with the Enochs and the Joshuas and the Josephs. These men, to be frank, are too good for me to feel fellowship with them. I read and reread the records of their lives, and I do not find one flaw in them. But when I find God offering his mercy and pardon to a Jacob and a David and a Peter and a doubting Thomas I say to myself, "Ah, if God can cleanse such men of their sins, I know he can and will cleanse me of my sins if I only throw myself upon his mercy and his love." Now, our Lord's disciples had the same doubts and the same failings in their nature as we have. Though they lived very close to Jesus in a physical sense, they were just as far from him in a spiritual sense as some of us are. The same problems and difficulties which are worrying us were worrying them. The same questions which are being discussed by us were being discussed by them. And here to-day we find one of the greatest of all modern questions being brought by them to Christ for settlement.

Jesus was one day going out of the temple accompanied by his friends. There by one of the gates stood a young man blind from his birth. He was a beggar. He had that mute appeal of sightless eyeballs so pathetic to look at. He stood there as hundreds of blind mendicants now stand in the east, begging for money with the words: "Backsheesh! Backsheesh! For the love of God, give me backsheesh!" I think that the disciples as they were walking along had their heads together, talking earnestly upon some great gospel theme. They wanted Christ to explain for them some of the knotty questions of theology which we all want him to do. Among these problems was probably that of suffering. Was it true, as so many Jews believed, that affliction was sent as punishment for sin? We know from the book of Job that such an idea was prevalent, but was it true? There were some facts that contradicted the theory. Some men who were undoubtedly good, yet were great sufferers. This difficulty was so obvious that another theory had sprung up. There were some who said, "Perhaps the sufferer is good, and his suffering may be the result of the sin of his ancestors." As they talked they noticed the conspicuous beggar at the temple gate, and they made his case the subject of a question to their Master. Why was this man blind? Was his blindness a punishment for his own sin or for some sin committed by his parents? That is a question which has long been a mystery, and perhaps you and I have discussed it a hundred times. What did Jesus say? Why, he said, "Neither hath this man sinned nor his parents, but that the works of God should be made manifest in him."

Have you grasped the full significance of this answer? If you do you have the key to some of the mysteries of your own life. God has sent to you that lung trouble, or that dullness of hearing, or that dimness of eyesight, or that family trouble, or that financial distress, not on account of your sins or on account of your parents' sins, but that God's mercy and power might be made manifest to all the world in your life. Do you believe that? Well, if not, I want to plead with you to believe it. Therefore let us try and find out how the works of God can be made manifest in your present physical, mental and spiritual troubles, as they were made manifest in the miraculous cure of the young man of the east who was born blind and who had his eyesight given to him when he obeyed the commands of the Lord Jesus Christ.

When the blind man's eyes were opened Christ performed a miracle which no power on earth had ever been able to do. He was not an oculist who was cutting away a cataract which, as a dark curtain, had been dropped over the eyeball of an old man. He was not a charlatan who was making a salve out of the mud to assuage the inflammation of the ophthalmic nerves. But he was a miracle worker who could give hearing to a deaf and dumb man who had been born without any eardrum, without any sounding board to catch the waves of sound as they came surging into the ivory vestibules of the ear. In other words, Christ was giving to this young man of the east his eyesight when there was no visual organ there, when the ocular nerves were gone. The work Christ was doing for that young man's eyes was exactly what he could do if he put a new leg upon your body after your leg had been crushed in a railroad accident and amputated by the surgeon's knife. Never since the world was created up to the time of Jesus had any man ever received his sight after he had been born blind. This miracle was a test case. Christ was practically saying, "If I can give eyesight to this afflicted one I can do everything and anything, oh, ye of little faith."

The other day I saw a picture of the new gallery of one of the largest auditoriums of the west. It was filled with hundreds of bags of sand and lime. They were put there to test the strength of the gallery, as every railroad bridge is tested before a passenger train is allowed to go over it. Those sand bags were practically saying, "If this gallery can hold up my weight it can hold up the bodies of hundreds of people who shall be crowded into it." So Christ by curing the eyesight of one born blind was proving to the world that his superhuman power could accomplish anything, since it could cure one born blind.

If we use blindness or any other incurable physical infirmity as the symbol of sin we have a right to infer that the power which can give sight or remove the infirmity is a superhuman power and that the same power can eradicate sin. An old legend tells us that Martin Luther when he was torn by remorse and anguishing over his past sins had a strange dream. At that time he was very sick. While he lay in his bed he saw the evil one enter his room with a huge scroll upon his back.

With a demoniac leer he suddenly began to unroll it. The scroll seemed to grow larger and larger as it unfolded before Luther's eyes. Then as the fiend began to unroll this scroll Luther began to read. And as he read on he found out that this long scroll was the record of his past evil life. "There are thy sins," the fiend chuckled. "Aha, see, the record of them is all there!" But as Martin Luther read on suddenly a passage of Scripture flashed into his mind. He raised himself upon his sickbed and said: "Oh, demon, you have forgotten to put something in that record. The record is all true, but you have forgotten the one promise which cancels all that ghastly list. Write it there. Write it there now. 'The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.'"

No sooner did Luther speak thus, the old legend says, "than the fiend gathered up his long, heavy scroll and, with a wild cry of defeat, fled into the darkness of the night." That may be only a legend, but it is the consolation of many a sin burdened heart. Like the blind man of the east, we have been staggering along in the darkness of our sins. But Jesus has come and touched our eyes. Jesus has cleansed us. Jesus has made a test case out of our sins. On account of his shed blood he has spoken to our repentent souls: "Thou art whole. Thou art whole." Oh, the wonderful miracle of the kindled eyesight of the blind man of the east! Oh, the divine grace which can cleanse us from all sin!

But it is not sufficient here to make a general statement that this young man, having his eyesight given to him, is the symbol of our own lives being cleansed of sin by a supernatural power. We must go more into detail and tell you how this young man came to have his eyesight given to him. In the first place, we would state he was not a disciple of Jesus Christ at all. Up to the time Peter asked, "Master, who did sin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind?" I do not believe he had ever heard of Jesus or he had ever spoken to him. He was just one of those miserable beggars of the east who live on charity.

There these beggars may be met on every street. Like the Jerusalem dogs, they crawl under the very hoofs of your horses. They greet you in the country. They follow you into the city. They are at every street corner. They are cursed at and spat upon. "Get out of the way there, you beggar!" you can hear the cry on almost every hand. They are the vampires, the offscourings of the east. Like the poltroons of Rome, who used to cut off their thumbs so they could not shoot a bow and arrow and would therefore be immune from conscription in the Roman army, some of these beggars of the east mutilate themselves in order to escape work and to be able to better ply their trade of begging. Ah, yes, this poor blind beggar of the east must have been well used to kicks and cuffs and upbraidments! But no sooner had Peter finished talking than a most wonderful experience was his. The blind man could not see, but he could hear. He could feel. And, oh, the softest voice began to talk to him! Every word was a gentle word of love. The softest touch pressed his eyelids. This strange being came and put some salve upon his eyes and then said, "Son, go to the pool of Siloam and wash." The blind man could not make out who this strange being was, but he felt that he must be either a God or the representative of a God. Thus the blind man went and came seeing. That is the symbol of true conversion. It is obeying Christ as the blind man obeyed him. It is just giving yourself up to his will. It is doing what he wants you to do, even though it may seem a foolish way of getting cured. The blind man obeyed Christ, even though he could not tell who he was.

"Oh," you answer, "I do want Jesus for my Saviour, but I cannot understand how he could be co-equal with God and yet be born of Mary the Virgin! I want to believe it, but I cannot. I don't understand how this Jesus could be resurrected from the dead. I do not understand how he could perform those miracles." Don't you, my brother? Perhaps you do not see his face as Paul saw it on the Damascus road. But that does not prevent your trusting him like the blind man of the east. Even though you cannot understand all about him, cannot you hear his sweet voice? Cannot you feel the touch of his fingers upon your eyelids? Cannot you hear him saying to you as he spake to the blind man of the east, "Go wash in the pool of Siloam." Cannot you hear his dear voice speaking? Will you not surrender yourself and obey his will, even though you cannot understand all about this Jesus?

But there is another fact you must bear well in mind. No sooner did this young man have his eyes opened at the Siloam pool than he became brave enough and manly enough to speak the truth and tell what Jesus had done for him. He was not a craven hearted, ungrateful coward, as were his timid parents. He was one of those high principled, true, noble fellows who never believed in going back upon a friend or refusing to give the credit to the person who has done them a favor. But before we show what the true heartedness of this young man was able to do for Christ let us turn for a little while and study the parents of this blind boy. You cannot praise the boy's manliness without condemning the timidity of the father and mother. These two parents, of all people, ought to have been most grateful to Jesus.

Now what happens? No sooner is the first exciting welcome over than the parents say to their son: "My boy, who gave you these eyes? How dost thou see?" Then the son replies: "Why, mother and father, this was my experience: I was down near the temple begging. A man by the name of Jesus came along. He had the sweetest voice. He had the gentlest touch. He made a salve. This he rubbed upon my eyelids. Then he told me to go and wash in the pool of Siloam. Oh, mother! I want you to come with me and thank Jesus for my eyes." "What!" says the mother. "Jesus! Is it the same Jesus whom the leaders of the church are trying to kill? No. My son, don't mention his name. Why, if you do this the church leaders will excommunicate us, and we shall never have any of our neighbors as our friends. You have your eyes. Of course this man Jesus cannot take them away from you. Now, you had better pretend that he had nothing to do with the miracle." Did you ever hear anything meaner? Did you ever know of an action more contemptible than that of the parents of that young man who had received his sight? I have given to you the gist of their actions in my own language. Oh, yes, I know of some other actions just as contemptible. They are your actions and mine when we refuse to give God the credit for all Christ has done for us and ours. We are in exactly the same position as were these parents who refused to give Jesus the credit of opening the blind eyes of their son when they said: "By what means he now seeth we know not, or who hath opened his eyes we know not. He is of age; ask him. Let him speak for himself." Are we so cowardly that we will not give Christ the credit for what he has done for us and ours?

But, though we would blame the craven hearted parents who would not speak one word for Jesus Christ, how gladly we turn to eulogizing the nobility and the bravery and the true heartedness of this man of my text, in whom the works of God were here made manifest. No coward was he. Not a tremor did he have. He was not one of those who would go with a man only long enough to get all he could out of him and then drop him. Nay. A friend with him was a friend all through. When the hirelings of the high priest came to him and said, "If you do not denounce this Jesus we will excommunicate thee," the young man's eyes flashed and his hand clinched and his cheeks flushed as he proudly lifted his head and scornfully answered: "I will not deny him. You may kill me if you like. I will never go back on the Jesus who has done so much for me. Whether he be a sinner or not, I know not. One thing I know That whereas I was blind, now I see."

And what was the result of this young man's testimony? Though he had the smallest conviction of Christ, though he could not tell who Jesus was in the broad Christian conception, though he could only say, "He opened my eyes, and I see," yet that young man's testimony was able to win many disciples to the cross. Have you not read the chapter of my text? No sooner had this young man told his simple story than there was a division among the multitudes. Some still scoffed at Christ. Some will always scoff. But some who came to scoff knelt and prayed, for the Bible says, "Others said, How can a man that is a sinner do such miracles?" And, my brother, you may be a spiritual weakling, but if you go forth earnestly and faithfully to testify for the Master with the light you have you will win many souls to Christ. Yes, you can win them to Christ now.

But I cannot close without drawing attention to the most tremendous fact of this story. Though this young man only had a crude conception of Christ when his eyes were opened, yet as soon as he was brave enough and true enough to live up to the gospel light which he had Christ revealed himself in all the beauty of holiness to him. Just read that chapter. It is a beautiful story. It is only one step from the crude belief to the perfect belief. If you will go forth and serve God by the light you have Christ will come to you as he came to the young man of the east, whose eyesight he had kindled, and he will say: "Dost thou believe on the Son of God? Thou hast seen him, and it is he that talketh with thee." And he said: "Lord, I believe. And he worshipped him." Yes, if we will only continue to serve God by the light we have Jesus Christ will continue more and more to reveal himself to us in a brighter and a holier and a truer light.

Thus to-day, whether we are old or young, rich or poor, church members or nonchurch members, I feel that we are one and all standing in the light of some gospel truth. Are we ready to obey that truth as much as we see it? Are we ready to proclaim that truth no matter what earthly power bids us nay? Are we ready to be true to Christ, as was Bishop Latimer when preaching before King Henry VIII? In the midst of his sermon he suddenly stopped and said: "Latimer! Latimer! Latimer! Remember thou art in the presence of thy king. Heed well what thou sayest to him." Then he paused again and said: "Latimer! Latimer! Latimer! Remember that thou art in the presence of the King of kings. Heed well what thou sayest. It is more important to obey the King of kings than it is to obey any earthly potentate." Oh, my friends, are you saying this? Will you be as true to the King of kings as was Hugh Latimer or the young man of the east who was brave enough to be true to Christ when he said, "Whether he be a sinner or no, I know not, but one thing I know—that whereas I was blind, now I see?"

Made It Even.

Curran, when master of the rolls in Ireland, was going one day to a levee at the castle. There was a great press of carriages, when all at once he was startled by the pole of the carriage which followed him crashing through the back of his. He hastily put his head out of the window, crying to his coachman: "Stop, stop! The pole of the carriage behind is driven into us." "Arrah, then, it's all right again, your honor," said Pat, "for I've just druv my pole into the carriage before."

Mrs. M.S.W. Aged 35

Presented the following history: — Since childhood she has been subject to periodical headaches, which she regarded as hereditary, as her mother and aunt had suffered similarly without relief. During the past few years she has complained of heart trouble, dyspepsia, constipation, and periods of extreme nervousness: while suffering the attacks of headache she had nausea and vomiting, so she often had to keep her bed for days. Several physicians had been consulted, but no permanent relief was obtained. Finally she was led to have her eyes examined, when a bad form of astigmatism was discovered with oblique axis (which is always a source of eyestrain); the correct glasses were given, to be worn constantly. She began to improve at once, the headaches, and all the other distressing symptoms entirely disappeared. Consultation free. —ALEX. RAY.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"THE VILLAGE PARSON."

The many lights and shades that are constantly occurring in human life will be truthfully reproduced in the production of "The Village Parson" which comes to the opera house on Wed., Jan. 16th. This play has been meeting with great success in all cities where presented, and the numerous favorable comments that have been heaped upon it have been most flattering, to say the least. With a decidedly brilliant cast, and new and complete mounting, "The Village Parson" compares with any of the better class of melodramatic presentations of the current season.

Mayor Makes Very Practical Address--The New Chairmen--Civic Appointments Made by By-law --Medical Health Officer to Get $300 Per Year.

The inaugural meeting of the new City Council was held in the Council chamber at 11 o'clock this morning. All members were present, namely Mayor Sulman, Aldermen Marsh, Vermilyea, McCrodan, Green, Ackerman, Burrows, Panter, Starling, Butler and Thompson.

A number of ratepayers were also present. After the Clerk had read the result of the elections, Mayor Sulman was escorted to the chair by Aldermen Ackerman and Butler.

An appropriate prayer was offered up by the Rev. J. P. Wilson, pastor of Bridge St. Church.

Mayor Sulman then read his inaugural address which was as follows:

I am pleased to welcome you all as members of the City Council and assure you it is no small compliment paid you by the citizens of Belleville in electing you to fill this high and important position.

The large vote polled at the last municipal election has shown that our citizens are taking a deeper interest in municipal affairs and as the polling booths in some of the wards have been found to be totally inadequate I would recommend that better accommodation be provided in the future.

An effort should be made by the City Council to arrive at a working agreement with the County Council, whereby indigent patients from the city can be cared for in the new House of Refuge the county has just built.

No doubt our citizens fondly hoped that the drill shed would have been under way before now, I trust that the members of the City Council will see to it that they cannot be blamed for any delay by reason of any lack of assiduity on their part in urging the Government to commence and complete this work.

I wish to direct your attention to the unsatisfactory service of the Ontario & Richelieu Navigation Co., occasioned by the inability of three boats a week to handle the business between Hamilton and Montreal, and would suggest that you endeavor to secure a daily service east and west.

As you are aware, there is a fair prospect of having the main lines of both the C.P.R. and the Canadian Northern Railroads, from Toronto to Montreal, run through Belleville. No stone should be left unturned to assist in accomplishing this result.

The Canadian Northern Railroad have given notice of an application to Parliament this session for a charter for a line from Pembroke to the lake front at or near Belleville. Every effort should be put forth to see that this line enters Belleville, as it will give us access to the trade of the whole north of the county, including the mining districts of Hastings.

One of the most important questions from an industrial standpoint is the power question and I would earnestly recommend you to give immediate consideration to it.

The services of an expert engineer should be engaged for the placing of a permanent pavement on Front street, and the installing of a proper sewerage system for the city, so that the advantages to be derived from these all important matters may be secured to our citizens as soon as possible.

That, as the Bell Telephone Company's franchise expires this year, one of your important duties will be to secure the best possible services and terms for our city and citizens.

The appointment of a small committee to co-operate with the Board of Health at once to see that the building of the Isolation hospital is entered upon as soon as possible.

The appointment of a small reception or entertainment committee for the year, and that an effort be made by the committee to have "something doing' in our city on every holiday this year, so that our people can have plenty of amusement at home and will not have to go outside to spend their money for entertainment, and that the Board of Trade be asked to appoint a small committee to act in conjunction with this committee of the Council.

The re-adjusting, consolidating and printing of our by-laws.

A re-adjustment of the tobacco license, charging a smaller license on cigars, plug and cut tobaccos and a very much higher license on cigarettes.

The passing of a new by-law regulating hawkers, pedlars and transient traders.

I would recommend that no goods be purchased for the city without an order from the chairman of the department requiring same, so that the chairman can see that all dealers are given a fair treatment in the expenditure of city money.

PUBLIC WORKS.

That the cement walk on the north side of Bridge street be continued to the end of the Legault block, thus completing this approach to the lower bridge.

That a cement sidewalk be built on McAnnany street, north side, from Front to Pinnacle street.

The painting of the bridges and the repairing and strengthening of the foot bridge.

The board walks and roads can be made to last much longer and be kept in a better condition by a more systematic plan of repairs, and I would recommend that you provide a repair wagon for the roads or some other plan by which this can be done, and

That a cement curb be placed on both sides of Bridge street from Church street to McDonald avenue.

GAS.

In this department I would recommend you to appoint an alderman of experience over this department as chairman, who will undertake the complete re-organization of this department and especially as recommended by the auditors' last year.

MARKET.

That the City hall, the offices in the city building and the Butter market be properly heated in accordance with the plans already prepared.

That the City hall building be properly painted and pointed up and placed in a first-class condition, to preserve this large and valuable property as well as for general appearances.

That an effort be made to have the balance of parties selling meats on the market to take stalls in the meat market.

WATER.

A re-adjustment of the rates with the liverymen and hotelmen.

I also think that arrangements should be made so as to allow the engineers at the pump-house to have Sunday as a day of rest.

FIRE.

During the past year the comforts of the firemen have been well looked after and I believe it is now very necessary to go thoroughly into the question of securing some improved fire-fighting appliances for the brigade.

LIGHT.

That a determined effort should be made to secure the better lighting of our streets.

PARKS.

The further beautifying of our parks with greater numbers of flower-beds and the purchasing of some up-to-date seats for the parks.

It is a good thing for our people to have an ideal before them and I would suggest the formation of a 20,000 club, in which all the citizens could join, having for its object the increase of our population to 20,000.

Let us seriously settle down to business and try and have the year 1907 unparalleled in the history of Belleville by the starting of new industries and the progress and success of those we already have and by the general improvement of our city. Let the sense of equity prevail and let us work from the higher standpoint of what we all can do for Belleville. We have a duty to perform and as long as we are true to each other and to ourselves we shall have the strength as well as the will to accomplish our duty by meeting all perplexing questions which may arise with patience, forbearance and good humor.

In conclusion I heartily appreciate the very kind attention you have shown and trust that the business of the Council will be conducted harmoniously during the year.

VOTE OF THANKS.

Ald. Marsh moved, seconded by Ald. Panter. That a hearty vote of thanks be tendered to His Worship for his able address, and that the same be laid on the table for consideration.—Carried.

THE NEW CHAIRMEN.

Executive—Ald. Marsh.

Public Works—Ald. Panter.

Fire—Ald. Starling was nominated by Ald Green.

Ald Panter nominated Ald. McCrodan.

Ald. Starling said there appeared to be enmity against him, as he could see by the slate made by Ald. Marsh. He thought that he had been elected in order to be chairman of Fire. He would not take the position of chairman of Light unless he was compelled to.

Ald. Marsh said there was no feeling as far as he was concerned against Ald. Starling. There was no slate as far as he was concerned.

Ald. Panter said that so far as he was concerned there had been no slate made. Ald. McCrodan he thought should have the chairmanship of Fire.

Upon a vote being taken Ald. McCrodan was elected, three voting for Ald. Starling, namely, Alderman Green, Thompson and Starling.

Light—Ald. Burrows.

Market and City Property. — Ald. Green was nominated by Ald. McCrodan, and Ald. Ackerman was nominated by Ald. Panter. Ald. Starling was nominated but declined, as did Ald. Green. Ald. Ackerman was elected.

Railways and Parks — Aldermen Thompson and Butler were nominated, but the former withdrew and Ald. Butler was selected.

Industries — Aldermen Thompson and Burrows were nominated, but both withdrew.

On motion the chairmanship of this committee was left in abeyance for the time being.

Water—Ald. Vermilyea and Thompson were nominated. The latter withdraw and Ald. Vermilyea was selected.

Gas — Ald. Green was unanimously elected.

Printing and Advertising — Ald. Thompson.

Industries — Ald. Marsh nominated Ald. Starling, but the latter respectfully declined. Ald. Thompson was nominated and elected.

Waterworks Committee —Aldermen Marsh, Butler, Thompson, Ackerman and the chairman were named by Ald. Vermilyea.

Ald. Starling suggested that he be placed on the Waterworks committee in the place of Ald. Thompson. This was agreeable and the name of Ald. Starling was substituted in the place of Ald. Thompson.

Ald. Panter thought that Ald. Ackerman should be placed on the Gas Committee, and he suggested that Ald. Burrows take the place of Ald. Ackerman on the Water Committee.

The suggestion was adopted and the committee will be composed of Aldermen Vermilyea, Marsh, Butler, Starling and Burrows.

Gas Committee — Ald. Ackerman, Thompson, Panter, McCrodan and the chairman.

The committee rose and reported. The report was received, and on motion that it be adopted Ald. Starling moved that it be not adopted, but referred back for the purpose of reconsidering the matter of Chairmanship of Fire. The motion was lost and the yeas and nays were called for, resulting as follows:

Nays—Ald. Marsh, Vermilyea, McCrodan, Ackerman, Burrows, Panter. —6.

Yeas—Green, Starling, Thompson and Butler.—4.

The report was then adopted.

COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

On motion the Council went into committee of the whole on communications and accounts, Ald. Panter in the chair.

Two lengthy reports from the Street Surveyor and Manager of the Waterworks were on motion referred to their respective committees.

A communication from the Police Magistrate in reference to vagrants was referred to the Executive Committee, without being read.

The Mayor said he had received a communication from Col. Stewart, asking the use of the City Hall for the holding of a military school of instruction.

Granted.

A communication was read from Mr. Jas. McCurdy, engineer of the Fire Department, tendering his resignation as such and asking to be relieved as soon as possible. This was owing to ill-health.

ENQUIRIES.

Ald. Starling asked what was the matter with the water pressure at the Hotel Quinte fire.

Mr. Hulme said the pressure was very good. It fell 8 lbs. when direct pressure was used.

INTRODUCTION OF BY-LAWS.

Ald. Marsh introduced a number of by-laws, and the Council went into committee of the whole on by-laws, Ald. Vermilyea in the chair.

The by-laws were then passed through their various stages and numbered respectively 1300, 1301, 1302, 1303, 1304, 1305 and 1306.

The Surveyor was heard in reference to the Council procuring more hard heads. He was in favor of the city procuring more than was at present on hand.

MOTIONS.

Ald. Panter moved, seconded by Ald. Starling, that 200 cords of hard heads be purchased at $2.50 per cord, delivered at the quarry.—Carried.

Council adjourned for two weeks.

PENGWERN GOES DOWN

British Ship Wrecked Off German Coast—24 Lives Lost.

Tug Vulkan Went to the Assistance of the Stranded Vessel, But Crew Disregarded Appeals to Jump Into Water, So That They Might Be Rescued—Finally In a Heavy Sea the Pengwern Disappeared.

Cuxhaven, Germany, Jan. 14.—The British ship Pengwern, Captain Williams, from Talkal, Chile, Oct. 6, for Falmouth, with a cargo of saltpetre, grounded off Scharhorn, about 100 miles northwest of Cuxhaven, yesterday. Her crew of 24 men were drowned and her cargo is a total loss.

The tug Vulkan went to the assistance of the stranded vessel and, passing closely to her, the crew of the Pengwern threw a live dog and a bundle of clothes aboard the tug, but disregarded the appeals to jump into the water, so that they might be rescued.

The Vulkan made repeated attempts to reach the Pengwern, but a heavy sea broke over her and she disappeared from view.

Another schooner, the Romeo, of Burgeo, Nfld., with a load of herring, was also wrecked Saturday at Grand River. The crew escaped, but the schooner is lost.

TRAGEDY ON THE G. T. R.

Body of An Unknown Man Found Scattered On the Track.

Toronto, Jan. 14.—The terribly mutilated body of an unknown man was found on the Grand Trunk tracks, 75 yards east of the Don bridge at 3.20 yesterday morning. The body was cut completely in two and the right arm was severed from the trunk and was found several yards away.

The engineer of an eastbound freight train saw an object on the tracks and shut off his engine and brought it to a stop. He notified the nearest switchman, who telephoned police headquarters of the engineer's discovery.

A gold watch was found in his waistcoat pocket. In another of the pockets was found a slip of paper, reading as follows: "Received from John MacLean the sum of $1. George McDonald." A charm bearing the initials in gold, J. McL., was found attached to the watchchain.

The police have not discovered where the man lives. His home is evidently in the city or district, as all his clothes were purchased in Toronto, according to the markings.

Coroner Johnson was notified, and after investigating the case decided to withhold plans for an inquest until Tuesday, by which time the body may be identified.

McINTOSH BROS.

A JOINT CONGO APPEAL

Mission Boards of Canada and the United States Unite.

Petition to His Majesty King Edward and to President Roosevelt For Interference and Reform Is Founded Upon Regard For the Provincial Rights of Man, International Justice and Humanity.

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 14.—At a meeting of the conference of the foreign missions boards of the United States and Canada held in this city on Saturday it was unanimously agreed to forward to President Roosevelt, the United States Senate and King Edward, an appeal on behalf of the stricken people of the Congo State. The appeal to the President and Senate of the United States and to His Majesty, King Edward the Seventh, makes the issue clear-cut in the concluding paragraphs, as follows:

Issue to Be Clear Cut.

"We would earnestly urge that no device of the ruler of the Congo State, King Leopold of Belgium, whether wholesome aspersion of motive or evasion of accountability through promotion or transfer of territory to a Government of which he is himself head, shall be allowed to cloud the issue of international responsibility for immediate ascertainment of conditions and correcton of wrongs. If the convening of an international conference was important in the opening of the Congo territory, it would seem that a conference for review of the issue in all its phases is indispensable for wise and just dealing now.

"In the name of humanity, international justice, of regard for the primal rights of man, we would ask that you will use the full power reposed in Governments by the Supreme Ruler, in the interest of an immediate discharge by the nations of their responsibility of guardianship over the remnant of a humble people, who a generation ago, without choice of their own, were brought out of their isolation into relations with the world of men and states."

St. Petersburg, Jan. 14.—Desperate fighting between police and workmen occurred in the Okhta quarter of this city Friday night during a domiciliary search.

Three workmen, who were in the building, extinguished all the lights and opened fire on the police. The latter responded and the fusilade was continued for some time in total darkness.

The workmen finally retreated, after killing two district inspectors and two policemen and wounding three policemen.

Another Chief Assassinated.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 14.—Information was received here Saturday night that the chief of police at Daghestan, on the Caspian Sea, was murdered Saturday. The assassin escaped.

ENGLAND'S TRADE.

Total For 1906 Passes Five Billion Mark for First Time.

London, Jan. 14.—The total value of the import and export trade of Great Britain last year exceeded for the first time $5,000,000,000, easily beating all previous trade records in the history of the United Kingdom.

This fact is brought out in the trade and navigation returns o fthe United Kingdom for 1906, just issued. Owing to the recovery from the effects of the South African war, the great boom in the cotton trade and other minor causes, the trade of the country during the last few years has been progressing by leaps and bounds.

U. S. Secretary Root to Visit Ottawa Saturday and Sunday Next.

Washington, Jan. 14.—Secretary of State Root announced Saturday that he will leave on Jan. 17 for Ottawa, Canada, where he will be the guest of Earl Grey, Governor-General of Canada. Mr. Root will be accompanied by Mrs. Root and will arrive in Ottawa on Saturday, Jan. 19, and remain over Sunday.

Secretary Root said that his visit is purely social and has nothing whatever to do with the international treaty now pending between Great Britain and the United States.

A Note of Discord.

London, Jan. 14.—(C. A. P.)—The Globe, referring to the coming visit of Secretary Root to Earl Grey, says if Earl Grey can convince Mr. Root that the time has come when the British Government will not bow in graceful assent to every American demand as a token of brotherly love, things are likely to get settled with more regard for justice and with fewer falsetto congratulations than before.

Pleases Britain.

The news that Secretary Root is about to visit the Governor-General of Canada, Earl Grey, at Ottawa, has elicited the most favorable comment from officials and the British press.

The opinion expressed is that the visit foreshadows better relations between the United States and Canada, which were considerably improved as the result of the Governor-General's tour of the United States last year.

Doctors Admit

That They Can Do Nothing More for Your Stomach Than Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are Doing Every Day.

COSTS NOTHING TO TRY.

According to the expert analysis of government authorities in the United States and Great Britain, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets contain the exact elements provided by nature for digesting food in the healthy stomach.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have saved sufferers from stomach disorders millions of dollars by giving them, in one small 50-cent package, more relief than countless treatments by physicians would bring about at $3.00 per visit.

Perhaps you are afflicted with dyspepsia — or some kindred disease arising from a disordered digestion. It may be headaches, heartburn, palpitation, liver trouble, insomnia, nervous debility. They all have their beginning in a stomach which does not secrete the juices or grind the food which is taken into it.

If so, we urge you to send for a free trial package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. It will cost you nothing and surely will bring us no gain unless you find, after using it, that you need a full-sized package.

There is absolutely no danger in using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. Nothing is contained in them that has not been subjected to the closest scrutiny by the government officials.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest your food without demanding a careful diet. One grain of these Tablets has power to digest 3,000 grains or ordinary food. You can be sure therefore that no matter what your condition, these little tablets taken after each meal will shortly restore your stomach to its normal condition and render it capable of doing its work unassisted.

We withhold the names of hundreds who have written us voluntarily expressing their gratitude to this simple substitute for nature.

Send for trial package to-day. F. A. Stuart Co., 70 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

THE CHANNEL TUNNEL.

Imperial Defence Committee Has Decided That Project Would Be Prejudicial to British Security.

London, Jan. 14.—The extensive project for tunneling the English Channel, which is now awaiting Parliamentary approval, would appear to have received a serious set-back in a report that the Imperial Defence Committee has decided such a tunnel would be prejudicial to the national security.

Enquiries made at the headquarters of the committee, however, failed of confirmation of this announcement. Nevertheless, there is a strong drift of sentiment among the most eminent British military and naval experts, headed by Field Marshal Lord Wolseley, which condemns this project as opening the possibility of continental invasion.

On the other hand the Rothschilds and the great railroads of England and France are prepared to make enormous investment of capital for the carrying out of this project. This makes trouble between strategists and capitalists and the indications are that the former will create sufficient public apprehension to endanger Parliamentary approval of the scheme.

PILGRIMAGE OF PEACE.

W. T. Stead Proposes An International Procession to The Hague.

Rome, Jan. 14.—William T. Stead, in his international peace propaganda, proposes an international pilgrimage of peace, in which notabilities from all over the world would take part, to start from the United States for The Hague, by way of London, Paris and Rome, and to arrive at the Netherlands capital at the time the second peace conference assembles there.

Mr. Stead says he believes that such a pilgrimage would exercise the greatest moral influence ever known.

W. T. Stead had a conference Saturday with Foreign Minister Tittoni, who declared himself in favor of the English editor's peace propaganda, and said that if Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the British Premier, went to The Hague, he probably also would go.

BAD BLAZE AT ST. KITTS.

Wilson's Planing Mill Destroyed At a Loss of $20,000—Not Insured.

St. Catharines, Jan. 14.—The George Wilson Building and Contracting Co., who seem to be peculiarly unfortunate as to fires, having been twice burned out within a few years, were again visited by fire at 3.30 Saturday morning, when the large planing mills, situated on Niagara street, together with a quantity of lumber, were consumed. The loss on this occasion will be about $20,000, with no insurance whatever. The boilerhouse was saved. Mr. Wilson hopes to rebuild soon.

A FARMER'S CRIME.

Ottawa, Jan. 14.—James Kelly, the farmer from near Masson, Quebec, charged with causing the death of Arnold Walsh, a ward of the Catholic Immigration Society, was found guilty at the Hull assizes of manslaughter.

Slavery Is Rampant.

Constantinople, Jan. 14.—Advices from Tripoli depict the horrors of the slave trade between Turkey and Tripoli in the darkest colors.
